BELFAST PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY,
October 14, 1902.

FIRST SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

Extract from The Irish News and Belfast Morning News,
October 15, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters sang 'Walther's Preislied' from Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger' with orchestral accompaniment, and his rendering of the song was in every respect worthy of his reputation. Possessed of a remarkably clear tenor voice, which reveals in every note long and careful training on the part of its fortunate possessor, he could not have failed to evoke the enthusiasm of an audience, no matter how critical it might be. . . . The second part of the concert was brought to a close by the Recit. and Air 'Lend me your aid' (Gounod), in which Mr. Samuel Masters repeated his initial triumph of the evening. . . . In a selection from Longfellow's 'Hiawatha,' 'Onaway, awake, beloved' (Coleridge-Taylor), which followed, Mr. Masters was heard to even better advantage than in either of his previous songs."

Extract from The Northern Whig, October 15, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters won favour at once with his fine, pure, bright tone, his declamatory powers and vigorous style. He gave first 'Preislied,' from 'Die Meistersinger,' and showed a mastery and power over Wagner's trying vocal music that was admirable. . . . 'Lend me your aid' suited the artist's voice and style to perfection, and he gave a capital rendering of it. . . . At the close of the second part Mr. Masters sang 'Onaway, awake, beloved,' with great expression."

Extract from The News Letter, October 15, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters, a tenor with fine conception of composition and excellent range, made his first appearance before a Belfast audience in Wagner's 'Preislied,' from 'Die Meistersinger,' and there could be no manner of doubt as to his ability. The clear, bell-like tone was well brought out, and although he made a much better impression in 'Lend me your aid,' which was sung in excellent style, he did himself full justice in the song 'Onaway, awake, beloved' from Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.'"

Terms and Vacant dates apply:—

SAMUEL MASTERS,

MR. JOS. REED

(PRINCIPAL TENOR),

Trinity College, Cambridge.

Tenor, Madame Clara Butt's Tours, October, 1900; Spring, 1902.
Vacant dates. 55, Chesterton Road, Cambridge.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE).

(Assistant Lay Clerk, Westminster Abbey)

Mr. HENRY J. WOOD (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—
"I, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.

"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.
"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public."

"HENRY J. WOOD."

"ELIJAH."—BROMLEY.—"The title-part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was mainly devotionism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

"Mr. Montague Borwell was a perfect exponent of the fiery Prophet. He is the nearest approach to Santley I have heard for a long time. The dramatic instinct, the necessary sarcasm, and the devotional spirit of the Prophet were all there. The great air, 'Is not His Word,' being sung with much spirit, the top F rang as resonantly as a bell. The beautiful air, 'It is enough,' was splendidly sung, and Mr. Borwell had to repeatedly bow his acknowledgments."—Tonbridge Free Press.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).

"ELIJAH."—"Miss Winifred Marwood made a great impression by her rendering of 'Hear ye, Israel.' It was sung as it should be—prayerfully, and not shouted to the people."—Tonbridge Free Press.

"HIAWATHA."—"Miss Winifred Marwood, a soprano of wide range and pleasing method, and Mr. Montague Borwell, a resonant baritone, took the solos in the second scene, and their treatment of the deeply pathetic picture left little to be desired."—Surrey Advertiser.
Address, 56, Forburg Road, Stoke Newington, N.

MR. JOHN BROWNING

(BARITONE),

Soloist, Leeds Musical Festivals and of the leading English, Scotch, and Irish Concerts. Extensive repertoire of over 100 works.

"Was in fine form. . . sang superbly. . . His singing throughout was so magnificent that it should be laid to heart by those Douglas vocalists who were fortunate enough to hear Mr. Browning sing."—Isle of Man Examiner, Nov. 8, 1902."His voice is of magnificent range and compass, amenable to expression, and kept well in control. His solos gave the keenest delight."—Dumfriess Standard, Nov. 15, 1902.OLDHAM MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"THE SEASONS," Part I.—"Made a special feature of the air 'With joy th' impatient husbandman,' in which he showed to great advantage."—Echo, Nov. 20, 1902.HUDDERSFIELD PERMANENT ORCHESTRA.—"Was highly successful. He was in capital form, exerting his remarkable powers to the utmost, and using his powerful and resonant bass voice to grand effect."—Chronicle, Dec. 1, 1902."After his displays on Monday evening, it is easy to understand why he is such a favourite wherever he goes."—Wakefield Express, Dec. 6, 1902."An exceedingly fine baritone. . . Clearness of utterance, rich vocal harmony and strength were noticeable features of his vocalism. . . The audience seemed completely swayed by Mr. Browning."—Wakefield Echo, Dec. 6, 1902.

Address, Marlboro' Grove, Leeds.

MR. CHARLES TREE."ELIJAH."—ABERDEEN, Dec. 10, 1902.—"A voice of fine quality, clear articulation, and a declamatory power and grace that enable him to throw life and colour into the part. Magnificent declamation."—Free Press."Singing with rich, sonorous voice, he displayed admirable dramatic power."—Journal."GOLDEN LEGEND."—SUNDERLAND, Dec. 11, 1902.—"Great vocal powers. Eminently suited for the part. His cultured singing was the most striking feature of the performance."—Chronicle."Undoubtedly the greatest hit of the evening was made by Mr. Tree, his interpretation of Lucifer being in every respect superb."—Journal."GOLDEN LEGEND."—CHICHESTER, Dec. 8, 1902.—"The difficult Lucifer music was mere child's play to Mr. Tree, who made the utmost effect."—Recorder.

NOVELLO'S CLASSIFIED CATALOGUE

OF MUSIC FOR

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE.

PREFACE.

The Violin music in this Catalogue has been divided into Four Grades, as follows:—

GRADE I.

Pieces within the compass of the First Position.

GRADE II.

Pieces beyond the First, but within the compass of the Third Position.

GRADE III.

Pieces beyond the Third, but within the compass of the Fifth Position.

GRADE IV.

Pieces beyond the Fifth Position, and very advanced.

Each piece has, further, a classifying letter attached to it, indicating a relative difficulty to the particular grade in which it is placed. Pieces which, according to the fingering used, are suitable for two different grades have been included in both, but with a different classifying letter, a lower, or simpler letter being used in the second grade than that given in the first—e.g., pieces marked C (moderately easy) in Grade I. are marked B (easy) if included in Grade II.; pieces marked E (difficult) in Grade II. are marked D (moderately difficult) if included in Grade III., and so forth.

When, in an album of pieces of various degrees of difficulty, a Roman figure is used before the letter denoting the degree of difficulty, it signifies that the piece is more suitable for the Grade indicated by the figure.

EXPLANATION OF LETTERS.

A = very simple.	D = moderately difficult.
B = easy.	E = difficult.
C = moderately easy.	F = very difficult.
G = very advanced.

Copies of the above Catalogue sent Post-free on application.

THE MUSIC STUDENT'S MANUSCRIPT NOTE BOOK AND PRACTICE REGISTER

ARRANGED BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

PREFACE.

This book is intended to meet the convenience of Teachers who wish to record clearly for a pupil's guidance the work to be prepared for each lesson or a series. The column headed "Time" is added for the purpose of indicating the number of minutes to be given to the daily practice of each separate subject. (This column is for the Teacher to fill up.)

A few pages of music paper have been inserted for the purpose of writing out turns, trills, &c., and blank pages have been left at the end on which it is suggested that a list of pieces studied should be kept or other memoranda made. The book will be found suitable for students of any instrument.

Price Sixpence.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

JANUARY 1, 1903.

RICHARD STRAUSS.

The Man of the Hour and New Year's Day synchronise with a certain appropriateness. Every new year brings with it new men and new methods. How was it a hundred years ago? In the year 1803 a young man started on 'a new road,' to use his own words, in the writing of his 'Heldenleben,' a masterpiece which we all know and love as the 'Eroica' Symphony. What happened at the first rehearsal of that epoch-making work? When Ferdinand Ries, standing by his master the composer at the conductor's desk, suggested that the horn-player had 'come in wrong,'—everyone knows the place—the young gentleman narrowly escaped a box on the ear from Beethoven! 'Harmony wrong; tonic and dominant seventh chords sounding together,' cried the shocked theorists then and long afterwards. And did not London critics of olden time sneer at the length of the 'Eroica,' and regard the 'Minuet' as 'ill-suited?' But we now listen to it without wishing to lose a single note, and as for that 'false' entry of the horn, do we not look forward with real delight to its freakish interpose?

These thoughts and questionings may serve as a preamble to a biographical sketch of the foremost musician in Germany, Herr Richard Strauss, who, during his recent brief and hurried visit to London, most kindly spared an hour of his precious time in order to relate some particulars of his career specially for THE MUSICAL TIMES. 'I have never before done such a thing,' laughingly remarks the distinguished composer as he throws himself into an arm-chair in a house only a stone's throw from where Handel lived, and worked and died.

Richard Georg Strauss was born at Munich, June 11, 1864. His father, Herr Franz Strauss (born February 26, 1822) was a member of the Court orchestra at Munich, and one of the finest horn players in Europe. He has written a number of studies and other compositions for his instrument, 'but,' adds his son, 'he could play most of the instruments in the orchestra.' Although Herr Strauss, senior, came under the influence of the Wagner furore, he stoutly refused to become a Wagnerian. On one occasion after he had most exquisitely performed the first horn part in one of Wagner's works, the composer facetiously remarked: 'I fancy after all, Strauss, you cannot be such an anti-Wagnerian as they make out, seeing that you play my music so beautifully.' 'What has that got to do with it?' replied the unrelenting horn player. Master Richard received his first lessons at the age of four and a-half from his mother—née Pschorr, a daughter of the great brewer of that name. At a later period he took further pianoforte lessons of Herr August Tombo, a harpist, and received instruction in violin playing from Herr Benno Walter.

EARLIEST COMPOSITIONS.

At the age of six he composed a polka ('Schneiderpolka'). This was followed by a Christmas song, of which he wrote down only the notes; the words had to be written in by his mother, as the boy's pothooks were too large to be placed under the notes. A goodly array of songs, pianoforte pieces, sonatas, and even of overtures for orchestra rapidly followed. The precociousness of the boy-composer is amusingly shown in a reminiscence of his father, which Herr Strauss senior has kindly contributed specially for this article. He writes: 'I well remember that Richard's mother used to cover his school books with blank music-paper, and that the boy would use the coverings for scribbling his musical ideas during the progress of a French lesson.'

RICHARD STRAUSS AND HIS FATHER.

His first professional music teacher was Hofkapellmeister Fr. W. Meyer, of Munich, who took his young pupil through a course of strict counterpoint. The boy composed music to a chorus in the 'Electra' of Sophocles, for men's voices and small orchestra, and it was performed at a school function. The year 1880, when the youthful composer was sixteen, witnessed the first public performance of any of his compositions—three songs, interpreted by the opera singer Frl. Meysenheim. In the following year—March 16, 1881—the string quartet in A was performed by Benno Walter's Quartet, to whom the work is dedicated. A few days later—March 30, 1881—a symphony in D minor, in four movements (still in MS.) was produced by Hermann Levi, an event which drew much attention to the sixteen-year-old composer, and the possibilities of his future creative career. During the years 1882 and 1883 Richard Strauss studied at the University of Munich.

GROUNDING IN THE OLD MASTERS.

In regard to the formative period of his life Herr Strauss gives us some interesting information. 'My father,' he says, 'kept me very strictly to the old masters, in whose compositions I had youngsters cannot appreciate at their proper worth either the music of Wagner or of his predecessors. "What an extraordinary thing for Richard Strauss to say," these young men remark, but I only give them the advice gained by my own experience.' And not to composers only does Herr Strauss offer this wholesome advice, but to all students of music. Such an emphatic deliverance from so 'advanced' a composer is of the utmost importance; it is greatly needed in these days when youths in their teens affect an ultra-modern cult and sniff at the old masters. A Mozart sonata is far too small for them, and yet that master of melody has no more enthusiastic champion than Richard Strauss. 'I have just come from playing, with my hostess, a sonata of Mozart's for pianoforte and violin,' were the words with which he greeted us on visiting him the other day.

A PROTÉGÉ OF HANS VON BÜLOW.

To return to matters biographical. The winter of 1883-4 was passed in Berlin, where Radecke produced an Overture in C minor (MS.) by Strauss, performed by the Royal orchestra. The great event in his life, however, shaped itself through his Serenade in E flat (Op. 7) for wind instruments—2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 4 horns, 2 bassoons, and contra bassoon (or bass tuba)—dedicated to his teacher, Fr. W. Meyer. (This work, by-the-way, had been preceded by five pieces for the pianoforte, a pianoforte sonata, and a sonata for pianoforte and violoncello.) Hans von Bülow took a great fancy to this Serenade, and showed his practical interest in the young man by performing it at many concerts during the journeyings-off of the famous Meiningen Orchestra, then under the conductorship of the redoubtable Hans. The influence of Bülow proved to be of the greatest importance to the young musician. He rapidly developed under what may be termed the guardianship of that very extraordinary man of remarkable personality. Bülow led him to the shrine of Brahms—witness the F minor symphony of Strauss (first performed at New York, under Theodore Thomas, December 13, 1884), the pianoforte quartet which gained the prize offered by the Berlin Society of Tonkünstler, and especially the 'Wanderer's storm-song,' performed at the Sheffield Musical Festival of last October.

FIRST CONDUCTING EXPERIENCES.

'Bülow, who was very fond of my father,' says Herr Strauss, 'interested himself in me, and I have much to thank him for. He started me on my conducting career. My first experience of standing before an orchestra was in connection with the performance of a suite, in four movements, for wind-instruments I had composed at his request, and which is still in manuscript. Bülow made me conduct it without any rehearsal!' This was at Munich. After this début Bülow engaged him as assistant conductor a thorough grounding. You cannot appreciate Wagner and the moderns unless you pass through this grounding in the classics.' On this point the composer of 'Ein Heldenleben' speaks with unmistakable emphasis. 'Young composers,' he adds, 'bring me voluminous manuscripts for my opinion on their productions. In looking at them I find that they generally want to begin where Wagner left off. I say to all such: "My good young man, go home and study the works of Bach, the symphonies of Haydn, of Mozart, of Beethoven, and when you have mastered these art-works come to me again." Without thoroughly understanding the significance of the development from Haydn, via Mozart and Beethoven, to Wagner, these at Meiningen. Such an important field of labour proved to be invaluable to this enthusiastic young fellow of twenty-one. He had fine scope for the development of his conducting, into which he threw himself heart and soul. About this time he made his only public appearance as a pianist, when he played (under Bülow) the C minor concerto of his beloved Mozart. In November, 1885, Bülow resigned his Meiningen conductorship, and Strauss succeeded him in that important post.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS.

Strauss had already come under the influence of Alexander Ritter (1833-1896), a violinist in the Munich Orchestra who had married a niece of Wagner's. Ritter, like Bülow, was a man of strong magnetic personality, and both were warm-blooded Wagnerians and Lisztians. As boys they listened to that wonderful performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony given by Wagner at Dresden in 1849, and the two young gentlemen schoolfellows used to doff their caps every time they passed the master's windows in the Ostra-Allee. 'Ritter was exceptionally well read in all the philosophers ancient and modern, and a man of the highest culture. His influence,' says Herr Strauss, 'was in the nature of a storm-wind. He urged me on to the development of the poetic, the expressive in music, as exemplified in the works of Liszt, Wagner, and Berlioz. My symphonic fantasia "Aus Italien" is the connecting link with the old and the new methods.' This outcome of the parting of the ways originated in a journey to Rome and Naples in the spring of 1886. In connection with this work—which represents a conflict between the old and the new creativeness of its composer—Herr Strauss relates an amusing incident. 'A few days ago,' he says, 'I was conducting this symphony at Brunswick, when a policeman appeared on the scene and stopped the performance because, as he said, some condition had not been complied with. Soon after, however, another policeman came and said the concert might proceed. This unwarrantable interruption caused great uproar and the audience shouted anathemas against the police. At the close of the symphony I turned to the audience and said: "You see, ladies and gentlemen, in this Italy there are no anarchists!"'

CONDUCTING DEVELOPMENTS.

In the autumn of 1886 Strauss was appointed third Kapellmeister at Munich, under Levi and Fischer. Although he only conducted small operas, yet he learned his business thoroughly, and his three years' experience enabled him to ripen into an operatic conductor of high attainment. Moreover in his compositions he began that remarkable series of tone-poems which have made him famous as a creative genius. 'Macbeth' was the first, although it bears a higher opus number than 'Don Juan'; but he partly re-wrote the former work before incurring the responsibility of print. 'Macbeth,' appropriately dedicated to Alexander Ritter, was first performed under Bülow in Berlin.

In the year 1889 Strauss accepted the post of Court Kapellmeister at Weimar. There he worked very happily amidst more congenial surroundings from October 1, 1889, to June, 1894, producing not only 'Lohengrin,' 'Tristan,' and the 'Meistersinger,' but many works of the younger German school—Hans Sommer, Felix Mottl, and his friend Alexander Ritter. But not the theatre only was influenced by the strength and independence of the rapidly rising musician. The programmes and performances of the Hofkapelle concerts were raised to a high standard through his energetic directorship. At Leipzig, too, his influence as a concert-conductor was felt at the Liszt Society, and he did much to popularise the works of Berlioz and Liszt. To the Weimar period belong the 'Don Juan' and 'Tod und Verklärung' tone-poems.

'GUNTAM' AND MARRIAGE.

The overwork consequent upon all these activities resulted in an illness which nearly terminated his career. In the spring of 1892 he had a severe attack of inflammation of the lungs, and for a week he hovered between life and death. Upon his recovery he took a year's tour through Greece, Egypt and Sicily. This recuperative journey resulted in the composition of the three-act opera 'Guntram,' up to that time his most important work, the libretto by himself. The first act was written in Upper Egypt, the second in Sicily, and the third at Marquartstein, in Upper Bavaria, the entire opera being completed in nine months, an instance of his creative facility and untiring industry. 'Guntram,' dedicated to his parents, received its first performance at Weimar on May 12, 1894. Herr H. Zeller took the title-rôle, and the part of the heroine Freihild was interpreted by Fräulein Pauline de Ahna, the daughter of a Bavarian General. After the first performance of 'Guntram' Herr Strauss became engaged to Fräulein de Ahna, and the marriage took place in 1894. Frau Richard Strauss, it should be added, is a fine dramatic singer, and she took the part of Elizabeth in the first performance of 'Tannhäuser' given at Bayreuth, conducted by her husband in the summer of 1894.

In the year of his marriage he was appointed Kapellmeister of the Court Opera at Munich and, in succession to Bülow, to the conductorship of the Berlin Philharmonic Society. At Munich he conducted a series of model performances of Mozart's operas. The score of the 'Till Eulenspiegel' tone-poem, dedicated to Arthur Seidl, is dated 'Munich, 6 May, 1895.' This work soon made the round of the concert-halls not only in Germany, but in England, its first performance here having been at the Crystal Palace, under Mr. Manns, March 21, 1896. At the close of the performance Mr. Manns, in the course of a little speech to the audience, declared that 'Till Eulenspiegel' was the most difficult work he had ever undertaken to produce.

The next year was devoted to the composition of 'Also sprach Zarathustra,' the score of which is dated 'Begun Feb. 4; finished Aug. 24, 1896. Munich.' So much has been said in regard to the strictly musical interpretation by Strauss of Nietzsche's great work, that the composer's own words in this connection may be quoted. Writing in 1896, he said:—

'I did not intend to write philosophical music or portray Nietzsche's great work musically. I meant to convey musically an idea of the development of the human race from its origin, through the various phases of development, religious as well as scientific, up to Nietzsche's idea of the Uebermensch.'

It may be stated here that Herr Strauss considers 'Also sprach Zarathustra' to be his most difficult work.

FIRST VISIT TO ENGLAND.

The fame of our composer rapidly spread beyond his own country. In 1896 he conducted concerts, mostly of his own works, at Brussels, Liège and Moscow, and the following year he paid similar visits to Amsterdam, Barcelona, Brussels, London and Paris. His first appearance in England took place at Queen's Hall, December 7, 1897, when he conducted one of the Wagner Concerts organised by Mr. Schulz-Curtius. On that occasion the programme consisted of the following works:—

PART I.

Serenade (Eine Kleine Nachtmusik)	Mozart.
For Strings only
Symphonic Poem, 'Tod und Ver-	Richard Strauss. klärung'
(First time in England.)
Symphonic Poem, 'Till Eulenspiegel's	Richard Strauss. lustige Streiche'

PART II.

Prelude to 'Tristan und Isolde'	Wagner.
Prelude to 'Die Meistersinger'	Wagner.
Charfreitagszauber from 'Parsifal'	Wagner.
Overture to 'Tannhäuser'	Wagner.

Zurich and Madrid were visited in 1898, the year in which, at the early age of thirty-four, he was appointed to the important office of Kapellmeister of the Royal Opera, Berlin, the blue ribbon of musical appointments in Germany; this post he still worthily holds.

The chief published productions of Herr Strauss during the last four years have been the music accompanying the recitation of Tennyson's 'Enoch Arden,' the much discussed 'Ein Heldenleben,'—produced at Frankfort-on-Main, March, 1899, and performed under the composer's direction for the first time in England at Queen's Hall on the 6th ult.—and the one-act opera 'Feuersnot,' produced at the Royal Theatre, Dresden, November 21, 1901.

AN ENGLISH APPRECIATION.

Before referring to the personality of the subject of this sketch, we may mention the fact that one of the earliest appreciations—if not, indeed, the first—of him in an English journal appeared in the columns of THE MUSICAL TIMES. Two extracts from the report of the Lower Rhenish Musical Festival of 1896, held at Düsseldorf, may be quoted from our issue of July, 1896:—

The second day's programme opened with Richard Strauss's symphonic poem 'Don Juan.' Here we had a work which was calculated to set the enemies of musical progress by the ears! To begin with, they might have disliked the subject. A few lines from Lenau's poem, put into the mouth of his delectable 'hero,' will indicate its main idea:—

Den Zauberkreis, den unermesslich weiten,
Von vielfach reizend schönen Weiblichkeiten
Möcht ich durchzieh'n im Sturme des Genusses, Am Mund der Letzten sterben eines Kusses.

Strauss handles such a subject in no half-hearted manner. His music simply glows with unfettered passion and tremendous, restless energy; his orchestration is unprecedented for richness, variety, and novel effects; and conception and execution alike are daring, strong, and masterly.

It was, however, after the performance of 'Till Eulenspiegel,' which, like 'Don Juan,' was played under the inspiring direction of the composer in the most perfect manner imaginable, that the enthusiasm of the packed audience broke forth like a veritable torrent. The applause was deafening; the orchestra indulged in the strange but exhilarating cacophony called a 'Tusch'; the ladies of the choir, to whom the young master, with the slight figure, the pale, sensitive face and soulful eyes, was, no doubt, an exceptionally interesting object of admiration, threw their bouquets and nosegays at him, and an extraordinary scene continued till the blushing and bewildered hero of the ovation by signs conveyed his intention of making a speech. He forthwith expressed, in a few well-chosen, unaffected words, how great an honour it had been for him to be permitted to present his 'modest' art to so kind and friendly an audience, that he thanked them from the bottom of his heart, &c. Whereupon he stepped off the conductor's platform and embraced and kissed his colleague, Herr Buths, coram publico, amid great laughter and another outburst of cheering on the part of the audience.

'EIN HELDENLEBEN.'

Herr Richard Strauss gives one the impression of a man of might and yet extremely modest. He refrains from speaking of himself or his doings, unless induced to do so, but goes about his work with an alertness and an earnestness that is eminently characteristic of strength of purpose. He is in the prime of life, and the amount of work he gets through would cause a less wiry man to collapse. He recently conducted fourteen different concerts in the same number of towns on consecutive days. At the rehearsal of his 'Heldenleben' he told an English friend that the composition of this his last great tone-poem occupied him a year and-a-half from start to finish, and that the violin solo in it is a portrait of Frau Strauss, his wife! 'You have never met the lady,' he said, 'but now you know her quite well after having heard the work, and when you come to Berlin you will be able to verify this!' After the Queen's Hall orchestra had played through 'Heldenleben' he said he was 'more than satisfied with the magnificent rendering of the music,' and that he would be content to let it rest until the concert; but 'as they were only holding a rehearsal, he felt obliged to repeat a few passages,' at which the members of the orchestra laughed. And here, in justice to Mr. Henry J. Wood and his excellent players, we may record the remarks made by the composer in the course of conversation. In terms of highest appreciation, uttered in no uncertain tones, Herr Strauss testified to the excellent manner in which the eminent Queen's Hall conductor and his orchestra had prepared 'Heldenleben' for performance. 'Splendidly done,' he says.

ARTISTIC ASPIRATIONS.

It is beyond the scope of an article that aims at being strictly biographical to attempt a critical estimate of Herr Strauss as a composer. And are we not too near him to dogmatise on the wisdom or folly of his methods? One thing however may be said, he is thoroughly in earnest. No composer could be less of the make-believe species than Richard Strauss. 'What I have written, I have written,' he can say with all the strength and seriousness of deep-rooted conviction. Not a note is set down without careful thought and premeditated design. To bring against him a charge of formlessness is a false accusation. 'I have always "form" before me when composing, as a matter of course,' he says; but the form is always subservient, though not antagonistic to the strong poetic basis which underlies his remarkable creations. He is before everything a poet, and his tone-poems—whether they be liked or disliked—are the natural outcome of the artistic truth that is in him. It must not be supposed that a full orchestra is necessary to the interpretation of all the music composed by our recent distinguished visitor. Has he not written nearly one hundred songs? And do they not range from strains quite simple to settings which make large demands upon the singer? His fine lyrical temperament unmistakably shows itself in these masterly productions. His modernity is amusingly exemplified in a foot-note appended to the song 'Wenn' (Op. 31, No. 2) which reads thus:—

FRAU RICHARD STRAUSS
(née PAULINE DE AHNA.)
(Photograph by Gebr. Lützel, Munich.)

Should any singers think of singing this song, while the nineteenth century is still in existence, the composer would advise them to transpose it from this point, a half-tone lower (i.e. into E flat), so that the composition may thus end in the key in which it began!!!

Considering that Herr Strauss is still under forty, his career has been quite remarkable, even judged from the practical side of the art. Such important and coveted official posts as Kapellmeister at Meiningen, Weimar, Munich and Berlin—the chief positions in Germany—have come to him quite naturally and unsought for. He will soon have as much written about him as Wagner, in fact, there is already in existence a complete bibliography of Straussiana! No composer has been more eulogised, or more condemned.

Before taking leave of Herr Strauss we ask him to furnish information in regard to any works he has 'on the stocks.' To this request he willingly responds: 'I am writing a song for a deep bass voice, with orchestral accompaniment—a setting of Uhland's poem "Das Thal" which may suit singers of the Qui sdegno order. Then you may mention a setting of Uhland's "Taillefer" for three soloists, chorus and orchestra, to be performed at a Festival to be held at Duisburg in April next. As at these large Festivals there are generally huge orchestras employed, I do not see why the wind-instrument players should merely double their parts. Therefore I intend to write independent parts for them all, and I have ordered from Paris some special manuscript paper of forty staves! Lastly, my next tone-poem will illustrate "a day in my family life." It will be partly lyrical, partly humorous—a triple fugue, the three subjects representing papa, mamma, and the baby!' A hearty hand-shake accompanied by a cordial Auf Wiedersehen! brings to a close a pleasant hour spent in the company of one of the most distinguished composers of the present day.

The following list of Herr Richard Strauss's compositions may prove useful:—

BRITISH MUSIC IN THE GREAT NORTH-WEST.

AN IMPORTANT PROPAGANDA.

Next March one of the great ocean liners will be speeding her way across the Atlantic having on board a distinguished British musician. Sir Alexander Mackenzie will be the voyager, and his baggage will include a portmanteau full of British compositions. The Principal of the Royal Academy of Music has been kind enough to tell us something about his approaching expedition to that portion of the Empire known as the Great North-West. 'The conception of the scheme,' says Sir Alexander, 'is due to Mr. Charles E. Harriss, of Ottawa. He came to me with the request that I should conduct a series of concerts in Canada and the adjoining colonies. After some consideration I said I would go, but only on one condition: that all the music performed should be the handiwork of British musicians. Mr. Harriss agreed, and he is financing and managing the enterprise with right good will and artistic intent.'

The reader may be disposed to ask: 'Who is this well-intentioned gentleman hailing from Ottawa?' We will endeavour to answer this question. Mr. Charles Albert Edwin Harriss is a composer and organist who was born in London—the London, not its namesake in Canada—on December 15, 1862. At the age of eight he was a chorister of St. Mark's Church, Wrexham, where his father held the post of organist. He then became the Ouseley scholar at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, in 1875. On leaving that pleasant Worcestershire retreat, Mr. Harriss held the following organistships in the old country: St. Giles's, Reading (assistant); at Welshpool; and private organist to the Earl of Powis. Since 1883 he has resided in Canada, first as organist and regens chori at Christ Church, Montreal, and later at the church of St. James the Apostle, famed for its excellent music, in the same city. His compositions include a cantata, 'Daniel before the King' (1890); an Opera, 'Torquil' (Montreal, 1896); in addition to many smaller works. He has recently composed a Mass which is to be performed under his direction at some of the proposed concerts.

Mr. Charles Harriss has now retired from the profession, and for the last two years has been working out the great scheme—his pet hobby—which he has so generously organized. To judge from some remarks he recently made on the other side, this tour should have far-reaching consequences. These are his words:—

I hope to make these Festivals self-supporting and of yearly occurrence, when each year we can have a great composer come amongst us and musically help us to place Canada, not alone first as a wheat producer, a country abundant with minerals and all good things, but as a nation second to none in the realm of music.

Recent information received from the other side is to the effect that the scheme has now come to be regarded as 'a series of Festivals to celebrate the Coronation year in the Dominion of Canada,' and that it is being recognised officially by some of the Municipal authorities. Moreover, His Excellency the Governor-General has accepted the Presidency of the entire series of Festivals throughout the Dominion.

'The tour,' says Sir Alexander, 'will occupy six weeks and I shall conduct performances at St. John (N.B.), Moncton, Halifax, London, Woodstock, Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Winnipeg, Victoria, Vancouver, New Westminster, and Brandon. At Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal three concerts will be given in each city, one of which will consist entirely of my compositions. "The Dream of Jubal" is down for four performances. For the concerts given in Canada I shall have the invaluable co-operation of the famous Chicago orchestra, who will meet me at Detroit for preliminary rehearsals; from there we shall start on our journey together.

'Not the least important feature of the scheme is the attention that will be given to choral music. When I tell you that from 3,000 to 4,000 choristers will be rehearsing the works to be performed, you may form some idea of the widespread interest that will be aroused in the various cities included in the itinerary. Here is a list of leading musicians—men who are doing excellent work—who have kindly consented to act as Associate Conductors in preparing the choral works:—

Dr. Torrington, Director of the Toronto College of Music, and Conductor of the Toronto Festival Chorus.

Dr. Edward Fisher, Director of the Toronto Conservatory of Music.

Mr. A. S. Vogt, Conductor of the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto.
 Mr. A. D. Tripp, Conductor of the Male Vocal Society of Toronto.
 Dr. Ham, Mus. Doc., Oxon.
 Mr. Humphery Anger, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
 Mr. Edgar Birch, Conductor of the Ottawa Choral Society.
 Mr. C. E. B. Price, Conductor of the Ottawa Amateur Orchestral Society.
 Mr. Max Weil, Director of the Weil School of Music and Conductor of the Halifax Symphony Orchestra.
 Mr. E. J. Chadfield, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Woodstock.
 Dr. C. L. M. Harris, Director of the Conservatory of Music, Hamilton.
 Mr. E. Fraser, Brandon.
 Mr. Rhys Thomas, Winnipeg.
 Mr. George Taylor and Mr. H. Russell, Conductor of the Arion Club, Victoria.
 Mr. A. E. White, New Westminster.
 Mr. F. Dyke, Vancouver.
 Mr. G. H. Brown, Moncton.
 Mr. James S. Ford, St. John.
 Mr. Roselle Pocock, London Oratorio.
 Mr. Horace Reyner, Conductor of the Oratorio Society, Montreal.
 Mr. G. Conture and Mr. Charles Harriss.

The three gentlemen last named have undertaken to prepare the vocal forces at Montreal.

‘Do you take your own soloists, Sir Alexander?’ ‘Yes; they are Miss Ethel Wood (soprano), Mr. Wilfrid Virgo (tenor), and Mr. Reginald Davidson (bass), while Mr. Charles Fry will recite the lines in the “Dream of Jubal,” as he did in the first performance of that work and has done many times since.’

‘Have you definitely settled upon the compositions you intend to perform?’ ‘Yes, here is the list’ :—

WORKS (ENTIRELY BY BRITISH COMPOSERS) TO BE PERFORMED IN CANADA DURING APRIL, 1903.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS.

Cliffe	-	-	-	Ballade (from Symphony in C minor).
Corder	-	-	-	Overture, ‘Prospero.’
Cowen	-	-	-	Scandinavian Symphony.
Elgar	-	-	-	Prelude and Angel’s Farewell from ‘Gerontius.’
German-	-	-	-	Gipsy Suite.
MacCunn	-	-	-	Overture, ‘Land of the Mountain and the Flood.’
Mackenzie	-	-	-	Suite, ‘London day by day.’ Ballade, ‘La Belle Dame sans Merci.’ Two Scottish Rhapsodies. Overture, ‘Cricket on the Hearth.’ Overture, ‘Britannia.’ Coronation March.
Stanford	-	-	-	Irish Rhapsody, No. 1. Irish Symphony.
Sullivan	-	-	-	Overture, ‘Di Ballo.’

CHORAL WORKS.

Coleridge-Taylor	-	-	-	‘The Death of Minnehaha.’
Cowen	-	-	-	Coronation Ode.
Elgar	-	-	-	‘The Banner of St. George.’ Coronation Ode.
Parry	-	-	-	‘St. Cecilia’s Day.’ ‘Blest pair of Sirens.’

Mackenzie	-	-	-	‘The Dream of Jubal.’ ‘The Cottar’s Saturday Night.’
Stanford	-	-	-	‘The Revenge.’ ‘The Battle of the Baltic.’
Sullivan	-	-	-	‘The Golden Legend.’

SONGS, ETC. (AMONG OTHERS).

Coleridge-Taylor	-	-	-	‘Onaway, awake.’
Mackenzie	-	-	-	Three Shakespeare Sonnets for baritone.
Sullivan	-	-	-	‘How sweet the moonlight sleeps (duet from ‘Kenilworth’).’ ‘Come, Margarita, come’ (‘Martyr of Antioch’).
Goring-Thomas	-	-	-	‘Mignon.’

This selection of compositions speaks for itself. The preparation of all these works, the conducting of the concerts, and the fatigue of travelling, will make large demands upon the energies of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, but he will assuredly rise to the occasion, and it goes without saying that he will spare no pains to worthily maintain the cause of British music.

Finally, we understand that the Canadian musicians have expressed their great satisfaction at the prospect of welcoming Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and have already intimated their desire to meet him at receptions arranged for that purpose.

In wishing Sir Alexander Mackenzie bon voyage and all the success which so interesting an enterprise deserves, the question may naturally be asked: Will not someone in the old country show as much enthusiasm in the cause of British Music? There is plenty of scope for a Mr. Charles Harriss on this side of the water.

THE ‘MESSIAH.’

BY WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

More than a hundred years have passed away since this magnificent work was designated Handel’s ‘immortal’ oratorio: how truly it was so named time has proved, notwithstanding the many vicissitudes the music has had to go through. The ‘Messiah’ was not published during the lifetime of the composer; he only permitted it to be performed under his own personal direction, for which the manuscript copies sufficed: and although they failed accurately to represent Handel’s intentions as to the details of performance, that was then of no consequence, because the composer was on the spot and able to explain and arrange all those minute modifications of notation and nuance which his ardent and artistic genius would inevitably suggest.

These personal teachings were well known to and understood by J. C. Smith, John Stanley, Handel’s blind assistant, Dr. Randall, and Dr. Burney, but, unfortunately, not one of them, excepting Randall, communicated the traditions he possessed to his successors. Randall commenced his career as a chorister boy in the Chapel Royal, and was one of the original singers in Handel's 'Esther,' in 1731; he afterwards officiated as viola-player in Handel's orchestra. He therefore was very familiar with Handel's methods and wishes, and it is of great importance to remember that the Handel traditions were personally transmitted by him to Dr. Stephen Elvey and to Dr. Crotch. Their testimony will be referred to later.

Handel died in 1759, and the score of the 'Messiah' was first published in 1767. Unfortunately, Handel's autograph manuscript is none too clear; it therefore needed an expert musician to correct the printed proofs. This evidently was not done, and the resulting serious mistakes are very numerous and greatly to be deplored. Naturally, they passed without question into the various editions of every subsequent editor and printer. The most notable edition of the 'Messiah' was that prepared by Mozart in the year 1789 for the Baron von Swieten. For the exigencies of performance, Mozart added various orchestral accompaniments: he had only the defective printed score above referred to as a guide, and as a matter of course copied the impure text. It must, however, be remembered that at the present time we are not able to determine with accuracy how much of the additional accompaniments now attributed to Mozart were actually his; certainly many of their worst features must be credited to the less-gifted head and hand of Johann Adam Hiller, Mozart's contemporary.

The only important full score for performance of the 'Messiah' published since Mozart's is that of Robert Franz, issued from the press in 1885. In his preface he alluded to the numerous imperfections and deficiencies of the Mozart edition, and assumed that he had rectified these. How signally he failed in his purpose need not further be discussed here; readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES will find the subject fully investigated by the present writer in the issue of December, 1885.

The score of the 'Messiah' just published by the German Handel Society, edited by Dr. Chrysander, is welcome as a volume for the study, but is in no sense an edition for performance, being an exact reproduction, barring numerous typographical errors, of Handel's manuscripts. That these did not fully represent the composer's intentions was well understood by Dr. Chrysander, who had prepared for publication an edition which would embody the necessary revisions for public performance.

Lovers of music, especially Handelians, have for many years entertained the hope that a committee of experts would take the 'Messiah' in hand and put forth a version of the text which should not only be accurate and reliable as regards notation and other technicalities, but should also be made available for public performances, and at the same time include and exhibit sympathetically genuine Handel traditions. The spirited enterprise of Messrs. Novello has now rendered this unnecessary. By engaging Dr. Prout they have secured the services of the man best fitted to accomplish this most difficult and delicate task. Dr. Prout's knowledge and memory of Handel's scores, and of their individual ramifications, surpasses that of any living musician. His expert skill also qualifies him to solve with certainty any occasional knotty or doubtful point. We must not forget, however, that there are two classes of musicians, one comprising those who cry aloud for a revival in every respect of the 'Messiah' as performed under the composer himself. They would have every note and every bar exactly as they appear in Handel's manuscript, and would flatter themselves that they had then secured what they asked for. I have already shown that Handel did not write with exactitude all that he required, but obtained his wishes by personal communication with the performers. It has been well said, 'The modern system of literal exactitude, at the cost of spiritual fidelity, ignores tradition, and stiff and clumsy are the results.' Moreover, there were certain features of Handel's performances which it would be impossible to reproduce to-day. Handel had no female contralti in his chorus, they were all male altos; the reverse obtains now. Handel's orchestral instruments were all (excepting the trumpet) of a coarser quality than those at present in use; his harpsichords are gone for ever; his organs with few stops and no pedals have also disappeared. The places in which he performed the 'Messiah' were mere drawing-rooms when compared with the Albert Hall, the Queen's Hall, and the Crystal Palace.

The other class of musicians comprises those who desire a pure text, with such filling-up of the harmonies as Handel intended should be so filled; they also recognise the fact that as some of the instruments used in Handel's day are no longer obtainable, their places must be judiciously supplied by the most appropriate and fitting instruments of the present time. To this class Dr. Prout's new edition will give ample satisfaction; he has not only replaced the wrong notes by the right ones, but he has also restored Handel's marks of expression, and has revised the time notation in accordance with the Handel traditions which have come down to us through Randall and Crotch. The notation is a most important matter. It is well known that composers of Handel's and of Mozart's time were not in the habit of writing double-dotted notes or double-dotted rests; when they were required they were supplied by the performers in accordance with long-established tradition. This fact is noted by Leopold Mozart, father of the composer, in his 'Violin School.'

It will be well now to make one or two comparisons of the orchestral scores of Mozart and Prout, when it will be seen that the former, who had a defective copy to work from, and, moreover, was not very familiar with Handel's works, failed in realising the nobility and perfection of Handel's composition; whereas in the case of Prout, he had a wealth of material for reference, and a most intimate knowledge of Handel's style and manner, and could therefore bring his labours to a most successful issue.

In the Mozart score, at the end of 'Comfort ye,' we find the following passage which, though ingenious, is most un-Handelian, and worst of all almost impossible of performance:—

At the commencement of the chorus 'And He shall purify,' Mozart has for several bars left the voices wholly unsupported, although Handel's figured bass demands harmony; this Prout has supplied in a sympathetic organ part. Similar restorations will be found in later numbers of the work. All musicians remember and admire the exquisite additional accompaniments written by Mozart for the air 'The people that walked in darkness.' Beautiful though they are, it cannot be denied that they are not Handelian; Prout has therefore given the whole movement with Handel's original accompaniment, printing in a small type the Mozart additions. It is to be hoped and recommended that, as a general rule, the original version will be adhered to in public performance. In the 'Pastoral Symphony' we find the essential F sharp which belongs to the bass passage leading from the first to the second parts of the movement duly inserted in Prout's edition. Of course it is required for the modulation from C to G; but the first printed copy left it out, and so did Mozart and every editor since. We therefore recover an important sharp which has been missing for more than a century. A careful and minute inspection of Handel's autograph will show that he intended the passage as now restored. The additional accompaniments to the chorus 'All we like sheep,' to be found in the Mozart score—probably they were not his—have always seemed to me (I have heard them played many hundreds of times) like a lot of worried sheep trotting into the market-square—indeed, almost comic, and quite opposed to all Handel tradition. These blemishes Prout has removed, and instead supplied dignified chords in consonance with the vocal parts and the figured bass.

The chorus 'He trusted in God' presents important evidence that Handel's autograph score does not contain all the instrumentation he employed in performances of the work; the manuscript gives only parts for strings and organ, whereas in the separate instrumental parts supplied by Handel to the Foundling Hospital there are special copies for bassoons and oboes, in addition to the strings. Professor Prout has rightly incorporated these in his score; of course they do not appear in Mozart's copy. 'The trumpet shall sound' was ruthlessly cut up by Mozart; it has now been restored to its original proportions by Professor Prout.

In conclusion, a few words may be said respecting the use of trombones in the 'Messiah.' It is extremely probable that Handel, when he could get these instruments, was only too glad to be able to make use of them. It was not customary then, nor indeed long after, for composers to write the trombone parts in the score; they were written on separate sheets. We find this in the works of Haydn, Rossini, and others. The full score of Haydn's 'Creation' was published in 1800, and we find the trombone parts printed separately and bound up at the end of the volume, where they would be useless to the conductor in performance, but of course valuable to copy from for the trombonists.

It is likely, therefore, that Handel's trombone parts were either written on loose sheets, or that the players were supplied with vocal parts specially marked. Handel could not have had trombones in Dublin, there were none; but in London he could, if he wished, get them from the King's Band, and considering the high estimation in which Handel was held by the King, it is very probable that on occasions he would ask and receive permission to employ his Majesty's players. There is an interesting autograph of Handel's in the British Museum, in which he requests delivery to the bearer of the Large Tower Drums, he having permission to use them in his oratorio performances.

Handel was a great man with grand ideas, and approved of performances on a grand scale; but he was emphatically a man of resource. If he could not have all he wanted, he was content to make the best and most effective use of what he could get. The absence of instrumental performers or solo singers did not disconcert him. He was ready to transpose or re-write an air intended for any particular class of voice to fit it for some other wholly dissimilar; he would cut out an air and substitute a recitative, or turn a chorus into a solo; indeed, he would submit to any change in order to produce his work effectively. All these statements can be verified by an examination of the scores of the 'Messiah' which Handel wrote and used. The vitality of the 'Messiah' is wonderful. The music has been persistently incorrectly printed and performed, but in spite of this it has never failed to awaken the deepest and best emotions of the souls of those who have listened to its inspired strains; these may have been performed by a limited cathedral choir of six men and eight boys, or thundered out by the stalwart thousands at the Crystal Palace. Let us hope that the new edition just published will stimulate more patient study and more perfect performance of the masterpiece of the giant Handel.

The recent visit of the King and Queen and Princess Victoria to Gopsall Hall, Leicestershire, as the guests of Earl Howe, has brought that Leicestershire mansion into special prominence. Built by Charles Jennens, the friend of Handel and compiler of the words of the 'Messiah,' Gopsall welcomed the great composer on more than one occasion. On the Sunday of the Royal visit last month divine service was performed in the private chapel, with a choir of six voices (three boys and three men) from Lichfield Cathedral, and Mr. C. W. Perkins, of Birmingham, at the organ. Lichfield is only about twenty miles from Gopsall, and is it not quite probable that Handel may have visited the stately Cathedral of the Staffordshire city? If only some of the predecessors of Mr. John B. Lott had been of the Pepysian cult, and their diaries had been preserved, we might be in possession of some interesting reminiscences of the great composer.

The enthusiasm and enterprise of many provincial choirs are among the most gratifying features of our national musical life. It is easy to adopt a superior pose and to depreciate the value of much of this activity on the ground that it appears to be stimulated only by competition and prizes. But the undeniable excellence of the artistic results so frequently achieved in this way do not suggest either sordid motives or vanity; rather, they display a laudable desire to attain a high ideal in execution, a willingness to submit to the disciplinary pains and penalties essential to this end, and a perfectly legitimate pride in publicly exhibiting the results of skilful and strenuous endeavour before a responsive and critical audience. This appreciation is suggested by the recent visit of several provincial choirs to the Queen's Hall on the occasion of a competition of male-voice choirs, reported elsewhere in our columns. The prize of £50 fell to the Southport Vocal Union, who, under their highly capable conductor, Mr. J. C. Clarke, gave excellent performances of the test-pieces. Some particulars regarding this choir and of the arrangements made for their brief visit to the metropolis will serve to illustrate the spirit with which the organisation is worked. The choir is drawn from the middle and working classes, the latter predominating. The expense of conveying the fifty or so members to and from London was £70. Each member contributed 22s. on the condition that a return was to be made if the choir won the prize, and the remainder was made up by local friends. All the wage-earning members also gave up a day's pay and their out-of-pocket expenses. The choir left Southport at 8.50 a.m., and arrived at the Queen's Hall at 6 p.m. After singing last of the seven choirs, they awaited the tediously delayed adjudication, and then left St. Pancras at 12.15 midnight, arriving at Southport at 6.30 a.m. A week or so later the choir united with their better halves to give a highly creditable performance of 'The Golden Legend'; so practice for the competition cannot be said to have starved the choir musically. We have singled out this instance of the bracing effect of competition as typical. The members of the Southport Union were prepared to make a pecuniary sacrifice equal at least to a season's subscription to a 'fashionable' choral society in order to prove their ability, and at worst learn a lesson. But the other provincial societies represented on this occasion, from Swansea, Cardiff, and Oxford, deserve quite as much credit for their courage and enterprise. They may return to their furrow poorer in money and perhaps sadder in spirit, but yet they have gained an abiding lesson. Defeat to the best spirits is the path to victory.

The prospectus of the thirteenth Morecambe Musical Festival and Competition—to be held between April 29 and May 2—has been issued. The document shows that the spirit of enterprise which so eminently characterises the efforts of Canon Gorton and his excellent colleagues is well sustained. The conductors and adjudicators include the names of Dr. Elgar, Dr. McNaught (a well-trying favourite, although a judge, at Morecambe), and Mr. Percy Pitt. All particulars of this valuable educational institution may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. H. Powell, Euston Grove, Morecambe.

Welcome to another Festival—Middlesbrough! This music-making is announced to be held on April 22 and 23, the orchestra to consist of members of Dr. Richter's Manchester band, and eminent soloists with Madame Albani at their head have been engaged. The chief features of the scheme up to the present are Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' Bach's 'Sleepers, wake,' Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' and the first performance in England of Fritz Volbach's cantata 'The Page and the King's daughter,' a work to which reference was made in our biographical notes on the composer in THE MUSICAL TIMES of October last. We shall watch the development of this Festival new-comer with interest; in the meantime we wish it all the success it deserves. The fact that so competent an enthusiast as Mr. Kilburn will conduct is a sufficient guarantee that everything will be carried out in a manner both thorough and artistic.

An interesting Weber manuscript, from the Sir George Smart collection, was sold by Messrs. Sotheby last month. It is Weber's last composition—a setting of Moore's words 'From Chindara's warbling fount I come' ('Lalla Rookh'). Weber composed the music in London for Miss ('Kitty') Stephens, who sang it at his benefit concert given at the Argyll Rooms, Regent Street, May 21, 1826. It is said that a Mr. Ward, a Member of Parliament for the City, gave the composer £25 for this song. Weber did not write down the accompaniment; this was subsequently supplied by Moscheles. He, however, feebly accompanied the song at his concert, and after he had played it he was so exhausted that his friends had to lead him to a sofa in the ante-room. Fourteen days later he was found dead in his bed at Sir George Smart's house, now numbered 103, Great Portland Street. The manuscript realized £13 5s., and was bought by Mr. E. Speyer.

'A Recital of British-Irish Harpsichord and Piano-forte Music from the 16th to the present century,' formed the scheme of the second Historical Concert given in the University Music Class Room, Edinburgh, on the 10th ult. The following comprehensive programme, drawn up by Professor Niecks, was admirably interpreted by Miss Fanny Davies:—

First Period:—WILLIAM BYRD (b. about 1538, d. 1623):—
Pavana, 'The Earle of Salisbury.'

JOHN BULL (b. about 1563, d. 1628):—
'The King's Hunt.'

ORLANDO GIBBONS (b. 1583, d. 1625):—
Gallardo in C major.

Second Period:—JOHN BLOW (b. 1648, d. 1708):—
Chacone in G minor.

HENRY PURCELL (b. 1658, d. 1695):—
(a) Toccata in A major.
(b) Ground in C minor.

Third Period:—JAMES NARES (b. 1715, d. 1783):—
Two movements from the Sonata in B flat major.
(a) Larghetto.
(b) Allegro.

THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE (b. 1710, d. 1778):—
Sonata in B flat major.
(a) Introduction.
(b) Gavotta.

Fourth Period:—JOHN FIELD (b. 1782, d. 1837):—
Nocturne in A major.

Fifth Period:—WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT (b. 1816, d. 1875):—
(a) Capriccio in A minor, No. 2 of Op. 28.
(b) 'The Lake' and 'The Fountain,' Nos. 1 and 3 of 'Three Musical Sketches,' Op. 10.

Sixth Period:—ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE (b. 1847):—
'Reminiscence,' No. 3, of Op. 20, 'Six Pieces.'

CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD (b. 1852):—
Scherzo (MS.).

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR:—
Characteristic Piece.

EDWARD WILLIAM ELGAR (b. 1857):—
Concert Allegro (written for and dedicated to Fanny Davies).

FREDERIC H. COWEN (b. 1852):—
Scherzo.

DONALD FRANCIS TOVEY:—
Andante.

PERCY PITT:—
Etude mignonne.

NORMAN O'NEILL:—
Allegretto grazioso.

ARTHUR SOMERVELL:—
Concert Study (dedicated to Fanny Davies).

In his interesting 'Introduction to the Programme,' Professor Niecks said:—

'In more recent times the British and Irish composers have been too busy with chorus and orchestra, in cantata, oratorio, opera, and symphony, to find leisure to occupy themselves with the poor and humble pianoforte. Notwithstanding this general neglect of the clavier by the composers in these parts, there exists, however, a great deal more of interesting, pleasing, and sterling music of this sort than most people are aware of. In fact, the hearers of the music enumerated in the accompanying programme will very probably come to the conclusion that if the British composers have neglected the clavier, the British public have still more neglected their composers for the clavier.'

Mr. A. J. Hipkins has written an instructive pamphlet on 'Dorian and Phrygian reconsidered from a non-harmonic point of view,' in which he shows a thorough mastery of a subject upon which he is so well qualified to discourse. The brochure is printed for private circulation, but we understand that Mr. Hipkins (100, Warwick Gardens, Kensington) will be pleased to supply a copy to anyone who may write for it, so long as the edition holds out.

'The Travels and Eccentricities of little Miss Bo-peep: by C. W. C., Ch. Ch., Oxford,' is the title of a jeu d'esprit by Dr. Corfe, known as the 'Corfe-mixture' organist of Christ Church. This amusing little skit, dated 'June, 1881,' when Dr. Corfe was in his sixty-seventh year, consists of eight variants of the familiar nursery tune. No. 1, in simple harmony, is headed 'Miss Bo-peep's feelings on leaving England.' When 'she arrives in Germany' (No. 2) the harmonic form becomes more Teutonic and less tonic (and dominant). Then 'she meets with and admires Spohr,' and this is how she does it:—

We may pass over Nos. 4, 5, and 6,—'She flirts with Mr. Acis,' 'Falls foul of Miss Galatea,' and 'is greatly excited in consequence'—all of which are cast in familiar Handelian moulds, and give No. 7, 'She becomes serious and rather religious':—

The last variant, in the minor key, is headed:—
'Pines away and ultimately dies, leaving a melancholy tale behind her.'

The 'Dream of Gerontius' of Dr. Elgar, which is now in rehearsal at Aix-la-Chapelle, Cologne, and Danzig, is also under consideration for performance at Wiesbaden and Mainz. Dr. Elgar's 'Orchestral Variations' are announced for second performances at Cologne, Mainz and Wiesbaden, and are under consideration for production at Frankfort, Danzig, and Buda-Pest. Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' has been accepted for this year's Lower Rhine Festival at Aachen (conductor, Professor Schwickerath), as well as for the Festival to be held at Duisburg (Rhenish Prussia) in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the local 'Gesangverein.' Musik-Direktor Walter Josephson, the conductor, has prepared an excellent translation of Milton's Ode, and the above Society will have the honour of first presenting this masterpiece of English music to a German audience.

In the year 1840 Mendelssohn, who in 1829 had shown his reverence for Bach by the performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion at Berlin, desired to raise money for the erection of a monument to the great master at Leipzig, in the neighbourhood of the now demolished St. Thomas's School, where Bach lived and laboured. Mendelssohn drew up a circular announcing his intention to give for that purpose a 'Bach' recital in St. Thomas's church, and to play some of the great organ works. Those who wished to purchase tickets were requested to add their names, together with the number of tickets they required. The document, which has been discovered in the archives of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde at Vienna, contains over 120 signatures. The amount subscribed was 235 thalers, 20 groschen. Among the names we find those of four great publishing firms: Dr. Härtel and his brother Raimund, C. F. Peters, Fr. Hofmeister, and F. Whistling; the composers, J. J. H. Verhulst and Kiel; C. Voigt, organist of St. Thomas's; H. Schleinitz, for many years director of the Leipzig Conservatorium; Dr. Petschke, member of the executive committee of the Gewandhaus concerts; the famous writer Rochlitz, whom Beethoven on his death bed designated as the man whom he wished for his biographer; Robert Schumann; and L. Schumann, probably the composer's uncle. Mendelssohn mentions the concert in a letter written to his mother on August 10, 1840; also that after paying expenses he had 300 thalers left towards the monument, equal to about £50 in English money. It may be of interest to give the programme:—

Introductory. Phantasie (Mendelssohn).
 Fugue in E flat—most probably the St. Ann's.
 Phantasie on Choral, 'Schmücke dich, o liebe Seele.'
 Prelude and Fugue in A minor.
 Passacaille in C minor.
 Pastorella in F.
 Prelude and Toccata in A minor.
 Phantasie on Choral, 'O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden' (Mendelssohn).

The recital commenced at six o'clock on a lovely summer's evening. The notice of the performance in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik of August 12, 1840, speaks of the 'master interpreting the master,' adding, as a kind of doxology, 'Praise and honour to the old and to the young; and' adds the writer, 'if I mistake not, Mendelssohn worked into the last piece on the programme a fugato on the name of Bach.'

Old letters are often instructive and amusing. In reading through a number addressed to the late Dr. Rimbault we came across one from Dr. S. S. Wesley, written from Leeds, in which he invoked Rimbault's aid in gaining information for some lectures he (Wesley) contemplated writing on Church Music. Wesley writes: 'I want much to know something more about the sacred music of Marenzio, of Monteverde, of Carissimi, of Scarlatti. Do you know of any very celebrated specimens of these? I am not learned in Italian music, what little I have seen has not tempted me to read much more. Any nice account of when the Italians first neglected the old models and began the sugar and cream style of Graun the German, and others, Jomelli and such. I have not yet looked into this point.' Victor Schoelcher asks Rimbault: 'What is the difference between fagotto and bassoon?' In justice to Schoelcher, however, a postscript to his letter should be quoted: 'Relating to my question about fagotto and bassoon, I thought they were the same, but I find in the Water Music (Handel) both altogether.' Another interrogation is very amusing: 'What is the difference between the hornpipe and the bagpipe?' The biographer of Handel adds: 'I will be very acknowledged for any answer to these inquiries.'

The volume containing the 'Proceedings of the Musical Association'—the record of its achievements during the twenty-eighth session—has just been issued. This collection of essays admirably fulfils the objects and aims of this learned Society—'the investigation and discussion of subjects connected with the art and science of music.' We give a list of the papers read during the session 1901-2, with names of the lecturers:—

Orchestral and Choral balance - -	Mr. John E. Borland.
Bells and bell tones - -	Mr. W. W. Starmer.
The philosophy of our tempered system - -	Mr. Joseph Goddard.
The development of national opera in Russia -	Mrs. Newmarch.
Sullivan as a national style-builder - -	Dr. Charles Maclean.
Hamlet and the recorder -	Mr. Christopher Welch.
Coronation Music - -	Mr. J. S. Shedlock.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Scotch' Piano-forte Concerto was performed in Berlin at a concert given by Mr. Frederick Dawson on November 28, with the Philharmonic Orchestra, and conducted by Professor Karl Klindworth. The solo part in this fine work was splendidly played by the gifted English pianist, and the success of the important novelty was emphatic. A criticism on the event from one of the Berlin newspapers may be quoted:—

The work appeared to us the best which we have so far heard of English music in Berlin. The opening Allegro maestoso produced a strong impression. The mighty outlines of the Highlands seem portrayed in the powerful themes given to the strings. Horn calls resound from the ravines and from the heights, and the mountains and the clouds passing over them are mirrored in the clear and lovely lakes. The Scottish Highlands as Ossian, Scott and Burns have described them, were brought vividly before our eyes. The movement gradually merges into a characteristic, beautifully-written Lento, founded on a deeply-felt folk-tune. The third movement is similarly based; it is wonderfully exhilarating and full of burlesque (pawky) humour, which the composer presents in very many guises.

Mr. J. S. Shedlock gave a course of three lectures at the Royal Academy of Music on Wednesdays the 3rd, 10th, and 17th ult. His subject was the 'Clavier Music of the immediate predecessors of Bach and Handel.' He spoke about the Suite and Variations, illustrating his remarks by pieces played on a fine harpsichord kindly lent by Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons. Among the composers represented were: Italy, Pasquini; France, Chambonnières and Couperin; Germany, C. F. Witt, Johann Bernard Bach, Krieger, and especially Kuhnau; and England, Dr. Blow and Henry Purcell. The subject was one profitable to the students, while several of the pieces played exist only in manuscript. The lecturer gave three reasons for choosing this particular subject: first, that it was important in the history of the evolution of the art; secondly, that it was interesting in itself; and thirdly, that knowledge of the men and music of the period in question helped to a better appreciation of the genius both of Bach and Handel.

The performance of the 'Messiah' recently given in Birmingham, and to which reference is made in the letter of our correspondent from that city, was stated to be thoroughly Handelian—nothing up to date, but strictly of the 1742 order. But why, oh why, that modernisation of the text-compiler's name in the word-book of the oratorio? Charles Jennens, good antiquaries, not Jennings!

Sir Frederick Bridge has been appointed the first King Edward Professor of Music in the University of London.

The Sheffield Musical Festival of 1902 has resulted in a net profit of £1,036 4s. 3d. The invested capital fund now stands at the substantial sum of £2,464 14s. 5d. Excellent!

It is generally the poor country critic (or journal) that furnishes commentable material of the 'lighter vein' type. The following is, however, from a London newspaper! It records a suburban performance of 'Elijah':—

Without a doubt Mendelssohn reserved his finest efforts, apart from the concerted numbers, for the character of the Prophet, the envy and often despair of every ambitious baritone. Mr. — sang the music with a splendid appreciation of its possibilities. His delivery of 'Who may abide?' with its succeeding 'For He is like a refiner's fire,' was particularly good, and a warm encore was the result.

In spite of the obvious mixing up of two oratorios—the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah'—in the foregoing criticism, one cannot help admiring the use of the adjective 'warm' in the encore awarded to 'For He is like a refiner's fire.' But who may abide such inaccuracy?

ST. JAMES'S HALL.

SOME HISTORICAL NOTES.

The news that this shrine of music in Regent Street might be devoted to other purposes came as a shock to many lovers of the art, especially to those who have known the building ever since its erection forty-four years ago. One can recall hours of untold delight in listening within its walls to music-makings of the highest artistry—the Pops, Philharmonic, Musical Union, Henry Leslie's Choir, Oratorio, Richter and other concerts, now things of the past, but leaving behind them a pleasant memory.

The hall was designed by Owen Jones (1809-1874). He formerly held the post of superintendent of works for the Great Exhibition of 1851, and designed the decorations of the Alhambra, Egyptian, Greek and Roman courts in the Crystal Palace. He also distinguished himself as an illustrator of books. From an article by the late Mr. William Chappell in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' we learn that the building was initiated by two music-publishing firms, namely, Messrs. Chappell and Cramer, Mr. T. F. Beale and Mr. William Chappell becoming tenants of the Crown and holding it in trust for the Company. The capital was fixed at £40,000, because the original estimate for the building was £23,000, but the apparently ample margin of £17,000 was soon to disappear. Regent Street and Piccadilly were the ancient boundaries of Thorney Island, with its various strata of sand and blue clay, with land springs and deep wells. This condition of affairs was not discovered till building operations had begun, consequently the ground had to be covered with a solid foundation of concrete. Instead of £40,000, the actual cost ran up to £70,000, and subsequent expenditures have made up the sum to £120,000.

The scheme of decoration included the names of various composers inscribed on scrolls, sustained by Monti's group of angels, in the niches over the windows. Those on the south (Piccadilly) side represented the masters of sacred music: those on the north (Regent Street) the great lyrical composers. Here is the list (the dates are omitted):—

SACRED COMPOSERS.

Palestrina
Purcell
Bach
Handel
Haydn
Beethoven

These names, and indeed the building itself, came under the critical lash of Mr. J. W. Davison, who, in a leading article which appeared in the Musical World of April 24, 1858, just after the opening of the Hall, delivered his opinion on 'The St. James's Music Hall' in this Davisonesque strain:—

'ALL MEN ARE BRETHREN—CAINS AND ABELS.'

This maxim or aphorism (alas! may we not even say this 'axiom'?) rose upon our minds the other evening as we sat in St. James's Hall, illumined, like devout Islamites, by the small chandeliers that, in mosque-like fashion, dangled from the roof. The Hall was bright and beautiful—statues of Cupids or male Muses, such as might have sprung from the hand of Phidias or of Madame Tussaud, smiled down upon us, and dissipated our Moslem fancies. We pondered, also, on the names of the musical immortalities painted on the panels that adorn the upper part of the room, and some of these we worshipped with a full knowledge of their deserts: others we revered in the spirit of faith; for with the nature of their claim to the unfading laurel we were but imperfectly acquainted. And we said, truly immortality is, in some respects, like death. For whereas death puts the high and the low into one common earth, so doth immortality write the names of the renowned and the obscure on one common tablet, and that tablet is at St. James's Hall.

The hall, although called a Music Hall, was made to be looked at, not to be a temple of sound. Therefore purpose contemplated by the manufacturer of Peter Pindar's razors. What's in a name? I' faith, a great deal. The musical properties of St. James's Hall lie in its name, and nowhere else.

A marked feature of St. James's Hall has been its fine acoustic properties. This sine quâ non of a perfect music-room was recognised at the outset by Sir George Smart, who wrote the following letter to

ST. JAMES'S HALL, LONDON.

was a portion of the edifice fashioned like the alcove of a French bedroom, that the muses of melody and harmony might slumber therein, and not disturb the devotions offered by the faithful to the genius of architecture. Truly, the Musical World is not fit to appreciate the merits of the St. James's Music Hall—the only journal to which it is addressed is the Builder.

St. James's Music Hall! Thus is there a place in London called the 'Cider Cellars,' at which cider is the only drink not consumed. Thus was shaving the last

John Ella, when the latter transferred his Musical Union concerts from the Hanover Square Rooms to the new building:—

91, Great Portland Street, 10th April, 1858.

My dear Sir,—I congratulate you upon the result of the 'private reception to view St. James's Hall' on Thursday last. My visit there was to hear the performance, having previously been satisfied with the view of this magnificent hall. When I saw the music-desks placed in the centre of this large space, I had my fears as to the sound filling it, but these fears were entirely removed after a few bars of Spohr's Quintet. I was then in the gallery. The effect of Mendelssohn's Duet for the pianoforte and violoncello was equally satisfactory; I listened to it under the gallery. I heard every note of Mozart's 'Adagio con Sordini' at the upper end of the hall near the orchestra, in which the vocalists were judiciously placed.

My impression therefore of the capability of St. James's Hall for musical sound is decidedly favourable, as I tested it in all parts.

I am, yours faithfully,

GEORGE T. SMART.

St. James's Hall was inaugurated on Thursday, March 25 and Saturday, March 27, 1858, by 'Two grand musical performances, in aid of the funds of the Middlesex Hospital'—thus charity had the first claim upon the building. The programme, entirely of sacred music on the first occasion, opened with The National Anthem, to which followed Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Handel's 'The King shall rejoice,' Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' and some miscellaneous pieces. Henry Smart was at the organ and Benedict conducted. The only surviving soloist of that occasion is Mr. Santley, and of those who similarly participated in the second concert, Madame Arabella Goddard. It is interesting to learn, from an account of the first concert, that 'His Royal Highness Prince Albert attended the concert and remained to the end.'

The conservatism of the British Public showed itself in its attitude to the new edifice. Therefore, in order to make use of the Hall and to bring it before the public, Messrs. Chappell, on the advice of Mr. J. W. Davison, inaugurated the Monday Popular Concerts in 1859, the outcome of 'Three Popular Concerts' given in December, 1858, during the Cattle Show then held at Baker Street. Ten years later the Philharmonic Society migrated from the Hanover Square Rooms, and gave their first concert amid new surroundings on March 10, 1869, conducted by the late Sir W. G. Cusins. On that occasion analytical programmes—most ably written by the late Sir George Macfarren—were introduced at the Philharmonic for the first time. In noticing this concert the ever-entertaining 'J. W. D.' said: 'The statement that this will be the first performance [at the second concert] of Mendelssohn's "Wedding of Camacho" overture is not exact, seeing that it is to be played to-day at the Crystal Palace.' Catch 'G.' letting any one get the start of him!

The concerts of Henry Leslie's Choir (the first on December 14, 1860); the Oratorio Concerts given by Messrs. Novello, when the French pitch was used for the first time in this country (begun February 5, 1869); and the Richter Concerts (started May 5, 1879) are some of the outstanding features, in addition to those already named, in the history of the building.

The original organ, and which stood there for ten years, was built by Messrs. Gray and Davison. This fine-toned instrument consisted of only one manual! Here is the specification:—

	Feet.		Feet.
1. Sub Bourdon	16	10. Flute... ..	4
2. Double Open Diapason ...	16	11. Furniture (3 ranks).	4

The present writer well remembers the feelings of boyish delight with which he pulled out every stop of this organ, and the thrill resulting from playing a few handful-chords till the blowers let the wind out! No account of St. James's Hall can omit kindly reference to Mr. Ambrose Austin, now a veteran, but for many years the genial manager of the familiar and pleasantly-reminiscent shrine of music in Regent Street.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

Church and Organ Music.

THE TUNE 'ST. JAMES.'

It is not without interest that two standard common metre tunes—stately melodies which have stood the test of a couple of centuries—should be named after two adjacent parishes in London, St. Anne's Soho, and St. James's, Westminster.

The tune 'St. James' is said to have been first published in 'Select Psalms and Hymns for the use of the Parish Church and Tabernacle of St. James's, Westminster, 1697.' It is contained in a 12mo book, and appears without the name of the composer. We give the tune from the sixth edition (1704), the only difference in the title being the substitution of the word 'Chappel' for 'Tabernacle' in the earlier issue. The music, originally printed in diamond-shaped notes, is the same. Its extremely high key—a fourth higher than that in which the tune is now sung—will not escape notice, nor will the four crotchets in the last strain. Probably the first editor to omit these ornamental notes was Dr. Samuel Arnold, who with Dr. Callcott edited a Psalmody which appeared in 1791; but they were retained by Webbe (1808) and Crotch (1836), and also by so redoubtable an opponent of editorial tinkering as the Rev. Henry Parr in his 'Church of England Psalmody.' Probably very few organists and members of church choirs are aware of the original form of this time-honoured melody:—

Although 'St. James' appeared anonymously, it has with good reason been assigned to Raphael (or Ralph) Courteville—variously spelt Courtville, or Courtivill. The date and place of this gentleman's birth are unknown, but he was a Chapel Royal chorister and either a son or grandson of Raphael Courteville, a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, who died in 1765.

St. James's Church, Pickadilly (to adopt the old spelling), was consecrated July 13, 1684, and constituted a parochial church, carved out of the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the following year. Sir Christopher Wren was the architect of the church; but the tower and spire were subsequently erected by a carpenter residing in the parish, a Mr. Wilcox, his design being preferred by the vestry to that submitted by Sir Christopher Wren!

At a meeting of the vestry held on April 17, 1690, and at the suggestion of the rector, the Rev. Dr. Tenison, a petition to the Queen was drawn up humbly praying Her Majesty to grant unto the parish of St. James's the gift of the great organ of the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, an instrument erected for James II. by Renatus Harris. Five months later the rector had the satisfaction of reading the following letter in which the Queen granted the request:—

Whereas the Queen's Maje hath beene graciously pleased to give ye Greate Organ wch is in ye Greate Chappell at Whitehall wch heretofore ye Papists possessed unto ye Parish of St. James to be sett up in ye Parish Church. I doe therefore authorize & give Leave unto Dr. Tenison to take and remove the said Organ, and to employ whomsoever he shall thinke fitt to doe ye same. Given under my hand this 24th day of August 1691. In the 3rd year of their Majies Reign.

DORSETT.

Father Smith was employed to remove and set up the organ in St. James's Church, and the Princess Anne of Denmark (afterwards Queen Anne), a member of the congregation, gave the sum of twenty guineas towards the cost (£150) of rebuilding the instrument. Immediately on the completion of the organ, Henry Purcell and Dr. Blow were engaged to examine it, with the result that Father Smith was employed to further improve the organ at a cost of £50. The inscription in gold letters on the gallery front stated:—

This organ was given to the parish by Her Most Excellent Majesty, and erected at the charge of several of the inhabitants, anno Domini 1691.

The specification may be given as showing the scope of a large parish church organ at the end of the seventeenth century:—

On September 7, 1691, Mr. Raphael Courteville was appointed first organist of St. James's Church, at a salary of £20 per annum and £4 for a blower! It has been assumed that this Raphael Courteville lived till early in June, 1772; if so, he held the post of organist for eighty-one years. On the other hand, it is said that he was succeeded in 1735 by his son of the same name, although the change of organistship is not recorded in the vestry minutes. Certain it is that in the year 1735 a Raphael Courteville, Junior, was in the flesh, as there is a monument in the church to his wife, who died May 27 in that year. Four months later, Courteville is stated by a writer in Notes and Queries (Series II., x., 496) to have married a lady named Miss Lucy Green with a fortune of £25,000. Against this comfortable dowry may be quoted the following, discovered by the present writer in the Morning Chronicle of March 16, 1813:—

PARISH OF ST. JAMES'S, WESTMINSTER.—If the next of kin of Jane Courteville, late of Marshall Street, Carnaby Market, spinster, who died in the workhouse, on the 30th day of January last, will apply to Mr. Rice, solicitor of the Guardians of the Poor of this Parish, at the Parochial Office, Poland Street, they will hear of something to their advantage. The said Jane Courteville appeared to be between 50 and 60 years of age, her father was several years organist of St. James's Church, and resided on The Terrace, Market Lane, St. James's Market.

The vestry minutes show that Courteville (father or son) was threatened with dismissal unless he attended personally to the duties of his office. Later on a Mr. William Richardson was appointed assistant organist; but when it came to the knowledge of the vestry that Courteville gave his deputy only a quarter of his salary for doing the entire duty, he was thereupon ordered to share the payment with Richardson, who, on the death of Courteville, succeeded to the post. The Courteville to whom the tune 'St. James' is assigned was the author of six 'Sonatas of two parts composd and purposley contriv'd for two flutes,' published by Walsh, and other compositions printed and in manuscript which have long been forgotten.

Raphael Courteville—whether Senior or Junior we cannot say—was the reputed author of the 'Gazetteer,' a paper written in defence of the Government. For this production he probably received the nick-name of 'Court-evil.' He is described as 'Organ-blower, Essayist, and Historiographer.'

As a small though new contribution to the pros and cons of two successive organists of St. James's Church named Raphael (or Ralph) Courteville, father and son, we may direct attention to a volume of Italian music in the Bodleian Library ('Music School MSS., 26489') which was owned in the eighteenth century by 'R. Courtivill, junior, in Bury Street, St. James', London.'

The fine old tune which has handed down the name of Raphael Courteville to posterity forms the theme of a fantasia for the organ composed by the late Charles Edward Stephens. Will any modern editor of a hymnal have the courage to restore the original crotchets?

AFTER THE GOSPEL.

The Rev. Edward Husband, vicar of St. Michael's Church, Folkestone, writes:—

It is customary in many churches to sing an ascription of praise before and after the reading of the Gospel at the Holy Communion Service. The words 'We thank Thee, O Christ, for this Thy Holy Gospel' come in most harmoniously at the close of all the Gospels, but it will be found that in the majority of modern musical settings to the Holy Communion Service the words have been abbreviated to 'Thanks be to Thee, O Christ.'

It seems to me a mistake thus to have altered the words. The harmoniousness of the ascription of praise with the words of the Gospel immediately preceding it seems, in some instances, out of place.

Look, for instance, at the Gospel for the first Sunday in Advent. It ends with these words: 'My House shall be called the House of Prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves.' 'Thanks be to Thee, O Christ.'

The Innocents' Day: 'In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.' 'Thanks be to Thee, O Christ.'

The sixth Sunday after Trinity: 'Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing.' 'Thanks be to Thee, O Christ.'

These are a few instances why I think the composers of our modern musical settings to the Holy Communion Service would do well to keep to the longer formula, 'We thank Thee, O Christ, for this Thy Holy Gospel.'

THE DOUBLE CHANT OF LAWES.

'From what composition by Henry Lawes is the well-known Chant in C derived?' This question has often been put without having received any satisfactory answer. The Rev. Henry Parr states that the adaptation was made by Joseph Corfe, organist of Salisbury Cathedral from 1792 to 1804, and that he (Mr. Parr) remembers hearing the chant in Magdalen College Chapel, Oxford, in 1835.

A few years ago we put the question to the late Sir John Stainer, and in reply he sent the following characteristic letter:—

I have been on the look out for many years to trace the origin of Corfe's double chant from Lawes, and am reluctantly driven to the conclusion that it is a free (very free!) paraphrase of this little gem of a song:—

BEAUTIES EXCELLENCY.

FROM 'AYRES AND DIALOGUES, FOR ONE, TWO, AND THREE VOICES, THE FIRST BOOKE,' BY HENRY LAWES, 1653.

nor snow which fall - ing from the . . skye, ho - vers in its vir - gi - ni - ty.

Don't laugh! But I really believe I am right. Play the song several times!—Yours, J. STAINER.

DOVER TOWN HALL ORGAN.

The following is the specification of the new organ in the Town Hall, Dover. The instrument, built by Messrs. Norman and Beard, Limited, and the gift of Dr. E. F. Astley, J.P., was inaugurated on November 5, 1902, by Mr. H. J. Taylor, organist to the Corporation of Dover.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

An impressive rendering of Brahms's 'Requiem' was given at St. Paul's Cathedral on the 2nd ult., under Sir George Martin's experienced conductorship.

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was sung at St. Botolph's Church, Bishopsgate, on the 7th ult., under Mr. John E. Borland's able direction.

The performances of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' (Parts 1, 2, and 3) have been given at St. Anne's, Soho, with their usual excellence, under Mr. E. H. Thorne's auspices, during the past month. Parts 4, 5, and 6 are to be sung on the evenings of the 2nd, 9th, and 16th inst.

At the Cathedral Church of Christ, Canterbury, on the 11th ult., Gade's 'Zion,' Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' Symphony and 'Hear my prayer' were carefully rendered under the baton of Dr. H. C. Perrin, organist of the Cathedral.

On the 17th ult. Brahms's Requiem received an impressive interpretation in Ripon Cathedral, under the able direction of Mr. C. H. Moody, the newly-appointed organist. Dr. H. P. Allen, organist of New College, Oxford, efficiently presided at the organ, and the choir thoroughly entered into the spirit of the work.

The annual Service of Praise organised by the Presbyterian Church of England Association of North London Choirs was successfully held at Regent Square Church on November 25. Mr. John Cook conducted an excellent choir, and Mr. H. L. L. Middleton was the accompanying organist.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL HYMNAL.

The long-promised 'Public School Hymn Book,' prepared by a committee of the Headmasters' Conference, will make its appearance in the course of the next month or two. There will be two editions, one with, the other without, tunes. The committee has been at work upon the book for some three years, and it is hoped that it will be widely adopted in schools which have no hymn-book of their own. It will be sold either bound or in sheets, so that any school which desires to add an appendix of local or other hymns may be able to do so. The work has been entrusted to Messrs. Novello.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Reviews.

Haydn. By J. Cuthbert Hadden. The Master Musician Series.

[J. M. Dent and Co.]

Mr. Hadden has turned out a very readable 'life' of the 'Papa' composer. He builds upon the sure foundations of the late Dr. Pohl, and expresses his obligations to Miss Pauline D. Townsend, authoress of the monograph on the master in the 'Great Musicians' series. The omission of one rather important book in the bibliography (Appendix C), the interesting little volume entitled 'A Croatian Composer: notes towards the study of Joseph Haydn, by W. H. Hadow' (Seeley and Co.), gives us the impression that Mr. Hadden has not seen this valuable sidelight on the subject of his theme. If so, he would probably have made use of Mr. Hadow's information in the Croatian reference on p. 127 of his (Mr. Hadden's) book.

The author is on surer ground in his biographical than in his critical capacity. For instance, in his estimate of the Haydn quartet, Mr. Hadden says (p. 174): 'His [Haydn's] quartet-writing is often bald and uninteresting'; and yet a few sentences later we are told: 'they [the quartets] are all characterised by the same combination of manly earnestness, rich invention and mirthful spirit. The form is concise and symmetrical, the part-writing is clear and well-balanced,' and so on. Although Haydn may be rightly designated as 'the most genial of all the great composers,' it must not be assumed that he was so lighthearted as to be incapable of touching the deeper springs of emotion, passion, and even grief. Some of his slow movements bear marked testimony to this soul-depth attribute, and as Mr. J. S. Shedlock, in his valuable volume on 'The Pianoforte Sonata,' has observed: 'The opening allegro of the great Sonata in E flat (written for Frau v. Genziger) shows earnest, deep feeling, while at the close of the recapitulation Haydn makes us feel the full power of his genius; the passage irresistibly recalls moments in the first movement of the "Appassionata"; those stately reiterated chords, those solemn pauses, have a touch of mystery about them.'

Mr. Hadden claims to have produced 'the fullest life of Haydn that has so far appeared in English'; that he has succeeded in so doing and in telling the story of the composer's career 'simply and directly,' those who read his pages will readily testify.

List! for the breeze and O! little harbinger of day. Two glees composed by John Goss.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Sir John Goss was par excellence a composer to whom all singers owe a debt of gratitude. In the first place he had, like his musical grandfather, Mozart, the rare gift of melody; and secondly he never wrote an unvoiced passage. The two glees under notice have never before been published. This seems strange considering their Gossian attributes. But better late than never. The independence of the part-writing places them well in the category of the glee, and all the voices are well provided with tuneful phrases. 'O! little harbinger of day' is the more extended composition of the pair. The 'cheerfully, but not too quick' opening movement in quadruple rhythm gives place to a charming andantino grazioso in three-four time. This not only forms a delightful contrast, but the triplet treatment of the words 'go, tuneful sprite, and wave thy wing' is exceedingly happy in its appropriateness. The semiquavers which are made use of to 'charm Astrea's morning hour' give further variety to a composition which, with its companion, will doubtless be warmly welcomed by male-voice choirs and quartet parties.

A Book of British Song for Home and School. Edited by Cecil J. Sharp. [John Murray.]

Although this collection of school songs is designated 'British,' no fewer than sixty-six of the seventy-eight ditties contained herein are English; Scotland contributes eight, and Ireland a modest pair. In regard to the productions of the land o' cakes and the Emerald Isle, Mr. Sharp says that these ten songs are all that he could find 'really suitable for performance in class.' No one will object to the large sprinkling of folk-songs, though opinions may differ as to whether some of the words are suitable to be uttered by singers of tender years. For instance, 'The Beggars' chorus' (circa 1640) contains this verse:—

A bag for my oatmeal,
Another for my rye,
A little bottle by my side
To drink when I am dry,
And a-begging we will go, &c.

On this ground one has just the feeling that the book will go 'a-begging' in girls' schools and not a few homes. The time has long since passed by when the words of a song 'don't matter.' One of the main difficulties that beset earnest-minded teachers of school singing-classes is the selection of songs that contain words above reproach in every respect. The importance of this aspect of the subject cannot be over-estimated, especially when so much attention is given (or ought to be given) to the clear enunciation of the words as well as their poetic import. The editor of this volume has found it necessary to insert a rather extensive glossary of the obsolete words used in his pages. The 'notes on the songs' are a commendable feature of a not altogether satisfactory volume, and, moreover, one that leaves room for improvement in its music-typographical presentation.

Out of the Darkness. Love flew down from the North. Words by Kathleen Haydn Green. Music by Henry Gibson.

From the green heart of the waters. Words by Stephen Phillips. Music by S. Coleridge-Taylor.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The first two of the above three-part songs are laid out for first and second soprano and contralto. 'Out of the Darkness' might have been entitled 'Contrast,' the first verse dealing with night, and the second with the dawn of day. The scheme of the text is enforced by the music, the two verses being respectively in E minor and E major, and in melodic and other respects being designed to effectually accentuate the portrayal of darkness and light. The moral of the second part-song would seem to be that love comes from everywhere, but more particularly from the North and the South. Here again an effective contrast is presented, of which good use has been made by the composer. Love from the North comes in three parts, but love from the South in two, being only concerned with the first and second sopranos, but all the voices agree in the statement that 'love flies at will.' Towards the close there is some simple and very effective part-writing showing skilled musicianship.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's part-song will be remembered by those who attended the production at Her Majesty's Theatre of Mr. Phillips's 'Ulysses,' for it was one of the most charming numbers of the incidental music to the play. It is in three vocal parts, and was sung at the opening of the second act by the nymphs on Calypso's island. The accompaniment will require a little practice from ordinary pianoforte players, but will well repay any trouble it may entail.

O how amiable. Full Anthem, for four voices. Composed by Eaton Fanning.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Dr. Fanning always writes in sympathy with his choristers, and the grateful character of the vocal parts is the distinguishing feature of his anthem 'O how amiable.' The work will present no difficulties to ordinary choirs, and the entrances in imitation are ingeniously devised to secure the maximum of effect with the minimum of difficulty.

Correspondence.

HANDEL'S 'MESSIAH.'

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to make a suggestion with regard to a new edition of the 'Messiah'?

When, in 1894, I had occasion to carefully consult most of the existing authorities (MS. and otherwise) on the 'Messiah,' I was much struck with the extraordinary differences existing in the various copies; so much so, that I contemplated publishing a critical full-score edition of the work, adding copious notes and explanations of the many variants to be found in each of the authorities consulted.

On consideration I felt that I might possibly tread upon the toes of the late Dr. Chrysander. Now, Sir, an ordinary toe is bad enough to stamp upon, but the effect of such on an enthusiastic toe is too dreadful to contemplate. Therefore I did not proceed, but waited for the Chrysander edition to be published. It is now out, and, I am grieved to say, terribly disappointing in the way it is done.

Therefore I should like to suggest that a full score of the great work be published, making the autograph and a few (I think about two only) of the Foundling parts the groundwork of the score, adding all the varieties and differences existing in the various MSS. and other works of information of unquestionable authority. I only know of twelve such authorities at present; probably you, Sir, or somebody else know of many more. Of course, a full account would be given of all works consulted. I am firmly convinced that such a thorough critical edition would be highly acceptable, because it is greatly wanted.

Yours faithfully,

King's Field, Cambridge.

A. H. MANN.

AN AYR INSTRUMENT.

SIR,—The Burgh records of Ayr state that in 1583, 'The maester of the Sang Schooll shall instruct the youth in singing and playing on the "pynattis" and other instruments, etc.' Can you inform me what sort of instrument this was?—Yours faithfully, H. G.

[We have submitted the inquiry of our correspondent to an expert in Edinburgh, through the friendly offices of Professor Niecks, and he is of opinion that the word is 'Spynattis' (Spinets = spinet). The initial letter 'S' has very likely been taken for a flourish to the 'P,' hence the odd designation 'pynattis.'—Ed. M.T.]

Mr. E. G. Mercer, organist of St. Michael's Church, Chester Square, has been appointed acting-organist of Carlisle Cathedral.

THE CORONATION CHOIR DINNER.

A dinner in honour of Sir Frederick Bridge, M.V.O., Director of Music at the Coronation and Organist of Westminster Abbey, and given in commemoration of the Coronation Service, took place at the Holborn Restaurant on November 28. Mr. George Wyndham, M.P., presided, and those present included Viscount Knutsford, Earl Lytton, Mr. W. Johnson Galloway, M.P., Sir Hubert H. Parry, Bart., Colonel Bagot, M.P., Mr. Stuart Wortley, M.P., Mr. Ian Malcolm, M.P., the Precentor of Westminster Abbey, Canon Duckworth, Sir G. C. Martin, Sir Charles Stanford, the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton, C.B., Mr. A. K. Hitchens, Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, Mr. Augustus Littleton, Dr. J. C. Bridge (Chester), Dr. E. H. Turpin, Mr. John R. Clayton, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, Mr. C. Mylne Barker, and nearly 200 members of the Coronation Choir.

Letters of regret had been received from the Duke of Argyll, the Prime Minister, the Earl Marshal, the Dean of Westminster, Sir Walter Parratt, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Dr. Saint-Saëns, and others who were unavoidably prevented from being present.

Byrd's Grace 'Non nobis Domine,' having been most impressively rendered by the whole of the company after dinner, the chairman proposed the health of the King; this was followed by a similar tribute of loyalty to the Queen and the other Members of the Royal Family.

The Chairman, in proposing the toast of Sir Frederick Bridge, said that the number of persons who had been reluctantly compelled to absent themselves was so large that the tribute paid to Sir Frederick was much greater than was indicated by the size of the gathering. In the course of the afternoon Mr. Balfour said to him, 'I wish I could be there; please convey to all who are present my affectionate regard, and express my regret for my absence.' It would have been more in accordance with the fitness of things that the Prime Minister should have occupied the Chair, but after all it was not so unfitting that someone should preside, not as a musician, but in the capacity of a fellow-citizen, who felt, as all who were in the Abbey at the Coronation Service felt, how great, how moving, how necessary was the part played by music on the gravest and most exalted occasions of a nation's life. Such occasions left a deep impression on their minds, and led to an association of ideas between three things—in the first place, music, of which Sir Frederick Bridge was the exponent; in the second place, those immemorial fanes; and, in the third place, the great occasions of national mourning or national rejoicing. In regard to their honoured guest he would say that the material cause for this dinner was the whole career of Sir Frederick Bridge.

Sir Frederick Bridge, who was most heartily received on rising to respond, declared that in organising this festival they had been moved by a desire to do something to show their gratitude and joy at being able to take a part in making the Coronation Service successful, both as Englishmen and as musicians. The Choir and Conductor were glad to have an opportunity of placing on record their delight and satisfaction at finding that their efforts had been so highly appreciated. Cathedral choirs had left a mark on the history of music. It was their schools which had enabled him to make that selection for the Coronation Service which had met with such universal approval. If he took credit to himself for anything, it was for having been able to make a selection of music which covered centuries of time, and included the names of Tallis, Gibbons, Henry Purcell, Croft, Handel, Wesley, Arthur Sullivan, John Stainer, Hubert Parry, Walter Parratt, and Charles Villiers Stanford. He had been anxious that the Coronation Service of the English King should be done justice to, and should be made glorious, if possible, by the compositions of English musicians. But they could not forget also those admirable contributions from foreign musicians which lent a glory and splendour to the great processions which music had made to go so well. He was well served by musicians; how well served he was by the Choir he would let their own consciences say. Whatever they did individually, collectively they made a very fine effect.

Some of them went there with an idea of seeing all they could, but he thought their tricks had been trumped pretty well in that direction: Their natural feelings as musicians and their patriotism as Englishmen at the last moment prevented them staring at the processions. They tried to look at the conductor, though many of them failed, because the organ was in the way. It was an advantage, indeed, that many of them were in the habit of singing without a conductor, and had been trained for emergencies to take up an 'Amen' that the parson could not intone, and to take up the right note when the parson had given them the wrong one. He had tried for some time to be discreet and dull in his after-dinner speeches, but it seemed he did not succeed, and certainly should not make the attempt now. He had been inundated with applications from people who had desired to sit in the Choir. One lady wrote: 'Can I bring my dear mother into the organ loft? She has never seen a Coronation, and I should like to give her that treat before she dies.' Several gentlemen wrote to say that they were accustomed to sing at coronations and jubilees with efficiency and punctuality.

He had been looking into the financial accounts of old Coronation Services, and found that everybody was paid; some exceedingly well. That was quite different from the present case. Many of the Choir came from great distances, and paid their own expenses. A grateful country would not complain of that! At the Service they played every note they intended to perform, and Sir Hubert Parry had the unique experience of having his anthem encored, owing to some mistake of the officials in giving the signal of the arrival of the procession. Such an event had never occurred before, and if only the delay could have been foreseen, he should have asked Sir Hubert to write a longer anthem than he had contributed. It was expressly laid on him to keep the music short; indeed, he was prepared to omit a portion of his own anthem, but Lord Esher brought a note from the King saying this was not to be done. His Majesty desired that all the music arranged for should be performed, and therefore every note was sung at the ceremony in August that had been prepared for the postponed June service. It seemed to him that the Chairman must have been mainly impressed with the trumpets and drums to which he had referred; at any rate he had said nothing about the special anthem he (Sir Frederick) had written for the great occasion. He thought that rather too bad. All the same, he gloried in the trumpets and drums, for he had noticed at the Jubilee Thanksgiving Service for Queen Victoria what a splendid effect the four State trumpeters created, and he determined this time to augment their number, so he got some of the young persons in training at the Government School of Military Music at Kneller Hall. They came and blew fanfares in the Abbey till they nearly drove wild the workmen engaged in the Abbey; but happily he attained the effect desired, and the grandeur of this notable brass was a feature of the music never to be forgotten. 'I myself tried those trumpets at the outset,' the merry speaker continued, 'and the Clerk of the Works came to me and said, "If you don't stop that row we shall have to do something. You are stopping all the men working, and it means a loss of £5 a minute."'

Some of them might think he knew very little about the brass, but he begged to say that as a boy in the Rochester Volunteers he played a second cornet. He remembered that he saw Queen Victoria for the first time at a review in Hyde Park, but for some reason he could never understand his band was not allowed to play! Perhaps the Bandmaster of the Coldstreams was jealous. At any rate, he claimed to know something of the brass, and he had used it to good effect. In conclusion, Sir Frederick said he should never forget this great honour which had been done him, and he begged to tender a grateful and warm tribute of thanks for the cordial assistance he had received from the musicians, the Choir, his assistants, the Secretaries, Lord Esher, the English Cathedral School of Music, the Master of the King's Music, the King's Band, and all those with whom he was brought into relation in connection with the Coronation Service. He incidentally remarked that the beautiful design of the cover of the music edition of the Coronation Service was drawn specially by Mr. John R. Clayton, who also designed the special card of invitation to this dinner.

The toast of 'The Visitors' was proposed by the Rev. H. C. Daniell-Bainbridge, the Precentor of the Abbey, and responded to by the Rev. Canon Duckworth, the Sub-Dean, who created some amusement by telling the company that Sir Frederick's name and fame must be known far away, for once when on a tour in the south of Europe he was asked how 'Westminster Bridge was?' He really thought that it meant the structure that spanned the Thames, instead of a local distinction between the Abbey organist and his brother at Chester.

Sir Hubert Parry also responded, and in the course of his speech told an excellent story in relation to the remarks made by the Chairman in regard to the incapacity of Tennyson to appreciate music. Sir Hubert said he once heard the old Poet Laureate remark, 'They say Browning must be a musician because he has written on Music. Well, there is no music in his verse; but there is music in mine!'

Mr. Wyndham in replying to the toast of his health—proposed by Mr. W. J. Galloway, M.P.—said how glad he was to have been present, and take a part on so memorable an occasion. He thought Sir Frederick had attributed to him too much fondness for the trumpets and drums; perhaps that was to counterbalance his own failure to sound the keyed-bugle!

Thanks were given to Mr. Henry King, the Hon. Secretary, for his valuable help in making the successful arrangements, and in the course of the evening Mr. Watkin Mills sang very finely two songs by Handel, accompanied by Mr. J. H. Maunder.

Sir Frederick Bridge has presented all those who took part in the music at the Coronation Service with a handsome booklet commemorating that event. It is a reprint from the article which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of September last, which contains a list of the orchestra, chorus, and those who assisted. A photograph of Westminster Abbey, as prepared for the Coronation, forms the frontispiece of this Coronation memento.

'EIN HELDENLEBEN.'

We have had to wait patiently for the latest and most characteristic of the tone-poems of Richard Strauss. 'A Hero's Life' was produced on March 3, 1899, at Frankfurt, but only performed in England for the first time at Queen's Hall on the 6th ult., also under the composer's direction. When Wagner's music first became known, many shook their heads and declared that a great man had gone wrong; that his music was extravagant, and for the most part incomprehensible. Something of the same kind is now taking place with regard to Strauss, but as the latter has written no polemical pamphlets, neither so far as we are aware stirred up anger by hard remarks concerning his contemporaries, his art-career is being watched and criticised with fair philosophical calm.

'Ein Heldenleben' is clear in outline, but there is so much detail in it, that from a first hearing only a general though a strong impression can be gathered. There are many themes in the work, and much elaborate polyphonic writing; in addition there are strange and at times harsh harmonies, to the novelty of which the ear must grow accustomed before the true effect of the music can be gauged. The history of the art has shown over and over again that what is new is at first condemned as bizarre and extravagant, but afterwards accepted as the hall-mark of genius; hence the necessity for caution in pronouncing judgment. There is, however, enough clear, broad music in 'Heldenleben' to induce musicians to trust Strauss even where as yet they cannot follow him. All, except prejudiced musicians, must feel that they are under the influence of a strong composer.

Strauss in previous works has given music which seems to require the aid of a written programme; and yet those which from time to time have been furnished have never, we believe, received the direct sanction of the composer. For the 'Heldenleben,' however, one such has been issued. An 'explanatory analysis' has been supplied by Herr Friedrich Rösch. So far as it helps us to understand the musical structure it is welcome, but the explanation of the poetic basis seems to us to halt between realism and idealism. The brief explanation 'given by the author himself,' which serves as a kind of text, is reasonable enough, yet does not appear to us sufficient for the music with its many themes and suddenly changing moods. The score, however, has been published, even without the author's explanation just mentioned. Does he, then, think the music sufficient in itself, or, to use the hackneyed expression, satisfactory as abstract music? That is the question which must present itself to thoughtful minds.

The production of 'Heldenleben' was an event of no small importance. Among modern works for orchestra it occupies a prominent place. Exceptional skill, wonderful tone-colouring,—for Strauss is past-master in the art of orchestration—and broad, beautiful themes, are features which can be at once recognised and felt; what lies below the surface will only gradually reveal its full power. The performance of the tone-poem was excellent, and the evocation bestowed on the composer-conductor at the close was of the most enthusiastic kind.

Mr. Henry J. Wood made his first appearance since his severe illness. He conducted Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and the reception accorded to the popular conductor was of the heartiest and sincerest nature. Madame Carreño gave a magnificent rendering of the solo part of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor.

THE DUAL THEORY IN HARMONY.

At the Musical Association meeting held on the 9th ult a paper with the above title was read by Mr. Herbert Westerby, Mus.Bac.

The lecturer in introducing the subject remarked that it was one which was practically unknown in this country; at the same time it was one which had claimed a good deal of attention on the Continent, its most powerful exponent being Professor Riemann, of Leipzig.

The essence of the Dual Theory lay in the double way of looking at the major common chord, which consisting as it did of a major and minor third was, when viewed downwards, identical with the construction of the minor triad in which of course the minor third came first, thus:—

Thus the minor triad was considered as a major triad turned upside down, and as the major third was at the top in the minor triad, the third itself became the starting point of the scale thus derived, as well as of the whole so-called phonic system.

This phonic or inverted system of harmony as artificially produced was not the minor system after all, as the scale on which it was based coincided exactly with the ancient Phrygian mode, i.e. :—

so that as an explanation it condemned itself. The raison d'être of the system as based principally upon the acoustical phenomena of undertones originated with Zarlino in 1558 and Tartini in 1754.

Hauptmann, while eschewing any acoustical support, thoroughly developed the whole system of dual derivation in a logical manner in his celebrated 'Nature of Harmony,' in 1853. Helmholtz in his 'Sensations of Tone' (1863) could not keep quite clear of acoustical derivation of harmony, and practically adopted Rameau's dual root theory of such chords as the minor triad and added sixth, basing them upon the overtones. Oettingen, however, in 1865, pointed out the inconsistency of leaving out the undertones and, pressing them

Dr. McNaught occupied the chair, and an interesting discussion followed the reading of a very thoughtful and learned discourse.

Much talent and skill were in evidence at the concert given by the Royal Academy of Music at St. James's Hall on November 24, these attributes being particularly noticeable in two movements from a sonata in B, minor for violin and pianoforte by Mr. York Bowen, and in the first movement of a pianoforte trio by Mr. Benjamin J. Dale. The former, effectively rendered by Miss Margaret S. Holloway and the composer, proved graceful, expressive, and spirited music that testifies to a lively imagination, appreciation of contrast, and considerable skill in thematic development. The executants in the trio were Miss Ivy Angove, Mr. L. Horton, and Mr. Hubert Bath, who gave a neat and intelligent reading of the cleverly-written music. The performance of Haydn's String Quartet in G, by the Misses Angove, G. Baker, E. Wingfield, and Mr. B. W. O'Donnell was also an excellent example of ensemble playing. The most successful of the vocalists were Miss Caroline Hatchard, the possessor of a pure high soprano voice, and Miss Mary T. Wilson, a promising young mezzo-soprano.

The concert at the Queen's Hall on the 19th ult. possessed exceptional interest. It opened with a cleverly-written and attractive overture entitled 'The Tempest' by Mr. Benjamin J. Dale who, in this achievement, still further justifies the favourable opinions called forth by his previous efforts. It was succeeded by the first performance in England of the initial movement of a pianoforte concerto in B flat minor (Op. 66), by Signor Giuseppe Martucci, in which the solo part was played with conspicuous ability by Miss W. Hooke. Two first performances in London were given of Mr. F. Cliffe's fine scena 'Alcestis' for contralto and orchestra, and Dr. Cowen's effective 'Coronation Ode,' both these compositions having formed part of the scheme of the recent Norwich Festival. The vocalists in the respective works were Miss Florence J. Hoole and Miss Ida Kahn, who justified the confidence placed in them. Mention is also due of the able playing of Mr. Claude Gascoigne in M. Saint-Saëns's fifth pianoforte concerto in F (Op. 103). Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted as usual.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The performance of Beethoven's 'Fidelio' by the students on November 25 at His Majesty's Theatre was most praiseworthy, especially with regard to Miss Nannie Tout, who at short notice appeared in the name-part, owing to the indisposition of Miss Kate Anderson. Miss Tout is only seventeen years of age, and under the conditions it would not be fair to criticise her embodiment. Naturally it lacked much, but it was extremely interesting as an exhibition of talent, intuitive dramatic perception, and youthful courage. Her pronunciation betrayed that she is an American cousin; but she has a fine voice, and from the training she is sure to receive at the College, much may be expected from her in the future. Miss Florence MacNaughton as Marcellina sang prettily, and evinced aptitude for light comedy. Mr. Putnam Griswold was excellent as Rocco, the clearness of his enunciation being specially commendable. Mr. Seth Hughes as Jacquino and Mr. Albert Garcia as Don Pizarro acted and sang intelligently, and the cast was completed by Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Aubrey Millward, who appeared respectively as Florestan and Don Fernando. As usual at these performances the choral singing was an enjoyable feature, and the orchestra played with spirit and finish under the conductorship of Sir Charles V. Stanford.

The customary winter term orchestral concert took place in the fine Hall of the College on the 9th ult., and was distinguished by the first performance of a Symphony in C minor by Mr. Arthur Hinton. This work is laid out on orthodox lines, and testifies to a facile pen and good knowledge of modern scores of various schools. The work is genial in character, but lacks distinction, with the exception of the slow movement, which is dignified and expressive. The programme also contained a remarkably clever song of declamatory character for baritone and orchestra, entitled 'The Hag,' by Mr. Frank Bridge. It was effectively sung by Mr. Albert Garcia. Three soloists appeared, Miss Eva Hart, a promising young soprano, Mr. William Byles, a violinist of considerable attainment, and Miss Daisy Jones, who played with notable clearness and sympathy the solo part of Liszt's Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra in E minor. The programme opened with Wagner's Overture to the 'Flying Dutchman,' the interpretation of which, as well as the orchestral playing throughout the evening, testified to the skill of Sir Charles V. Stanford as a conductor and orchestral trainer of these enthusiastic young people.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The most notable feature of the orchestral concert given by the pupils of the Guildhall School of Music on the 10th ult. at the City of London School was the first production of a descriptive overture entitled 'In the Harz Mountains,' by Mr. Henry E. Geehl. This proved a praiseworthy achievement and one of great promise, considerable facility being shown in the development of the thematic material and an admirable appreciation of tone-colour and climax. It was, moreover, skilfully conducted by the composer. The remainder of the concert was directed by Mr. William H. Cummings, and included a meritorious interpretation of Brahms's Second Symphony, and movements from Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor, and Wieniawski's Second Violin Concerto, the solo parts in which were cleverly played by Miss Jenny Hyman and Miss Mary Law. The only vocalist was Miss Maude Kennedy, who may be encouraged to continue her studies.

RECENT CHORAL COMPETITIONS.

The fifth Henniker competition took place at Ipswich in November. The choral performance reached a high standard; the Ipswich Nonconformist Choir especially distinguished itself. The school choir singing was also highly satisfactory. The adult choirs united with an orchestra to perform 'Acis and Galatea.' Dr. McNaught adjudicated in the choral section, Mr. Lionel Tertis in the instrumental. Mr. Cunningham Woods, besides adjudicating in the solo section, conducted at the evening concert.

The fourth annual musical Festival was held at Barrow-in-Furness on the 20th, 21st, and 22nd ult. This event was the most successful of the series. In all there were about 1,500 competitors. The classes included violin, pianoforte, brass quartet playing, solo singing, and juvenile and adult choirs. In the chief choral class the Workington Glee Singers, under Mr. J. C. Harkness, gained the first place, beating so redoubtable a body of singers as the Morecambe Madrigal Society, under Mr. Howson. Both choirs sang the by no means easy test pieces—'My love dwelt in a northern land' (Elgar), 'Corydon, arise' (Stanford)—remarkably well. But Morecambe was victorious in two other sections, in which they were pitted against Workington. The children's choirs exhibited excellent training. They united to perform 'The Waits of Bremen' (Luard Selby), and the adult choirs gave a performance of 'The Feast of Adonis' (Jensen). Dr. McNaught adjudicated at all the competitions, and conducted the evening concerts.

A concert and male-voice choir competition, organised on behalf of the St. David's Welsh Church, Paddington, took place in the Queen's Hall on the 27th ult. Miss Maggie Davies, Mr. D. Ffrangcon Davies, and Mr. John Thomas, the well-known harpist, were among the artists who appeared. The interest centred upon the competition of the choirs that came from Cardiff, Swansea (2), Southport, Oxford, Ealing, and North London (Mr. Munro Davison's choir). The test pieces were 'The long day closes' (Sullivan), and 'The Word went forth' (Mendelssohn), from the 'Festgesang.' The only prize was £50 in cash and a gold medal value seven guineas. The Southport Choral Union, under Mr. Clarke, was unmistakably the best choir. They excelled not only in beauty of tone and technical execution, but also in depth and breadth of expression. The Cardiff Choir came second, and the Oxford Glee Union third. Dr. McNaught and Mr. William Davies (of St. Paul's Cathedral Choir) adjudicated.

The subject of competitions in general is referred to on page 19.

The first system of the musical score for 'Weep No More'. It consists of four vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts are in G major (one sharp) and 4/4 time. The lyrics are: 'gain, Sor-row calls no time that's gone, Vio-lets; gain, Weep no more, Sor-row calls no time that's gone, Vio-; gain, Weep no more, nor sigh, nor groan, . . . Sor-row calls no time that's gone, . . Vio-lets; gain, Weep no more, nor sigh, nor groan, Sor-row calls no time that's gone, Vio-lets. The piano accompaniment features a steady eighth-note pattern in the right hand and a more complex bass line in the left hand.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

THE MUSICAL TIMES is the oldest English journal devoted to music and musicians; moreover, its existence has exceeded that of any other musical journal issued, or that has ever been issued, in this country. Founded in the year 1844, it first appeared in the form of a modest sheet of eight pages; but in the intervening fifty-eight years it has, like Topsy, "grewed," and every issue now consists of seventy-two pages.

Quantity, however, is not the summum bonum of a musical journal—quality should occupy the first place. If the quality test can be put to the proof by mentioning the names of contributors, THE MUSICAL TIMES has no reason to fear the result. The following are some of the writers during recent years:—

C. A. Barry, Joseph Bennett, Vernon Blackburn, Rev. Francis L. Cohen, Frederick Corder, Henry Coward, F. H. Cowen, W. H. Cummings, W. H. Hadow, Edward Heron-Allen, A. J. Hipkins, Arthur Johnstone, A. Kalisch, H. E. Krehbiel, Otto Lessmann, Robin Legge, J. A. Fuller Maitland, W. G. McNaught, Eusebius Mandyczewski, F. Niecks, Ebenezer Prout, W. Barclay Squire, J. S. Shedlock, J. F. R. Stainer, Franklin Taylor, Herbert Thompson and F. Gilbert Webb.

Biography has been made a special feature during the past five years. Upwards of fifty biographical sketches, with special supplement portraits, have appeared since July, 1897. These articles have been received with much favour both at home and abroad, and in Britain beyond the seas. English and foreign musicians of eminence, contemporary and bygone, have been included in this large gallery of MUSICAL TIMES Biographical Sketches: the subjoined list of names speaks for itself.

Illustrations have become an important and almost indispensable adjunct of present-day periodicals. This much appreciated feature has of late been considerably developed in the pages of THE MUSICAL TIMES. A series of articles on English Cathedral and College Chapels has furnished scope for the pictorial embellishment of the descriptive matter relating to these interesting subjects. This Cathedral series will be continued, and also the articles on important musical libraries, public and private.

The survey under the heading Church and Organ Music has been greatly extended. The aim has been to provide matter that shall be both interesting and of practical helpfulness to those who officiate in "Quires and places where they sing" and play.

The old-established characteristics of THE MUSICAL TIMES have been brought up to date. The "Occasional Notes," or leaderettes—as they are sometimes fancifully termed—cover a wide range of subjects. The monthly letters of such distinguished writers as Mr. H. E. Krehbiel, of New York, and Dr. Eusebius Mandyczewski, of Vienna, need no commendation; and the periodical records of music-makings in various centres of musical activity are supplied by the leading writers on music in the Provinces. A somewhat new feature, and one that is steadily growing in usefulness, is the section headed "Answers to Correspondents." No pains will be spared in furnishing satisfactory replies to the questions asked, even though the interrogations be, as they often are, posers.

Reference may be made to the music—anthems or part-songs—appearing month by month, and to other well-known features of this old-established journal. THE MUSICAL TIMES has a large circle of friends and well-wishers in various parts of the world; and the many gratifying tokens of appreciation that are constantly being received, not only by letter but by frequent quotation in the Press, act as a stimulus to the Editor to increase the brightness of its pages and to make the paper more acceptable in the future even than in the past.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The only Saturday afternoon concert calling for notice took place on the 13th ult., when the programme was devoted entirely to music by M. Paderewski, who played with his wonted brilliancy in his Concerto in A minor and Polish Fantasia. The remainder of the afternoon was occupied with excerpts from his opera 'Manru,' originally produced at Dresden on May 29 of last year. The piece selected from the first act was the bright and glittering ballet music. From the second act were taken the scenes in which Manru gives expression to his desire to return to gipsy life, as the heroine Udana sings a tender cradle-song to their child, and the love duet which follows Manru's drinking a love potion given him by his wife to re-kindle his fading affection for her. The cradle-song and the duet were the most satisfactory portions presented on this occasion. They are melodious and refined, but neither strong nor distinctive. From the third act was selected the Prelude and Incidental music, illustrative of a summer storm and Manru's perturbed state of mind, and a spirited and brilliantly scored Gipsy march. The solo parts were dramatically sung by Mr. John Coates and Fräulein Krull, the original exponent of Udana, and the orchestral portion was effectively rendered under the direction of Mr. Alberto Randegger.

The first concert of the Crystal Palace Amateur Orchestral Society's third season took place on the 6th ult. The orchestra was supplemented by the Crystal Palace Choir, which sang Sir J. F. Bridge's 'The Flag of England,' under the direction of the composer. Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, who has succeeded Mr. August Manns as conductor to the Society, is to be congratulated upon the excellence of the concert. Miss Helen Jaxon was the solo vocalist.

London and Suburban Concerts.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

There is to record at these concerts, now held fortnightly and entirely given up to foreign music, the first production on November 29 of a sextet in B minor for pianoforte and strings, by Herr Felix von Weingartner, who played the pianoforte part. The work is not strong music, but it shows independence of thought, ingenuity in securing bright effects, and adeptness in part-writing. The first two movements are the most attractive. On the 13th ult. a sonata for pianoforte and violin in C minor by Hermann Grädener was brought forward, and proved pleasing and scholarly, if somewhat conventional. It was well interpreted by Mr. Borwick and Mr. Kruse.

The first performance in London of a pianoforte trio in F sharp minor (Op. 79) by Herr Constantin Sternberg deserves record, for it is a pleasing and tersely-developed work. It opened Mr. Newlandsmith's chamber concert on the 11th ult. at Bechstein Hall, and was played by Miss Evelyn Suart, Mr. William Southworth, and the concert-giver.

Three vocal recitals at St. James's Hall obtained distinction by the production of new artistic music. That of Mr. Francis Harford on November 27, who brought forward six new songs, the best of which were 'The Phantom Lover,' by Mr. W. Y. Hurlstone, and 'Stars of the Summer night,' by Dr. Ernest Walker. Mr. Campbell McInnes, on the evening of the same day, sang for the first time a cycle entitled 'A Lover's Moods,' by Mr. C. A. Lidgey, clever settings of well-selected poems; and on the 2nd ult. Mr. Frederick Keel introduced at Miss Eldina Bligh's concert 'Four Elizabethan Lyrics' of his own composition.

On the 9th ult. was played by Miss Hester Sloman, at her concert at Bechstein Hall, an attractive pianoforte sonata in G minor by M. Felix Borowski. The last two movements are specially clever and attractive.

Other performances meriting record by reason of their artistic value are the pianoforte recitals given at Bechstein Hall by Signor Busoni on November 26 and the 3rd ult., and by Madame Carreño on the 8th ult., the violin recitals by Herr Kreisler at St. James's Hall on the 3rd and 12th ult., the pianoforte duet recital by Messrs. Borwick and Tovey on the 5th ult., and the chamber concert given by M. Ysaye, Signor Busoni and Madame Calvert on the 15th ult. at Queen's Hall.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Sullivan's 'Ivanhoe' at the Crystal Palace on the evening of the 13th ult., when a satisfactory rendering of this beautiful work was secured by the painstaking conductor, Mr. Arthur Fagge, the choir singing as usual in such a manner as to indicate thorough training. The solo vocalists were the Hon. Margaret Henniker, Miss Ida Soldi, Miss Jenny Atkinson, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, Mr. Henry Plevy, Mr. Meurig James, Mr. Charles Copland, Mr. Frederick Ranalow, and Mr. Arthur Winckworth.

Thanks to the enterprise of Mr. James Brown, Richmond can boast of an entirely new Musical Society entitled 'The New Philharmonic Society,' which made its first appearance in the Castle Theatre on the 10th ult., and at once justified its claims to recognition by an excellent performance of Gade's 'Erl King's Daughter' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.' These were the chief features of a programme which included Stanford's 'Shamus O'Brien' Overture and German's 'Henry VIII.' dances. Both choir and orchestra worked together with zeal, and Mr. Brown again proved himself an excellent conductor.

The members of Munro Davison's Male-Voice Choir gave an Invitation Concert at the Camden Athenæum on the 15th ult., when the pieces contributed by the choir were Mendelssohn's motets, 'To the sons of Art' and 'The word went forth'; glees, 'In the pleasant summer day' (Beale), 'Beauties, have you seen' (C. S. Evans); part-songs, 'The love spell' (Evison) and 'The long day closes' (Sullivan).

'The Prince of Peace,' a sacred cantata composed by Mr. Colin McAlpin, was performed for the first time on the 17th ult. by the members of the Choir and Musical Association at Trinity Presbyterian Church, Clapham Road (of which the composer is organist and choir-master). The work, set for chorus and soprano, tenor and bass solos, is pleasing and melodious, and the scholarly character of the writing is apparent throughout. The soloists—Miss Edith Caney (soprano), Mr. Henry Turnpenney (tenor), and Mr. Donald McHardy (bass)—sang the music allotted to them with great expression and feeling, and the choir, under the skilful guidance of the conductor, Mr. Henry Beauchamp, acquitted themselves admirably, the rendering of the 'March to Calvary' being especially dramatic and impressive. Mr. McAlpin presided at the organ with marked ability.

The Manor Park Vocal and Orchestral Society gave a performance of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' in the Methodist Free Church on the 2nd ult. The choir sang with good expression and attack, and the orchestra was also efficient. The solo vocalists were Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Gertrude Macaulay, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, and Mr. Bernard Fountain. Mr. Bernard Long was the organist, and Mr. F. W. Long conducted.

The Stephen Memorial Hall Choral Society, Finchley, gave a successful performance of 'St. John's Eve' (Cowen) and a miscellaneous selection on the 11th ult. The soloists were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Agnes Jackson, Mr. Arthur Crowe, and Mr. Leonard Willson. A small band supplied the accompaniments. Mr. G. H. Powell conducted.

The scheme of the Wagner Festival performances to take place at the Prinzregenten Theatre at Munich in 1903 has just been issued. The five cycles of representations will be given between August 8 and September 14, and the operas announced to be performed are 'Der Ring des Nibelungen,' 'Tristan,' 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Lohengrin,' and 'Tannhäuser.' Full particulars as to seats, &c., may be obtained from Messrs. Schenker and Co., 16, Promenadeplatz, Munich.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, December 9.

The United States of America still have, I believe, some friends in Great Britain despite occasional outbursts of Jingoism on both sides of the ocean. To them I send assurance that Mascagni will not embroil this country in a war with Italy. He has sought to make an international issue out of his artistic fiasco, but the governments of the two countries refuse to disturb themselves about his petty business, and the controversy scarcely begun is already ended. In the language of diplomacy the incident is closed. Signor Mascagni and his managers counted on a vast public curiosity concerning the man and his music, and were deceived. The management arrested Signor Mascagni under civil process for failure of contract and $8,000, money alleged to be due on advance payments, and the imbroglio began. The composer appealed to the representatives of his government in Boston, at Washington, and finally at Rome, only to learn that even the composer of 'Cavalleria Rusticana' was not above the law. Then some misguided or too sympathetic persons in Boston set the company temporarily on its feet for concert purposes, and it has since visited small towns, disgracing Mascagni, itself, and the art of music by its performances.

Our other foreign visitors are enjoying a season of happiness and prosperity. Madame Sembrich gave a series of a dozen song recitals in as many cities, including Toronto, before joining the operatic forces at the Metropolitan Opera House, and was everywhere successful. The pianists Pugno, Lamond, Gabrilowitsch, and Hamburg are dashing hither and thither between the Atlantic and the Mississippi River, adding to their fame and harvesting handsome earnings.

The principal concert orchestras of the country have begun their season's work, which will continue till next May. Undeterred by financial discouragements, the organisations in Chicago, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati are pursuing their campaigns, while the Boston orchestra has found firm footing in most of the cities to which it makes periodical visits. Philadelphia now gives generous patronage to two concerts a month, from November to March inclusive, and the subscription to the fifteen concerts given in two of the boroughs of New York City is this year larger than ever before. Mr. Theodore Thomas, in Chicago, is more enterprising than his colleagues in the production of novelties, having already given as many new works as he has concerts. I append a list of the novelties as a feature of American concert-activity which may have curious interest to my English readers:—

Chicago: d'Albert, overture 'Der Improvisator'; Humperdinck, 'Dornröschen'; Saint-Saëns, overture 'Les Barbares'; Beethoven, Rondino for wind instruments (Op. posth.); Sibeli, suite 'König Kristian II.'; Järnefelt, 'Korsholm'; Elgar, 'Pomp and Circumstance' marches; Cowen, overture 'The Butterfly's Ball'.

Boston: Huber, Symphony No. 2 ('Böcklin'); Rimsky-Korsakov, overture 'The Betrothed of the Tsar'; Suk, 'Ein Märchen'.

New York: Caetani, Symphonic Prologue No. 1; Weingartner, Symphony No. 2.

Cincinnati: Elgar, 'Sursum Corda'; Smetana, 'Sarka'.

Pittsburgh: Godard, suite 'Jocelyn' No. 1; Elgar, overture 'Cockaigne'; MacDowell, 'Indian Suite'; Massenet, suite 'Scenes Alsaciennes'.

Don Roffredo Caetani, whose symphonic prelude had its first performance in America at the first Philharmonic concert under Mr. Walter Damrosch, is a young Italian nobleman, whose music sounds as if he had been studying with Herr Humperdinck. It is understood that he is persona grata at the court of Wahnfried. His music failed to make a deep impression, though it gave evidence of great technical proficiency. Don Roffredo is the second son of the Duke of Sermoneta, and studied with Sgambati before he went to Germany. The regular subscription season of opera began in November. Since then the list has been devoted chiefly to Verdi's operas. There have already been seven performances of 'Otello,' 'Aida,' 'Traviata,' and 'Rigoletto.' There is but one new-comer among the Italian singers, Carlo Dani, a young tenor who hails last from Australia, and two new German tenors, Anthes of Dresden and Gerhäuser of Mannheim.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The third of the Halford Orchestral Concerts, given in the Town Hall on November 25, brought out Rutland Boughton's symphonic poem 'A Summer night,' a composition revealing charm and poetic feeling. Mr. G. H. Manton, our talented local pianist, was the soloist in Liszt's Concerto in E flat, and Mr. Sydney Poyser was successful as vocalist.—At the fourth concert on the 9th ult. Mr. Halford produced his own symphonic poem, 'Sintram,' a fantasy after 'La Motte fouqué.' It is an elaborate piece of work, admirably scored, and it created a desire to hear it again. Spohr's symphony 'The Consecration of Sound' was revived, and Lady Hallé was superb as the soloist in Bruch's violin concerto.

The Festival Choral Society's second concert took place in the Town Hall on November 27. Max Bruch's 'Lay of the Bell' and Horatio Parker's 'A Star song' constituted the programme. The new work was very well received. The vocal principals were Mesdames Emily Squire and Kirkby Lunn, and Messrs. Walter Hyde and Ivor Foster. Mr. Hyde is a local tenor, and his work was watched with the greatest interest. Mr. Perkins was the organist, and Dr. Sinclair conducted.—On the 4th ult. the City Choral Society gave a most interesting performance of Handel's 'Messiah,' adhering as closely as possible to the original score. The chorus numbered 350, and the band about ninety, but the whole force was only employed in the great choruses. The orchestra included eleven oboes and eight bassoons. For the recitatives and some solos the harpsichord was used, with violoncello and violone; Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch played the first, and Miss Mabel Johnson played the last-named of these instruments. The vocal soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. F. W. Beard conducted. There was a crowded hall, and many were unable to obtain admittance.

The Chamber Concert Society's second function, in the Masonic Hall on the 17th ult., introduced Miss Lillie Wormald to Birmingham. The lady, who is a finished vocalist, achieved a brilliant success. The chamber music performed comprised Mendelssohn's String Quartet in D (No. 1, Op. 44) and Mozart's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor, the executants being the Max Mossel String Quartet with Dr. Sinclair, pianist.—The Chamber Concert given by Miss Louie Scott in the Masonic Hall on the 3rd ult. was notable for the introduction of Bach's Trios (in C minor and G major), for clavier, flute, and violin. These were finely played by Miss Scott, Mr. Fransella, and Mr. Jasper Sutcliffe. Mrs. Helen Trust was the vocalist.

The Johannessen historical chamber concerts have been continued weekly at the Temperance Hall. Music from the time of Emanuel Bach to Spohr and Schubert has formed the programmes.

A multitude of concerts must be dealt with briefly. Mr. F. W. Beard, with a band of 100, gave a Wagner selection in the Town Hall at the end of November. Popular prices and an attractive programme drew an immense audience. On the 15th ult. the Amateur Orchestral Society, now under Mr. Bantock, gave a concert at the Midland Institute. The programme included Mozart's Overture 'Idomeneo,' Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, and Dvorák's Suite in D minor (Op. 39). Mr. Frederic Austin made a most successful début here as a baritone vocalist. At the Institute School of Music the Students' Orchestral Concert was held on the 13th ult. The band played Schubert's Overture in B flat, and Haydn's 'Bear' Symphony; and Miss Ethel M. Thomas was the soloist in Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor. Vocal pieces were rendered by Miss Amy Kendal and Mr. W. J. Othey. The whole went extremely well under Mr. Bantock's able direction. Mr. Harold Ketelbey, a former student, now a teacher in the school, has been giving recitals of Bach's Sonatas for violin alone. These have been highly appreciated by the students. On the 16th ult. Mr. S. S. Stratton concluded the first series of a special course of lectures on the History of Music. To these, non-students are admitted.

Mr. W. Sewell's male-voice choir performed on November 28 Gounod's second 'Messe des Orphéonistes' and a miscellaneous selection. Bare mention only can be made of the East Birmingham Choral Society's performance of Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty' at the Temperance Hall on the 3rd ult., Mr. Joseph H. Adams, conductor; the Choral Union concert of the 6th ult.—Haydn's 'Creation'—under the direction of Mr. T. Facer; the St. Ambrose Choral Society the same evening performed Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner,' Mr. H. S. Williams conducting; and the Moseley Choral Society's concert of the 12th ult., when Mr. Berridge Hicks directed the performance of a selection from 'St. Paul,' and 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast.' The musical matinées at the rooms of the Society of Artists, directed by Mr. Oscar Pollack, were brought to a close on the 6th ult.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On the 4th ult. the first of the second season of the Bristol Quartet concerts was held at the Victoria Rooms, the players being Mr. Bertram Fletcher (first violin), Miss Evelyn Trotman (second violin), Miss Elaine Griffin (viola), and Mr. R. le Duc Bucknall (violin-cello). There were agreeable renderings of Mozart's Quartet in D minor and Mendelssohn's Quartet in D major (Op. 44). Mr. Bertram Fletcher played effectively Bach's Chaconne in D minor.

Miss Amy Riseley, niece of the well-known conductor, gave her annual concert on the 4th ult. at Redland Park Hall. Her pianoforte pieces were nicely played and well received. She was assisted by Mr. Maurice Alexander (violin), and Miss Bessie Woodward and Mr. S. Bennett (vocalists). The accompanist was Mr. G. Herbert Riseley.

The most recently formed musical association in the city—Bristol North Choral Society—held its first concert at the Victoria Rooms on the 7th ult., and the performance was very satisfactory. The programme consisted of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and a miscellaneous selection, the principal vocalists being Miss Maggie Purvis and Mr. G. W. Brierley. There was a band, with Mr. F. S. Gardner holding the principal first violin. Band and choir numbered about 300 performers. Mr. C. W. Stear was at the organ, and Mr. James Bending conducted.

The annual concert of the Æolian Male-Voice Choir took place on the 10th ult. at the Hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. F. H. Simpson succeeding Mr. G. Sleight as conductor. There was an excellent interpretation of glees and, in addition to pieces by the choir, songs were contributed by Miss Eveline Gerrish and Miss Clara Aldersley.

A crowded audience assembled at Colston Hall on the 13th ult., when the Bristol Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, gave a performance of the 'Messiah.' The soloists were Madame Sobrino, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Daniel Price. Mr. H. Lewis held the principal first violin, and Mr. G. Herbert Riseley was at the organ.

The Clevedon Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook, gave a concert at the Public Hall on the 3rd ult. Parts 1 and 2 of Haydn's 'Creation' and some portions of Sir Arthur Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' were creditably presented. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Ernest Peel-Law, and Mr. A. Trowbridge. Mr. F. S. Gardner led a small band, chiefly of Bristol players.

At the concert of the Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society held on the 10th ult. in the New Pavilion, Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Dr. Elgar's Coronation Ode were performed. The soloists were Miss De Berna, Miss Barker, Mr. J. Ripley and Mr. Montague Worlock. Mr. Edward Cook was conductor, and the band was that of the Bath Pump-room orchestra, led by Mr. Max Heyman.

The first of the Clifton Chamber Concerts was given on the 15th ult. at the Victoria Rooms, the executants being Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Mr. Hubert Hunt (first violin), Mr. Maurice Alexander (second violin), Mr. Ernest Lane (viola), and Mr. Percy Lewis (violin-cello). Mr. Arthur Walenn was the vocalist. The compositions presented were 'Prospice' (Dr. Walford Davies), Mozart's Quartet in C major, and Dvorák's Quintet in A (Op. 81). Mr. Parsons played Liszt's Sonata in B minor.

Mr. Harry A. Darbey gave a violin recital at the Victoria Rooms on the 1st ult., displaying marked ability and excellent technique, especially in Beethoven's Violin Concerto and Bach's Chaconne in D minor. His capabilities as a composer were also shown in a MS. Sonata in E minor. Mr. Darbey was ably assisted by Miss Kathleen Applin (pianoforte), and songs were contributed by Miss Emily C. Nash and Mr. Sidney Bennett.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Musical Society gave two miscellaneous concerts on November 24 and 26, at which Madame Albani, Lady Hallé, and Mr. Santley appeared. The choir of the Society sang in Gounod's 'Gallia' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' with Madame Albani, in Gounod's 'By Babylon's wave' with Mr. Charles Kelly, and a Handel chorus. Mr. John Horan was the organist, and Dr. Joseph Smith conducted.

On November 21 the Dublin Orchestral Society gave the first of a series of five Afternoon Concerts. The principal item of the programme was Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the solo part of which was magnificently played by Mr. Sigmund Beel, the distinguished American violinist. Signor Esposito conducted as usual, and the programme included two works from his own pen—an Irish Rhapsody for Violin and Orchestra and his Irish Symphony which gained a prize at the 'Feis Ceoil' of last May.

The Chamber Music Union, at their recital on November 22, played for the first time in Dublin Dvorák's string quartet in F, and Schumann's quintet. The performers were Mr. Sigmund Beel, first violin, who played Bach's 'Chaconne,' Mr. P. Delany, second violin, Mons. Grisard, viola, Mr. Clyde Twelvetees, violin-cello, and Signor Esposito, pianoforte.

Mr. Gordon Cleather and Mrs. Helen Trust gave an interesting song recital on the 15th ult., which included a large number of novelties. Mr. Hamilton Harty played the accompaniments. Mr. Gordon Cleather was professor of singing in the Royal Irish Academy of Music for some years before he settled in London.

The Orpheus Choral Society, under the conductorship of Dr. J. C. Culwick, gave their first concert of the season on the 2nd ult. The pieces sung by the choir included two Irish melodies arranged by Dr. Jozé. Miss Rosalie Benson, Mr. Melfort D'Alton and Mr. Clyde Twelvetees (violin-cello) were the soloists, and Dr. Jozé accompanied.

On the 3rd ult. the Kingstown Choral Society performed Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and a miscellaneous selection, under the conductorship of Mr. Thomas Marchant.

The College Choral Society gave a good performance of Gade's 'Psyche' in the Examination Hall of Trinity College on the 5th ult. Miss Agnes Treacy and Mr. Melfort D'Alton were the soloists. In the absence of an orchestra, the accompaniments were played on the pianoforte by Mr. C. W. Wilson. Mr. Charles Marchant conducted.

The following awards have recently been made at the Royal Academy of Music: the R.A.M. Club Prize (for organ playing) to Margaret Kennedy (London); the Sainton-Dolby Prize (for contraltos) to Gwladys Roberts (Llanelli); and the Rutson Memorial Prize (for sopranos) to Edith C. Patching (Worthing).

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Only with the advent of the Paterson Orchestral Concerts may our musical season be said to be in full swing, in spite of the fact that the number of concerts given here since October has been absolutely without precedent. Some natural anxiety doubtless existed in musical circles as to whether the band which Dr. Cowen had gathered would maintain the admirable traditions and achievements of former seasons, but all doubts have been set at rest by the admirable performances already given. The strings, led by that excellent artist, Mr. Maurice Sons, possess both dash and finesse, and the 'wind' are conspicuous for the beauty and refinement of their tone; but no notice of the Scottish Orchestra would be fair or complete that failed in grateful recognition of the outstanding excellence of the players of instruments of percussion, who make an artistic feature of their work.

Space will only permit of brief notice of the programmes. That of the first concert included Beethoven's second Symphony, Mr. W. H. Bell's graphic tone-picture 'In the fo'c's'le,' and Tchaikovsky's pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor, in the solo portion of which Mr. Leopold Godowsky fairly electrified the audience. At the second concert a really fine performance of the 'Messiah' was given by Mr. Kirkhope's choir, Professor Prout's edition being used for the first time in Edinburgh. Great breadth of tone and solidity of attack were notable features of the choral numbers. The soloists, all of whom sang well, were Madame Squire, Miss Lonsdale, Mr. William Green and Mr. Andrew Black. The third concert received distinction in the appearance of Herr Fritz Kreisler, whose attainments raised the audience to unbounded enthusiasm by his performance of Beethoven's violin concerto. Dr. Cowen's striking Coronation March, and Dvorák's superb fourth Symphony in G, both for the first time here, were also included in the scheme.

The Historical Concert at the University is referred to on page 20.

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' received a very reverent and beautiful rendering by the choir of St. Mary's Cathedral on the 12th ult. The tone of the boys' voices was excellent, and the solos and quartets were, without exception, most effectively rendered. Mr. T. H. Collinson accompanied on the organ with great skill and judgment.

Most interesting was the recital of harpsichord music given before the Edinburgh Bach Society by Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland. The programme consisted of Bach's Aria with thirty variations, and his Sonata for harpsichord and violin in E major, in which latter work Mr. Fuller-Maitland had the valuable co-operation of Miss Helen Macgregor. The harpsichord used was that belonging to the Edinburgh University—admittedly one of the best extant.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Under the able direction of Mr. Hopkins Ould, the Paisley Philharmonic Society gave their first concert for the season on November 24. The Society's most ambitious effort was Gade's Symphony in B flat, and the programme likewise included Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture, Cherubini's Overture to 'Anacréon,' Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' marches, and some songs capably sung by Mr. Walter Harvey.

The Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union's season opened on November 25 with a performance by the Choral Union of two novelties, viz., Cowen's 'Coronation Ode,' and Brahms's 'Requiem.' Dr. Cowen's tuneful music presented no difficulty to the choristers, but on the other hand Brahms's great work provided a most exacting test of their powers, and if we except the frequent faulty intonation on the part of the tenors, a most creditable rendering was secured. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Ivor Foster, and the accompaniments were effectively played by the Scottish Orchestra, Mr. Bradley directing the performance with much skill. At the second concert on the 2nd ult., Herr Dohnányi appeared as pianist, taking part in Brahms's pianoforte concerto No. 2 in B flat. Mr. W. H. Bell's tone-picture 'In the fo'c's'le,' from the suite 'Mother Carey,' received a first and appreciative hearing at this concert, and Beethoven's symphony No. 2 in D and Tchaikovsky's overture fantasia after Shakespeare's 'Romeo and Juliet' completed a highly interesting programme. The personnel of the Scottish Orchestra differs only slightly from last year's band, and we have the prospect of a successful season under Dr. Cowen, who received a cordial welcome on taking up the baton at the beginning of his third season here.

The Choral Union's performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' at the third subscription concert on the 9th ult. attracted a very large audience. The choruses were sung with admirable spirit and precision, and the solo music received adequate treatment from Madame De Vere Sapio and Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Messrs. William Green and Andrew Black, the latter's Prophet being of course a feature of the concert. The accompaniments were played by the Scottish Orchestra, Mr. Thomas Berry acting as organist, and Mr. Bradley as conductor.

The outstanding features of the fourth concert on the 16th ult. were the appearance of Herr Fritz Kreisler as solo violinist (in Beethoven's concerto), and the first performance here of Dvorák's Symphony No. 4, in G (Op. 88). Before the concert commenced the Dead March in 'Saul' was played as a mark of respect for the memory of the late Professor John Young, for many years a member of the committee of management of these concerts, and long and intimately associated with the advancement of music in Glasgow.

The choirs of Pollokshields East and Pollokshields West churches united in giving a performance of Handel's 'Messiah' on the 17th ult. A string band, supplemented by Mr. Wilby at the organ, gave the accompaniments, and Mr. D. S. Eadie acted as conductor. On the 18th ult., the choir of Wellington Church (Mr. Fred Turner organist and choirmaster) gave a performance of Gounod's 'Gallia,' Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' and Mendelssohn's 'Lord, how long,' Mr. J. B. Ritchie conducted the performance.

The popular orchestral concerts on Saturday evenings continue to draw crowded audiences, so much so in fact that the management felt justified, and very properly, in slightly raising the charges for admission. At these concerts Mr. Andrew Black has appeared, as has also Mr. Walter Harvey, a clever local baritone, who is taking a good position as a concert singer.

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society offers a good illustration of the city's musical progress. Guided by Mr. W. T. Hoeck, the conductor, and an enterprising committee, this band of about 100 capable executants takes in hand and carries through programmes that would have been impossible some years ago. The appearance made by the Society on the 11th ult. was in all respects eminently satisfactory. The programme included the prelude to Mackenzie's 'Colomba,' MacCunn's 'The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow,' Cowen's 'Welsh' symphony, Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' marches,—native talent being fully recognised—and Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto No. 4 in G, in which Mr. Philip Halstead gave a fine rendering of the solo part. Mr. Walter Harvey's vocal solos gave variety to the programme.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the season was given by the Cheltenham Musical Festival Society (conductor, Mr. J. A. Matthews) in the Winter Garden on November 25. The orchestra, led by Mr. E. G. Woodward and Mr. Lewis Hann, numbered seventy performers, and there was a large chorus. The pieces performed were the 'Hymn of Praise' and Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' the latter for the first time in Gloucestershire, the principal singers being Miss Katie Smith, Miss Palmer, Mr. H. Plevy, and Mr. Bantock-Pierpoint. Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' Overture was played, and Miss Salter sang a new song written by Mr. H. A. Matthews (son of the conductor) which was well received, and encored.

Mr. Phillips undertook a most ambitious programme at the first concert of the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society, given in the Winter Garden on the 10th ult. The choral pieces were Bach's Magnificat and Walthew's setting for baritone solo and chorus of Keats's 'Ode to a Nightingale.' The soloists were Madame Amy Simpson, Miss Violet Randle, Miss Kathleen Rivers, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. W. J. Ineson. The choir gave a much better rendering of Walthew's pleasing and original setting of Keats's poem—in which Mr. Ineson sang the solos most effectively—than of the Magnificat. The excellent band, under Mr. Phillips's able and energetic direction, gave a fine performance of Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony and Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale.

The second of the chamber concerts under the direction of Miss Ellicott and Miss Hirschfeld was given at Cheltenham on the 4th ult., when the Wessely String Quartet appeared with their usual success. Miss Henning sang and Miss Hirschfeld was solo pianist.

The first concert of the present season of the Gloucester Choral Society, of which Mr. Herbert Brewer is the conductor, took place at the Shire Hall on the 16th ult. Sir Hubert Parry conducted a fine performance of his 'Ode to Music,' and in addition the Society gave Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty.' The principals were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Lucia Fyde, Mr. C. Eynon Morgan, and Mr. Charles Phillips. The chorus singing was brilliant, and the orchestra left little to be desired. Miss Jessie Morland, a member of the Society, sang the second soprano part in the quintet in Parry's Ode.

The annual concert by the Gloucester Civic Band (director, Mr. F. Dawes) proved as usual a great attraction. In addition to the pieces given by the band, Miss Rosina Buckmann sang several songs with great acceptance, and the Lichfield Cathedral Quartet gave highly artistic renderings of several part-songs.

On the 3rd ult. the Winchcomb Choral Society gave a successful concert, when Anderton's 'Wreck of the Hesperus' and 'Macfarren's 'May Day' were performed. Mr. W. E. Haslam ably conducted.

The Coleford Philharmonic Society (Forest of Dean) gave a concert on the 12th ult., when the choir sang various choruses and part-songs in finished style. The Coleford Choir, under Mr. Evans's training, has met with much success at local Eisteddfodau.

MUSIC IN LINCOLN.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

The Lincoln Musical Society gave a specially interesting concert in the Drill Hall on November 27. Sir A. C. Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' was the chief work, performed under the skilful direction of the composer. The chorus had received careful preparation at the hands of Dr. G. J. Bennett, the Society's hon. conductor, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who had conducted the choir rehearsal on the previous evening, expressed himself in very emphatic terms as to the excellent results which Dr. Bennett had obtained. The fascinating story of Jubal's dream was recited with fine enunciation and dramatic power by Mr. Charles Fry, and the very efficient band was led by Mr. Edward O'Brien. Miss Ethel Wood sang the soprano music with artistic finish and true devotional feeling, and Mr. Gwilym Richards did well in the tenor part. Both artists were successfully joined in the quartet of the chorus, 'Gloria in Excelsis Deo,' by Miss F. Lansdown and the Rev. C. H. Scott. The second part of the programme, conducted by Dr. G. J. Bennett, included Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' marches, and concluded with Sir Frederick Bridge's 'The Flag of England,' in which the choir again achieved marked distinction, while Miss Ethel Wood sang the solo part with wonderful freshness and vigour.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The fourth and fifth concerts of the Philharmonic Society's season have occurred since my last chronicle. At the fourth, on November 25, Madame Blauvelt markedly increased her reputation amongst her Liverpool admirers by her admirable vocalisation, and Mr. Kreisler, the other soloist, confirmed the great impression of his powers as a violinist which was formed at his recent recital. The orchestra, under Dr. Cowen, played Schumann's Symphony, No. 1, in B flat, and Gluck's overture to 'Iphigenia.' The fifth concert, on the 9th ult., was chiefly noteworthy for the several performances at the pianoforte of Madame Carreño, who played the solo part in Weber's Concerto in F (Op. 79) with striking success. Mr. Ben Davies was the vocalist.

A comprehensive programme was put forward by Mr. A. E. Rodewald on November 29 at the second ladies' concert of the Orchestral Society's season. It commenced with an excellent rendering of Berlioz's 'Symphony Fantastique,' and concluded with the 'Triumphal' March from Elgar's 'Caractacus,' whilst 'Sursum Corda' and the incidental music and 'Funeral' March from 'Grania and Diarmid' were splendidly given. Dr. Elgar, who conducted his works, came in for a cordial reception. Mr. Frederick Austin was the vocalist, and he too scored a notable success. The same organisation's concert on the 6th ult., at the Gymnasium, was also rich in interest. A romance for violin and orchestra by Mr. Gordon Stutely was introduced, the composer interpreting the solo part. The composition proved to be a charming and poetically charged work. It was received with a deserved display of appreciation. Mr. Vincent Needham and Mr. Charles Reynolds brought forward a fantasia by Demerssman for flute and oboe, and showed their command of their instruments. Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony was also in the programme, and Mr. Francis Harford gave Tchaikovsky's 'Pilgrim's Song' with distinction.

Considerable interest centred in the function which was arranged for the evening of the 2nd ult. by Mr. Theodore Lawson, in the Music Room at the Adelphi Hotel. The chief feature was the performance by a string orchestra formed by the students of the College of Music, who are being trained as professional executants and who showed much intelligence. Songs were rendered by Miss E. Napier Easton, and violin solos by Miss L. Beasley and Miss M. Wise. The Liverpool Musical Society offered on November 26, in St. George's Hall, Mozart's 'Twelfth Mass,' the principals being Miss Teresa Blamy, Madame Ada Tomlinson, Mr. Philip Newbury, and Mr. Joseph Burley. Dr. Peace was at the organ.

The Liverpool Sunday Society, the Post Office Choral Society, and the St. Cecilia (Birkenhead) Choral Society, over whose destinies presides the accomplished Mr. J. W. Appleyard, have all been responsible for one or more concerts. Miss Ellinor Lloyd (Pierce), assisted by Mr. J. S. Aspinall, gave a successful vocal and pianoforte recital in the small Concert Room, St. George's Hall, on the 13th ult. Miss Lloyd is a pianist of considerable resourcefulness, with an excellent technique and no little executive ability.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Whether the attitude of hostility towards the original compositions of Liszt which has long been characteristic of the English-musical public will ever give way before the growing body of evidence that their creator was one of the very few great originals of the nineteenth century—one of those few voices that have many echoes, according to the celebrated saying of Goethe—and a great formative influence in the world of art, is a question that it is difficult not to regard as crucial. While on a good many subjects of musical importance there are perceptible differences of opinion between London and Manchester, on the Liszt question there is none. We simply refuse to hear the voice of that particular charmer, charm he never so wisely, and through the medium of never so skilful an interpretation. At the Hallé concert of November 20, a most wonderful performance of the great 'Faust Symphonie' was given; but the old rule held good that when the public sees Liszt's name on the programme it prepares to be bored, and though the orchestra speak with the tongue of men and of angels, it profits them nothing. At the same concert Weber's vivacious 'Ruler of Spirits' overture was exquisitely played; Madame Blauvelt sang Haydn's 'With verdure clad,' and an unfamiliar song by Schubert with clarinet obbligato, not quite coming up to her brilliant style of three or four years ago; and a young pianist from Clifton, named Merrick, played Litolf's entertaining pianoforte concerto on Dutch airs with Leschetitzkian artistry. At the ensuing Hallé concert—the seventh of the season—the programme, consisting of Stanford's Latin Te Deum and Brahms's 'Triumphlied,' proved heavy and not very popular. The eighth concert brought together the first really imposing audience of the season, which seemed to be justified by Dr. Brodsky's truly superb rendering of the Tchaikovsky violin concerto, in which one noted the enthusiasm of personal friendship as well as consummate technical mastery. Having saved the concerto from neglect and oblivion (his first performance of it at a concert of the Viennese Philharmonic Society was given twenty-one years ago) Dr. Brodsky feels himself intimately connected with the destinies of the composition, and his rendering, when seconded by Dr. Richter's accompaniment, is certainly matchless. The other pieces were Brahms's 'Tragic' Overture, Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini' (repeated by numerous supported request), Beethoven's G major Romance, and Novacek's 'Perpetuum Mobile' (much more musical and interesting than any other of the many violin pieces with some similar title), and Beethoven's serene and radiant Symphony in B flat. At the ninth concert, on the 11th ult., an exceptionally fine performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' was given, again before an enormous audience. Beyond question this eccentric and unequal but immensely interesting work is to be heard to the best advantage in Manchester, where its British career began.

On November 21 an exceptionally interesting recital of pianoforte and violin music was given by Mr. W. H. Dayas, assisted by Lady Hallé. The principal work was Busoni's Sonata for the two instruments (written in memory of his friend Novacek), the first performance of which in England was given last winter, at a Brodsky Quartet concert by Dr. Brodsky and Mr. Dayas. The rendering by Lady Hallé and Mr. Dayas was of rare novelty, and was in every way worthy of the powerful and significant composition. The two instrumentalists were again associated in a very long and difficult, and hence rarely-heard, sonata by Rubinstein. Mr. Dayas's only solo was the transcription of Bach's mighty Prelude and Fugue, for organ, in E flat, which Busoni has dedicated to him. This Mr. Dayas played with fine breadth and dignity, and with no sign of being troubled by the enormous technical difficulties.

At Mr. Brand Lane's second concert, on November 22, Haydn's 'Creation' and Elgar's Coronation Ode were given, with Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Alice Lamb, Mr. William Green and Mr. Watkin Mills as soloists. On the part of choir and soloists the performance was good, but the bad intonation of the scratch orchestra was very noticeable, especially in the Coronation Ode.

At the 'Gentlemen's' concert on November 24, a delightful performance was given of Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, and Miss Agnes Nicholls, the soloist of the occasion, sang a tawdry air by Verdi (substituted at the last moment for Micaela's song from 'Carmen') with much better vocal art than the composition was worth.

The Schiller concert of November 29 served to introduce a new baritone singer, Mr. Lawrence Atkinson, who sang expressive y and with fair vocal art in songs by Brahms, R. Strauss, and others. The instrumentalists were Miss Edith Robinson (violinist), Messrs. Leonard Borwick and Carl Fuchs, who were associated in a very fine performance of Beethoven's great B flat major Trio, and also played admirably in less important solo and duet pieces.

On the 1st ult. Mr. Max Mayer (pianist), assisted by Madame Soldat Roeger, Mr. Speelman, and Mr. Mills gave highly effective renderings of Brahms's last violin and pianoforte Sonata, Mozart's Trio in E flat for pianoforte, clarinet and viola, and Paderewski's Sonata in A minor for violin and pianoforte—the last-named an amiably romantic composition, decidedly effective in a light style, and brilliant in the pianoforte part.

The third Brodsky Quartet concert, on the 10th ult., was entirely devoted to Beethoven. There were two quartets,—the early G major and Rasoumofsky No. 1—both splendidly played, the middle piece being the E flat major trio, in a faultless performance of which the pianoforte part was taken by that most capable young artist, Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus, the string players being Dr. Brodsky and Mr. Fuchs.

On the 5th ult. there was a successful performance of Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri' at the Royal Manchester College of Music, in aid of the sustentation fund.

On the 16th ult. the Manchester Male-Voice Chorus, conducted by Mr. Sachs, gave a fairly successful concert with Liszt's small Mass in C minor and Schubert's 'Die Allmacht,' according to Liszt's arrangement for solo and chorus, as principal works. On the same occasion Richard Strauss's melodrama to 'Enoch Arden' was given for the first time in Manchester, with dubious results.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On November 12, in the Sheldonian, Sir Hubert Parry discoursed on 'Types of Style in Music,' giving a very admirable lecture to an appreciative audience. While on the subject of musical lecturing we should mention that Mr. Walter Ford has discoursed three times during Michaelmas term in the Assembly Room of the Town Hall on the 'Songs of Schubert, Schumann and Brahms.'

On November 24, under the auspices of the Musical Union, an excellent chamber concert was given in the Examination Schools, when Messrs. Ludwig, Collins, Hobday and Whitehouse lent their artistic aid.

Another chamber concert took place in the Town Hall on November 27, under the presidency of the Musical Club, with Miss Fanny Davies at the pianoforte, the Willy Hess Cologne Quartet being the stringed performers.

On the 2nd ult., in the Town Hall, Mr. Leonard Borwick and Mr. Plunket Greene gave a pianoforte and vocal recital. Mr. Borwick's principal contribution was Brahms's scholarly Sonata in F minor, a difficult work to play; but Mr. Borwick came out triumphant, as indeed he always does. Mr. Greene, who was in better voice than when we heard him here last, sang selections from English, French, and German folk-songs.

In conclusion we must not omit to say that on the Sunday evenings of term, concerts have as usual been given at Balliol under the able direction of Dr. Walker.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union gave an admirable performance of Dr. Elgar's 'Caractacus' in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on the 3rd ult. It is long since a new work created so favourable an impression upon a first hearing in Newcastle. Its extraordinary wealth of melody, the remarkable skill with which its numerous themes are developed, and the wonderful command displayed over the resources of the orchestra, combine to place the cantata amongst the most successful of recent productions of its kind. It had the advantage of an excellent performance at the hands of the Choral Union, with whom were associated the Hallé Orchestra, the effects, both vocal and instrumental, being most striking and interesting, and an intelligent appreciation of the spirit of the work being apparent in every number. The soloists were Miss Ethel Wood, Mr. William Green, Mr. Robert Burnett, and Mr. Andrew Black, all of whom acquitted themselves with distinction. The conductor, to whom great credit is due for so successful a performance of a difficult work, and who has hitherto modestly occupied the post of chorus-master, was Mr. James M. Preston—the right man in the right place.

The Newcastle Philharmonic Society, formerly known as the National Telephone Vocal Society, gave its first subscription concert in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 11th ult., when Gade's 'Crusaders' was performed, with Miss L. Gillespie, Mr. Fred Norcup, and Mr. Herbert Brown in the solo parts. Mr. George Dodds conducted.

On the 16th ult. the Newcastle Postal Telegraph Choral Society performed Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden' in the Town Hall, Newcastle, with Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Cissy Soulsby, Mr. Seth Hughes and Mr. Dan Price in the solo parts. The programme also included Stanford's 'Last Post.' Mr. J. E. Hutchinson conducted.

On the 18th ult. the Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society, the oldest existing musical society in Newcastle, gave a very successful concert in the Town Hall, Newcastle, at which the principal works performed were Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Gounod's 130th Psalm, both of which, with the aid of Madame Marie Goodall, Miss Maud Foreshow, Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. William Thornton in the solo parts and a capable orchestra led by Mr. J. H. Beers, were very creditably rendered under the conductorship of Mr. J. E. Jeffries.—The Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society, under the conductorship of Mr. M. Fairs, gave its first concert of the season on the 17th ult. in the Assembly Hall, North Shields, at which Sullivan's 'On Shore and Sea' and Gounod's 'Gallia' were performed, with the aid of Miss Mabel Manson and Mr. Samuel Masters.

Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' was performed in the Town Hall, Gateshead, on the 4th ult. by the Gateshead Vocal Society, under the baton of Mr. N. Laycock. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Maggie Hudspeth, Mr. Tom Child and Mr. Herbert Parker.

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society performed, at its first concert of the season in the Victoria Hall, Sunderland, on the 11th ult., Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' with much success. The choir was heard at its best in the 'Song of Destiny' and in the evening hymn 'O gladsome Light.' The soloists, Miss Esmé Atherden, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Harold E. Wilde, and Mr. Charles Tree, acquitted themselves admirably, and the orchestra, led by Mr. W. W. Lax, was on the whole satisfactory. Mr. N. Kilburn occupied his accustomed place as conductor.

An eminently successful concert was given in the Royal Assembly Hall, South Shields, on the 10th ult., by the South Shields Choral Society, at which 'Spring,' from Haydn's 'Seasons,' and Sir Charles Stanford's 'Last Post,' were given, under the able direction of Mr. M. Fairs. The choruses in the latter work were most effectively sung. Miss Esmé Atherden, Mr. Harold E. Wilde, and Mr. H. Brown were capable soloists.

The Alnwick Choral Union produced Mr. A. R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc' at its annual concert in the Corn Exchange, Alnwick, on the 10th ult., with Madame Norledge, Mr. J. Gawthrop and Mr. D. Harrison as principal vocalists. Mr. C. E. Moore conducted.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It is rather a far cry to November 20, but on that date Nottingham's principal Choral Society started a new season under a new conductor. The work was Sir Hubert Parry's 'Judith,' which Mr. Allen Gill conducted most successfully. The artists who largely contributed to this state of affairs were Mesdames Agnes Nichols and Muriel Foster, and Messrs. William Green and Charles Knowles.

The Nottingham Orchestral Society gave their first concert of the season on the 18th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Allen Gill. The programme included Dvorák's 'Carneval Overture,' Beethoven's fifth Symphony, the 'Meistersinger' Overture, and Massenet's Suite Pittoresque, all these works being interpreted in a manner which calls for commendation. Miss Ethel Lister sang.

The New Musical Society at Leicester gave a concert on the 4th ult., when 'Acis and Galatea' formed the chief item, but the Coronation anthems and Handel's seldom heard 'Water Music' kept the programme to one composer. The vocalists were Madame Marie Goodall, Mr. Bright Jones, and Mr. Robert Radford. Mr. Jones was so indisposed that his part was taken by the Society's organist, Mr. H. Scott, at short notice. The choir, which did excellent work, was conducted by Mr. Charles Hancock.

The Leicester Philharmonic Society produced Gounod's 'Irene' in concert form on the 11th ult. The performance was a great success; the artists were Madame Marie Duma (at short notice for Miss Margaret Macintyre), Mr. Philip Brozel and Mr. Watkin Mills in the principal parts, whilst Miss Smart, Miss Adcock, and Messrs. Page, Pochin and McArragher were heard to advantage in the subordinate parts.—Sir Arthur Sullivan's Thanksgiving Te Deum was performed at St. Martin's Church on the 21st ult.—Sir Frederick Bridge gave his 'Comus' lecture on the 15th ult. before the members of the Literary and Philosophical Society.

Sterndale Bennet's 'May Queen' was the chief attraction in the programme of the Melbourne Glee and Madrigal Society on the 9th ult. The solos were undertaken by Madame Moulds, Mr. Daykin Turner, and Mr. Arthur Lakin. The choir, who sang excellently, were conducted by Mr. E. M. Barber.

In the growing and populous district of West Bridgford Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' was undertaken by the local Choral Society, who gave a good account of themselves and the work in hand. The soloists were Miss Ethel Drinkwater, Mr. Whitworth Mitton and Mr. Arthur Lakin.

The Mansfield Choral Society gave their first concert of the season on the 11th ult. The work was the 'Messiah.' The chorus deserve special mention, thanks to the training of Mr. Liddle, organist of Southwell Cathedral, who conducted.

At Grantham, Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was given at St. John's Church both on the 14th and 21st ult. The Philharmonic Society devoted their energies to rendering the 'Messiah' on the 18th ult., when Mr. Dickenson conducted the work.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The 'Messiah' is so much a Christmas institution in the city and district that separate references to the multitude of performances which annually take place is obviously impossible, and it must now suffice to state for purposes of record that upwards of thirty renderings of the work have this year been given in Sheffield and the immediate neighbourhood. At several, the use of Professor Prout's 'practical' edition with its corrections and reforms has been a feature. Of these the most important has been that given by the Sheffield Musical Union, on the 4th ult. The Society, now the largest in the district, is conducted by Dr. Coward. A year ago an especially fine performance of Handel's great work was given early in December, and so successful was the enterprise that its repetition this year was fully justified. The unsurpassed singing of the choir under Dr. Coward's direction was again the sensation of the concert, admirable as were the other features, and last year's standard was fully maintained. There was a capable local orchestra, and the principals—Madame Emily Squire, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, and Mr. Ivor Foster—sang in each instance with distinction. This same Musical Union was some time ago the recipient of the honour of an invitation to visit Leeds, and on the 9th ult. some 300 of the chorus, headed by Dr. Coward, visited the sister festival city, singing a brief selection of part-songs, &c., in the Coliseum.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' (complete) was performed by the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society on the 15th ult., under the direction of its respected veteran conductor, Mr. Schollhammer. The old-established choral society has had a large influx of new members since the recent festival, and judging by the fine tone and other excellent choral qualities heard at the concert, the new material is of the right sort. The work was sung con amore by the members, with whom the composer is evidently a great favourite. The orchestra, led by Mr. John Peck, played the score with a due appreciation of its many beauties. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Thomas Thomas, and Mr. Herbert Brown. The last-named won a pronounced success in the bass solos—his singing of 'Hiawatha's vision' being most admirable. Mr. J. W. Phillips rendered invaluable service at the organ.

An interesting concert was that given by the Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society on the 11th ult. The programme described it as 'An English Night,' and a pleasing selection of glees and part-songs by Callcott, Goss, Stainer, Bridge, Hatton, and Walford Davies lent colour to the claim. The Society was assisted by Mr. Charles Fry, whose selections from 'As you like it' and 'The Merchant of Venice' were keenly appreciated. An attractive item was the recitation 'King Robert of Sicily,' given by Mr. Fry with Mr. John E. West's beautiful incidental music, in which the male-voice choir was effectively utilised. Mr. Bromley Booth played violin solos with faultless taste and a superb tone and execution, and Mrs. F. W. Davis sang two ballads acceptably. Mr. J. A. Rodgers conducted.

Amongst the work done by the smaller choral societies, that of the Heeley Wesley Choral Society claims mention. Directed by Mr. R. M. Bullmore, the members performed Barnby's 'Rebekah' on the 8th ult. with considerable success. The Norton Lees Choral Society, an enterprising body, was the means of introducing a novelty to the district in the shape of Smieton's 'King Arthur,' which, under Mr. Horace Reynolds, was given a capital performance on the 1st ult.

Turning to orchestral music the month has been a busy one in that branch of the art. A most hopeful feature is the fact that even the smaller orchestral societies make a point of including a symphony in their programmes. The Amateur Instrumental Society (conductor, Mr. H. Dean) played Beethoven's No. 5 on the 10th ult.; the Heeley Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. W. Chapman), Mozart's E minor on the 8th ult.; and the Brincliffe Musical Society (conductor, Mr. J. H. Parkes), Beethoven's No. 2 on the 19th ult. The St. John's Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. J. Duffell) also gave an excellent concert on the 8th ult. Among the remaining events of a crowded month have been two performances on an extensive scale of Mr. A. Scott Gatty's musical play 'The Three Bears,' at the Albert Hall, and the second of Miss Foxon's subscription concerts, given on the 2nd ult.

The members of the chorus of the Sheffield Festival of 1902 met for the last time in the Town Hall, Sheffield, on the 19th ult., prior to the disbandment which always takes place after each festival. The affair took the form of a social reunion, interspersed with music and speeches. The choir sang two choruses from Dr. Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' and Miss Eva Rich and Mr. J. Lycett sang ballads. Souvenirs were presented to each chorister, and seven devoted members who had attended each of the sixty-two rehearsals held received the gift at the hands of the Duke of Norfolk.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Stafford Choral Union made their first public appearance this season on the 2nd ult. in the Borough Hall, when a good audience assembled to hear an excellent performance of Haydn's 'Creation.' The principals were Madame Marie Goodall, Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Mr. H. G. Freeman led the orchestra, Mr. J. Jackson was at the pianoforte, and Mr. Drury conducted.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BRADFORD.

On the 12th ult. a very fine performance of 'St. Paul' was given under Dr. Cowen, at which the Festival Choral Society sang admirably, the chorales being in particular a model of restrained and refined singing. The Hallé Orchestra was of course good, if not at its best, and Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. William Green and Mr. Andrew Black formed a quite unexceptionable quartet of principals. The Bradford Permanent Orchestra has given concerts on November 22 and December 13, neither of which calls for much comment. With the idea of popularizing the concerts, which have not been supported as they deserve, serious music has been given in homœopathic doses, a couple of symphonic movements at a time representing the maximum dose, but the result has not been encouraging. The efficiency of the orchestra under Mr. Allen Gill is as great as ever, and popular overtures, selections, and other tit-bits have been smartly and cleverly played. Several local vocalists have taken part in the concerts with more or less success, and the charmingly facile and artistic performance by Miss Annie Robinson in Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor, for pianoforte and orchestra, deserves a word of hearty praise.

On the 2nd ult. a reverent and sympathetic reading of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was given at a special Advent service in All Saints' Church, when Mr. Charles Stott's able treatment of the organ, which supplied the place of an orchestra, was the most noteworthy feature of the performance. Of exceptional interest was a chamber concert given on the 8th ult. by Mr. Charles Henrich, who, with Mr. Georg Ellenberger, an artistic violinist, played Schütt's Second Suite for pianoforte and violin—brilliant and artistic music, if not very individual. Mr. Henrich's solos included a powerful Scherzo for pianoforte by Ernest Blake, a young composer of whom we should hear more in the future; his very striking version of Shelley's 'Remembrance' was sung by Miss Wehner, whose choice of songs was quite remarkable for its freshness and interest.

LEEDS.

I have given Leeds the second place because its musical activity has hardly equalled that of its neighbour, with which it entertains a wholesome rivalry in musical matters. A similar feeling of emulation gave peculiar zest to the most sensational, if not the most intrinsically important, event of the month. This was the visit to Leeds on the 9th ult. of the chorus of the Sheffield Musical Union, conducted by Dr. Coward. The various pieces sung by them served to show the extraordinarily high degree of training to which they have attained, and may serve as a useful object-lesson to local choralists in such matters as smartness of attack, clearness of enunciation, and brilliance of general effect. The concert was one of Messrs. Haddock's Musical Evenings.

Mr. Charles Wilkinson gave on the 1st ult. a lecture-recital of Schubert's 'Müllerlieder,' sung by three local lady amateurs, and illustrated by lantern slides of English water-mills. It must be admitted that this pictorial commentary helped to establish the mood appropriate to an enjoyment of the songs. On the 3rd ult. one of the Leeds Bohemian Chamber Concerts was given, quartets by Haydn, Schubert, and Grieg being ably played by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Haigh, and Giessing. Though the Leeds Corporation is chary of spending money on music, except of the most al fresco kind, it allows the Town Hall organist, Mr. Fricker, to expend his abundant energy on getting up a number of free concerts, in which various local societies are taking part.

On the 6th ult. it was the turn of the Leeds Symphony Society, an amateur organisation which, strengthened by several professionals, gave a popular programme of orchestral music, the one important feature being the exceedingly sympathetic and artistic performance by Mr. H. P. Richardson of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto. Mr. Arthur Grimshaw conducted.

Mr. Edgar Haddock's 'Leeds Orchestra' gave a partially 'free' concert on the 20th ult., the programme of which was of a somewhat singular type, the first part consisting of airs from 'Messiah,' while the second part was devoted exclusively to Wagner!

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

Mr. H. A. Fricker, who is making for himself a name in the West Riding as a most efficient chormaster, has taken over the training and conducting of the Dewsbury Choral Society, one of the best of the local societies, with excellent traditions behind it. On the 2nd ult. he conducted a very satisfactory performance of 'Elijah,' in which Madame Emily Squire, Miss Lilian Hovey, Mr. Fallas, and Mr. Lycett took the principal parts. On the same evening the Mirfield Choral Society, under Mr. Ainley, sang the too seldom heard 'Alexander's Feast,' the solos being taken by Miss Eaton, Mr. Monaghan, and Mr. Riley. A third concert on this busy day was that which the Armley Choral Society gave, Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' music being the chief work in the programme. Mr. H. H. Pickard conducted, and the soloists were Miss Clara North, Miss Gibbins and Miss Putsey, while the connective readings were given by Mr. Harry Gale.

Dr. Elgar's cantata 'The Banner of St. George' was given on the 3rd ult. by the Cleckheaton Philharmonic Society, under Mr. W. H. Wright's direction.

On the 10th ult. the Keighley Orchestral Society carried the principle of being 'all things to all men' to an extreme, giving Beethoven's C minor Symphony and a 'Mikado' selection in one programme, and making Sullivan precede Beethoven! Mr. Summerscales conducted.

The Hull Philharmonic Society's Orchestra is chiefly amateur, but its efficiency is great, and under Mr. Hudson's conductorship it gave on the 5th ult. a most interesting programme, including Schubert's big Symphony in C, Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture, and Elgar's 'Cockaigne.' Considering the exacting nature of these works, the performances were remarkably good and thoroughly enjoyable.

In York a new Society, the Choral Union, whose primary object is to improve the choirs in Dissenting Chapels, has been organized, and on the 10th ult. it began work with a performance of 'Messiah,' at which the chorus singing seems to have been on the whole praiseworthy. Mr. Rymer conducted, and Madame Annie Jackson, Miss Frood, Mr. Fallas, and Mr. Dawson were the principals.

On the 13th ult. a chamber concert of exceptional interest was given in York by Mr. Percy Sharman (violin) and Mr. Holden White (pianoforte), who introduced Richard Strauss's powerful Sonata (Op. 18), and with Mr. Withers gave Tchaikovsky's exceedingly brilliant Trio in A minor (Op. 50). The performances were uniformly worthy of the exacting programme. On the 16th ult. the York Musical Society, under Mr. T. T. Noble, gave a miscellaneous programme of madrigals, motets, and the like, of a less hackneyed character than one is accustomed to hear.

At Scarborough Dr. Ely's Select Choir gave on the 8th ult. a varied programme, including Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' two scenes from 'Lohengrin,' and Stanford's 'Last Post.' The principals were Madame Rossov, Miss Dora Harvey, and Mr. Harold Wilde. —At Mr. W. H. Cass's chamber concert on November 24 Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Trio in E minor (Op. 92), and Lalo's Trio in B minor, with Widor's singular 'Serenade' Quintet for violin, violoncello, flute, harmonium, and pianoforte—a sort of musical 'happy family'—were given. The performers were Messrs. Cass, Hatton, Arlom, C. A. Smith, and Owen Williams. So unconventional a programme certainly deserves record, as does that of a second concert in the same series, on the 15th ult., when British Chamber Music was represented by Stanford's Pianoforte Quartet in F (Op. 15), Elgar's Serenade for Strings (Op. 20), and Edward Bache's Pianoforte Trio (Op. 25).

Miss Wheelhouse is continuing her chamber concerts. At Filey, on November 29, pianoforte trios by Brahms and Gade were played; and on the 13th ult., quartets by Haydn and Schubert.

MUSIC AT WORCESTER.

The enterprise and out-of-the-rut policy of the Worcestershire Philharmonic Society were again manifested at the concert given in the Public Hall on the 11th ult. The outstanding choral feature of the afternoon's music was the performance of 'By the waters of Babylon,' a masterly setting of Psalm 137 by Mr. Charles Macpherson, the gifted sub-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral. This fine, but comparatively little-known work, is not only replete with beauty, but is charged with sincerity of purpose and ripe musicianship. Mr. Macpherson has the gift of writing descriptive music that never degenerates into mere seeking after effect cheaply obtained. For instance, in the section 'How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?' the composer has most happily caught the spirit of the pathetic inquiry by clothing it with strains of deep poetic feeling and devotional tenderness. The work was excellently interpreted, the refined and intelligent singing of the choir calling for high praise. The remainder of the programme included Beethoven's 'Coriolan' Overture and some artistic violin playing by Mr. Henri Verbrugghen. In the absence of Dr. Edward Elgar the concert was conducted by Mr. Granville Bantock with his usual skill and resourcefulness.

The Musical Society gave a very successful concert in the Public Hall on the 2nd ult., when Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' formed the chief attraction. The choir sang altogether admirably—indeed this was the conspicuous feature of the concert—and the orchestra was excellent. The solo vocalists were Miss Evelyn Berkeley, Miss Margaret Gell, Mr. H. Large and Mr. F. Lightowler, and Mr. W. Mann Dyson conducted with marked ability.

Miscellaneous.

Sir Frederick Bridge delivered an interesting lecture on Purcell in the Great Hall, Church House, Westminster, on the 5th ult., in aid of the poor of St. Bartholomew's Parish, Bethnal Green. The musical illustrations consisted of the following selections from the works of Henry Purcell: Voluntary for double organ, played by Mr. H. Davan Wetton; two sonatas for strings, played by the Misses Jessie and Amy Grimson and Mr. Frank Bridge; and a violin sonata performed by Miss J. Grimson. The vocal music included selections from the opera 'Dido and Æneas' and the Masque in 'Dioclesian,' sung by the choir of Westminster Abbey. Dr. Arthur Bly accompanied and Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

The Venator is the name of a useful appliance invented by Mr. John Francis Barnett. It cleans the wires of the pianoforte, their upper and lower surfaces simultaneously. A companion instrument, called the 'Venator sounding-board sweeper,' removes all dust from the sounding-board. Mr. Barnett claims that 'after these Venator instruments have been used there is a marked increase of fulness and brilliancy in the tone of the pianoforte.'

Mr. John Wrigley, one of the oldest professors of music in Manchester died, we regret to record, on the 12th ult. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music in the days when all the students resided within its walls, and on leaving the institution he was made an Associate and afterwards a Fellow. Mr. Wrigley spent a busy life in teaching at Manchester. He was president of the Victoria Glee Club and vice-president of the Union Glee Club and of the Manchester Vocal Society.

Professor Henry S. Macran, Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Dublin, has just issued, through the Clarendon Press, Oxford, 'The Harmonics of Aristoxenus,' with translation notes, introduction and index of words.

Mr. David Clegg, a performer with a high reputation in Lancashire, gave an organ recital in Queen's Hall on the 20th ult. when he displayed proofs of his great technical ability.

Mr. Cuthbert Kelly has succeeded Mr. J. H. Maunders as conductor of the Civil Service Vocal Union.

Foreign Notes.

AMSTERDAM.

The Signale announces that the Maatschappij tot Bevordering der Toonkunst was to perform 'Parsifal' in concert form on December 20, under the able direction of Willem Mengelberg. César Franck's 'Les Béatitudes' and Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion are to be given in the spring.

BERLIN.

La Vie Musicale of November 30 gave an interesting account, signed 'Tristan Leclère,' of the sale of the valuable collection of autographs which belonged to the late M. Alfred Bovet, of Valentigney. It contained letters by John Sebastian Bach and his sons; by the father, sister, and wife of Mozart; by Haydn, Beethoven, Weber and Mendelssohn, and many other composers. In a letter of Cherubini's, mention is made of the successful sales of works by Haydn, Mozart, and Hofmeister (for flute). The writer adds: 'For Beethoven there is little sale; he appears too complicated, too bizarre; he is only esteemed here [?] by professors.'

The new palatial Königliche Hochschule für Musik in Charlottenburg was recently opened under the direction of Dr. Joachim. The School was originally in the Raczynski Palace in the Königsplatz, but when that building was wanted for the Reichstag, a move was made to the house in the Potsdamerstrasse. The new and magnificent building has a concert-room capable of seating 1,000 persons, and a platform which will hold 600 executants; there is also a theatre.

A volume entitled 'Neue Beethovenbriefe,' by Dr. Alfred Christlieb Kalischer, the author of 'Die unsterbliche Geliebte' and 'Die Beethovenautographie der Königl. Bibliothek zu Berlin,' has just been published by Schuster and Loeffler. The editor has supplied various explanatory comments. The letters have been collected from various sources and some are now published for the first time, as for instance twenty addressed to Beethoven's great friend the court secretary, von Zmeskall-Domanovecz. The volume will of course prove of great value and interest to all Beethoven lovers.

In Heft 4 of Die Musik there is an interesting article on Johann Friedrich Reichardt, from the pen of Dr. Walther Pauli, Berlin. Concerning this composer and writer he declares that he was of great importance in the development of the artistic and social life of the Prussian capital; that although a master of second, or even third rank, he is one of the most interesting figures in the history of music. We may add that November 25 of last year was the 150th anniversary of the birth of Reichardt. A committee has been formed for the erection of a monument to him at Halle. He died in 1814, and was buried there.

COLOGNE.

The well-known composer, Emanuel Möor, who in the early part of the year had his 'La Pompadour' successfully produced here, has now achieved fresh honours with another opera entitled 'Andreas Hofer.'

DRESDEN.

A monument has been unveiled in memory of Johann Gottlieb Naumann, a prolific composer of operas, orchestral and chamber music, also masses, psalms, &c. His setting of Klopstock's Te Deum is considered his masterpiece. He was born in 1741 and died in 1801.

GENEVA.

M. Kling, professor of the Conservatoire of this city, has held a conférence on the composer Niedermeyer, who was born at Nyon, on the Lake of Geneva, in 1802. 'Our little country,' he said, 'has produced some remarkable musicians: Senft, J. J. Rousseau, Schnyder de Wartensee, Nägeli, Raff, Bovy-Lysberg, Franz Grast, to name only the best known.' And among them Niedermeyer, he adds, 'shines in the firmament of art like a star of the first magnitude.' The composer is best known in England by his song 'Le Lac.'

GRENOBLE.

M. Louis Étienne Ernest Reyer, the friend and disciple of Berlioz and his successor on Les Débats, and the composer of 'Sigurd,' 'La Statue,' and 'Salammbô,' will be the honorary president of the Berlioz festival to be given here next August. The veteran composer, by-the-way, celebrated his eightieth birthday on the first of last month.

HOLLAND.

M. Louis Diémer, the distinguished French pianist, has been recently giving concerts at the Hague, Utrecht, Rotterdam, Haarlem, Arnheim, and Amsterdam, everywhere winning great success by his artistic performances.

LEIPZIG.

Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel have just published fifty-nine letters written by Berlioz to the Princess Caroline Sayn-Wittgenstein. The earliest bears the date 1852, the latest 1867. There is nothing of great musical importance in these communications, though much of the man, his hopes, his ambitions, and his illusions perdues. The last letters are very sad: Berlioz longs for death to release him from physical and mental pain.

'Clara Schumann, Ein Künstlerleben nach Tagebüchern und Briefen' (Vol. I.), by Berthold Litzmann, a well-known writer, is another of the recent publications of this firm. The maiden years (1819-1849) of the distinguished pianist and subsequently the devoted wife of Robert Schumann form the interesting subject matter of this welcome volume.

LYONS.

A new work, 'l'Etranger,' by M. Vincent d'Indy, the composer of 'Fervaal,' will probably be produced next February, so we learn from an interview—'Un quart d'heure chez Vincent d'Indy'—in the new French paper La Vie Musicale.

MEININGEN.

According to Le Ménestrel, more than a hundred conductors have applied for the post of conductor of the famous Meiningen Orchestra, rendered vacant through the resignation of Herr Fritz Steinbach, in consequence of his appointments at Cologne.

MILAN.

The season 1902-3 at La Scala was expected to commence on the 20th ult. The works announced are:—Berlioz's 'Damnation de Faust' (in stage form); Verdi's 'Un Ballo in maschera' and 'Luisa Miller'; A. Smareglia's fantastic comedy, 'Oceana'; Franchetti's 'Asraël'; and A. Ponchielli's 'I Lituani.'

MUNICH.

Cherubini's 'Chant sur la mort de Haydn,' written in 1803 in consequence of a report of Haydn's death, was performed here by the Orchestral Society.

PARIS.

The receipts of the Opéra Comique during the month of October amounted to 235,419 francs, i.e., an average of 6,725 francs per night. Add to that, says Le Ménestrel, the monthly subvention of 30,000 francs, and the total makes a neat little sum. The French love the theatre; hence this prosperous state of affairs.

The Scola Cantorum recently gave an interesting performance of Mozart's opera 'Idomeneo,' produced at Munich in 1781.

The programme of the 76th season of the Conservatoire concerts included the Choral Symphony, Saint-Saëns's 'Christmas Oratorio,' Mozart's 'Requiem,' and Bach's 'St. John' Passion, the last-named for the first time in this city.

At the Colonne concert of November 30, a symphony in G minor by Lalo was performed, a work written only five years before his death. Le Ménestrel speaks of it as classical in form, but of great originality. It was warmly received. Dr. Cowen at the Philharmonic or Mr. Wood at one of his Symphony Concerts might give us an opportunity of hearing this symphony.

ST. PETERSBURG.

The 100th anniversary of the establishment of the Philharmonic Society was celebrated last month. In connection with that event, the Petersburg Herold summed up briefly the artistic result of the century. Haydn's 'Creation' was repeatedly performed during the first years, and, as at Vienna on its production in 1799, for the benefit of widows and orphans. Haydn was honorary member of the Society, and so also was Beethoven. With regard to the latter it is interesting to note that his 'Missa solemnis' was first performed in its entirety on March 26, 1824, by this Society; at the famous Vienna concert of May 7, 1832, only portions were given. The 'anniversary' programme included a Haydn Symphony and the 'Missa solemnis.' 'Francesca da Rimini,' an opera by E. F. Naprawnich, principal conductor at the Imperial Opera, will shortly be produced. The action is based on Annunzio's drama of that name.

A statue of Anton Rubinstein has been unveiled, pupils from the Conservatoria of Petersburg and Moscow taking part in the ceremony of inauguration.

STOCKHOLM.

The Orchestral-Choral Society of this city, under the direction of the well-known violinist, Tor Aulin, announces six subscription symphony concerts, and four orchestral concerts for the working-classes; towards the latter the principal manufacturers and employers, also private gentlemen, have contributed large sums of money. If only from a social point of view these workmen's concerts are of interest and importance; the programmes themselves include standard works, and others by modern Scandinavian, German and French composers. Might not a little corner have been found for Great Britain?

VERSAILLES.

The violoncellist Alexandre Batta has bequeathed to the museum a splendid picture of himself, in which the artist, Meissonier, represents him as playing on the instrument which brought to him such fame. Batta specially wished to leave a souvenir to the town in which he passed the last years of his life.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARISED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—Mr. G. F. Wrigley's annual concert took place in the Town Hall on the 2nd ult. The principal items of the programme were Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata, played by Mr. William Henley and Mr. Wrigley, and Mr. Lane Wilson's song-cycle, 'Flora's Holiday,' rendered by Miss Nora Meredith, Miss Clara Robson, Mr. Gale Gardner, and Mr. Hugh Spencer. Mr. Wrigley also played Chopin's Ballade in A flat.

BECKENHAM.—The Congregational Church Choir gave a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' on the 8th ult. The chorus sang in a manner which gave evidence of careful training. The solo parts were capably rendered by Miss Edith Hensler, Miss Phyllis Grey, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. Arthur Walenn, while a small orchestra, with Mr. Fountain Meen at the pianoforte, did full justice to the important accompaniments. Mr. J. W. Lewis conducted.

BEDFORD.—The Bedford Musical Society gave a concert on the 11th ult., under the conductorship of Dr. H. A. Harding, when Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and Elgar's 'Coronation Ode' were excellently rendered by the band and chorus, consisting of 230 performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Esmé Atherden, Miss Winifred Mayes, Miss Carrie James, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Albert Garcia.

BISHOP'S STORTFORD.—The Musical Union gave a successful concert in the Great Hall on the 3rd ult., when the programme consisted of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' and Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' of which last this Society claims the honour of the first provincial performance—apart of course from the Festivals. The choir was well balanced, and sang with excellent attack and spirit, and the orchestra played very effectively. The solo vocalists were Miss Adelaide Lambe, Miss Maggie Purvis, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. Arthur Walenn. The Ode especially was received with much enthusiasm, and both works were ably conducted by Mr. A. Eaglefield Hull.

BRIDGWATER.—The Amateur Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' in the Town Hall on the 2nd ult., under the able direction of Mr. J. A. Basker. The choir sang with excellent attack and was well balanced, and the orchestra was fully efficient. The solos were undertaken by Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Briarly, and Mr. Bishop, the latter owing to illness having to relinquish his task, which was cleverly taken up by the conductor, during whose appearance as vocalist the baton was in the hands of the Rev. H. N. Dymond.

BROMLEY (KENT).—A successful concert was given by Mr. W. A. Everington's Amateur Male-Voice Double Quartet Party, at St. Luke's Institute, on the 10th ult. The male-voice glees sung were 'Furl up the flag' (Coward), 'Hark, jolly shepherds' (Brewer), 'Sweet, if you love me' (Harris), 'Requital,' the Coronation prize glee (Dr. King), which was enthusiastically received, 'A Franklyn's dogge' (Mackenzie), 'Shades of the heroes' (Cooke), and 'Festal days' (Torrance). The mixed-voice madrigals, in which some boys from St. Luke's choir assisted, were 'The silver swan' (Gibbons), 'My bonny lass' (Morley), 'When love and beauty' (Sullivan), and 'Sleep, gentle lady' (Bishop).

CHELMSFORD.—The Musical Society celebrated its coming of age at the Corn Exchange on the 9th ult. with a concert performance of the 'Bohemian Girl.' The choir sang throughout with good expression, and the orchestra (led by Mr. G. H. Wilby) was excellent. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Helen Trust, Miss Lilian Turnbull, Messrs. Reginald Brophy, Laurence Fryer, and Arthur Winckworth, and the performance was ably conducted by Mr. F. R. Frye, who has directed the Society from its commencement. Apropos of this fact, and in recognition of his valuable services, Mr. Frye was presented at the final rehearsal on the 8th ult. with a handsome silver salver. The presentation was made by the Bishop of Colchester, who is president of the Society.

CHICHESTER.—Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed by the Musical Society, in the Corn Exchange, on the 8th ult., under the very able direction of Dr. F. J. Read, who, notwithstanding his retirement from the Cathedral, retains the conductorship of this Society. The choir sang throughout excellently, and the orchestra, led by Mr. A. Burnett, was altogether admirable. The solo vocalists were Miss Esmé Atherden, Miss May Hawker, Mr. H. Boulderson, and Mr. Charles Tree.

CHORLTON.—A lecture on 'Mendelssohn and his Music' was given by Miss Emily Slater at the Town Hall on the 15th ult. Illustrations were provided by Miss Marjorie Eaton, Miss Eastman, Mr. F. Booth, Mr. E. Simmons (vocalists), Miss Winifred Mitchell (violin), Mr. C. Foster Seymour (violoncello), and the lecturer (pianoforte).

CHORLTON-CUM-HARDY (MANCHESTER).—At the Wesleyan Church on November 30 Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' was efficiently sung by the choir, augmented by members of the Macfadyen Memorial Congregational Church choir. The solo vocalists were Madame Jessie Hulme, Mrs. Rigby, Mr. Cochran, and Mr. D. Peddie. Mr. James Hindle was the organist, and Mr. G. F. Walter (organist of the Congregational Church) conducted.

COTTINGLEY.—The Choral Society (one of those village musical institutions for which the West Riding is noted) gave a concert on November 29, when Sullivan's Festival Te Deum and a miscellaneous selection were performed, the choir being heard in MacCunn's 'Lord Ullin's Daughter,' 'Forth to the Meadows' from Schubert's 'Rosamunde,' and the band in Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' Overture and German's 'Henry VIII.' Dances. Mr. Frederic James was an excellent conductor.

CROYDON.—A concert by the string orchestra of the Croydon Conservatoire of Music was given on the 5th ult., in the large Public Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor. Dvorák's Sérénade (Op. 22), a violin Concerto by Accolay, and shorter pieces were included in the programme, which also comprised two numbers from Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's new work for string orchestra, 'Novelletten.' These pieces were heard for the first time, and gave great pleasure by reason of their beauty and originality. The same composer's march 'Ethiopia saluting the colours' concluded the concert. Recitations were given by Mrs. Tobias Matthey.

DOVER.—Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' was performed at the Town Hall on the 3rd ult., under the direction of Mr. H. J. Taylor. There was a band (led by Mr. E. W. Barclay) and chorus of over 150, and the solo vocalists were Miss Estella Linden, Miss Essie Andrews, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Daniel Price. Mr. F. E. Fletcher presided at the organ.

DUNSTER.—The Choral Society gave a concert on the 11th ult., in conjunction with the Watchet Choral Society, when the chief feature was Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The principal vocalists were Miss Jean Hunter, Miss Stenner, Mr. W. R. Johnson, and Mr. J. H. Davis. Mr. Henry T. Gilberthorpe conducted.

DUNSTON.—The first concert this season of the Choral Union took place in the Lecture Hall on the 4th ult., when Gade's charming cantata 'The Crusaders' was well performed, together with Stanford's Choral Ballad 'The Revenge.' The solos were sung by Madame Mimi Beers, Mr. H. Brearley, and Mr. S. McIntosh. Mr. W. Maddock conducted.

ETON.—The annual concert of the Eton College Chapel Choir was given at the Drill Hall on November 29. The programme included the madrigals 'Come, let us join the roundelay' (Beale), and 'Sweete floweres, ye were too faire' (Walmisley); part-songs 'The Beleaguered' (Sullivan), 'O lovely May,' and 'Farewell' (Brahms), 'A lover's counsel' (Cowen), and 'An old rat's tale' (Bridge); also the two-part song, 'Shepherds, I have lost my love' (Martin Akerman), sung by the choristers. Vocal solos were contributed by Messrs. F. Eynon Morgan, J. W. Dempster, W. Dodds, and A. J. Bristowe, and violin solos by Mr. Haydn Wood. Dr. C. H. Lloyd conducted.

GRAVESEND.—The Orchestral Society gave a concert in the New Public Hall on the 10th ult., when the programme included two movements from Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, 'Salut d'amour' and 'Chanson de Nuit' (Elgar), and a selection from 'Tannhäuser'; also a Russian Suite (by Wüerst) for string orchestra and solo violin, the latter played by Mr. F. Newcomb. The vocalists were Miss Cecile Vicars and Mr. H. F. Turnpenny, and Mr. J. F. Wallis was the solo cornet. Mr. Howard Moss conducted.

HASTINGS.—The St. Cecilia Musical Society gave a miscellaneous programme at their concert in the Public Hall on the 10th ult. The contributions of the choir included the part-songs 'The Rover' (Alan Gray), 'It was a lover and his lass' (J. C. Bridge), and 'Daybreak' (Fanning); and the madrigals 'All creatures now are merry' (Benet) and 'When Allen-a-Dale' (Pearsall). Weber's Overture 'Der Freischütz,' Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture, and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony constituted the orchestral items. Mr. Herman Brearley conducted.

KETTERING.—The first concert of the season was given on the 2nd ult., when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' (the three parts) was performed. The principal vocalists were Miss Katie Smith, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Charles Tree. Mr. Henry Gale Gotch conducted with his usual skill.

LEAMINGTON.—The Leamington Orchestral Society gave a concert on the 8th ult., under the able conductorship of Mr. Walter Warren, assisted chiefly in the wind parts, as usual, by professional players from Birmingham. Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture, Haydn's Symphony No. 12, 'Oberon' Overture (Weber), Aria for strings (Bach), 'Pomp and Circumstance' marches (Elgar), and the Vorspiel 'Manfred' (Reinecke) were excellently played by the orchestra. Mrs. Helen Trust and Mr. Horace Lott were the vocalists, and Mr. Hamilton Hartley proved himself a good accompanist.

MAIDENHEAD.—The Philharmonic Society's first concert this season took place at the Town Hall on the 2nd ult., when Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' was the chief feature. The miscellaneous second part included the two-part songs, 'Twelve by the clock,' by Dr. C. H. Lloyd, and 'Shepherds, I have lost my love,' by Martin Akerman, both excellently sung by the ladies of the choir, the latter, conducted by the composer, being re-demanded. The soloists were Miss Esmé Atherden and Mr. Eaton Cooter (vocalists), Madame Molteno-Wallis (harp), and Mr. A. E. Baker conducted.

MIRFIELD.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Handel's 'Alexander's Feast' in the Town Hall on the 2nd ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Marjorie Eaton, Mr. Monaghan, and Mr. W. Riley. Mr. W. Clark Ainley conducted.

NOTTINGHAM.—The Foundation day at Trent College was, as usual, celebrated by a concert on the 3rd ult. The miscellaneous programme included two three-part songs by Brahms, 'I hear a harp' and 'Come away, death,' Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, Liszt's 'Rhapsodie Hongroise,' Dr. Lloyd's part-song, 'Three men of Gotham,' and Shield's trio, 'O happy fair.'

PETERSHAM (N.S.W.).—The usual Dedication Festival Services at All Saints' Church were held on October 31. The choir of the church was augmented by members of the choirs of St. James's, Sydney, St. Aidan's, Annandale, and the Petersham Mission Church, numbering in all over 120 voices. The evensong was fully choral, the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis being the setting by Steggall in C, and the anthems were Goss's 'Stand up and bless,' and Turpin's 'Trust ye in the Lord,' the service concluding with Godfrey's Sevenfold Amen. Mr. W. Angus was at the organ, and the service was under the musical direction of Mr. W. T. Wood.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society gave a successful performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on the 11th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Marie Bellas, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Mr. G. S. L. Löhr presided at the organ, and Mr. Percy Ramsey at the pianoforte. Mr. Monk Gould conducted.

RETFORD.—Miss E. Mason Clark gave a pianoforte recital in the Town Hall on the 11th ult. In a programme of much interest and variety, Miss Clark displayed excellent technical attainments and much earnestness of expression, notably in Beethoven's F minor Sonata and in pieces by Schumann and Chopin. Miss Eva Rich contributed an excellent selection of songs with much acceptance.

ROCHDALE.—Two performances of the 'Messiah' were given in the Provident Hall on the 7th ult. There was a chorus and orchestra (augmented by members of the Hallé Orchestra) of 200 performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Marjorie Eaton, Madame Annie Grew, Mr. William Wild, and Mr. F. Barker. Mr. J. H. Sutcliffe conducted.

TONBRIDGE.—A very creditable performance of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' was given by the Choral Society in the Public Hall on the 10th ult., under the direction of Mr. George J. Kimmins. The solo vocalist was Miss Kate Cherry. The second part, which was miscellaneous, included two part-songs 'Who is Sylvia?' (E. German), and 'Love and summer' (John E. West), and German's three dances from 'Nell Gwynne.' Mr. Alexander Thomson (baritone) and Mr. L. L. Furnivall (violin) assisted.

TORQUAY.—The Musical Association gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on the 2nd ult. in the Bath Saloon. The choir sang with much spirit and excellent attack, and the orchestra—mainly local—was quite efficient. Madame Sobrino and Mr. Herbert Grover sang the solos with much success, the former being joined by Madame Adeline Gregory in the duet 'I waited for the Lord.' The miscellaneous part of the concert included Beethoven's overture, 'Egmont,' and Dvorák's Legend in G minor, and the choir was heard in Parry's 'Come, pretty wag' and Stanford's pastoral, 'Corydon, arise.' Mr. T. H. Webb conducted.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The Vocal Association gave a concert consisting of Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' and a miscellaneous selection in the Great Hall on the 3rd ult. Mr. W. W. Starmer was the conductor.

WATCHET.—The Choral Society, assisted by the Dunster Choral Society, gave a concert in the Church School, under the direction of Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe, on the 10th ult., when Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' occupied the first part of the programme, the second part being miscellaneous. The solos were undertaken by Miss Jean Hunter, Miss Ayres, Mr. F. Lee, and Mr. Clement E. Ayres.

WEYBRIDGE.—The Choral Society performed Hadyn's 'Creation' on the 9th ult. The choir sang with excellent attack and spirit, and Mr. A. Fransella's orchestra played the accompaniments. The solo vocalists were Miss E. Mackenzie, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Eaton Cooter. The conductor, Mr. A. Burnell, is to be congratulated on the success of the performance.

Answers to Correspondents.

STUDENT.—Our National Anthem has been so much metamorphosed that it is quite possible some saddened soul has turned it into the minor key. This treatment was officially meted out to the Austrian National Hymn (Haydn's noble tune) in 1835, on the death of the Emperor Francis I. Two verses of the hymn were sung in the minor key and the third and last stanzas (called a 'song of hope') in the major form. The 'song of grief' section began thus—English translation by John Oxenford:—

God our Emperor has taken,
Francis from this earth has flown.

How very pathetic! The whole effusion ended:—

Like his father he will guard us,
Tend his people, tend his land,
Live, long live our noble Emp'r,or,
Our new Emp'r or Ferdinand.

FIDDLER.—In regard to the introduction of Equal Temperament in England, as far back as September, 1811 (New Monthly Magazine), James Broadwood, of the eminent pianoforte-making firm, proposed its adoption; but it was not until the forties in the last century that the practice, under the superintendence of Mr. A. J. Hipkins, became general for Broadwood pianofortes. Organs, generally speaking, were not equally tuned till later, mostly after the Great Exhibition of 1851, though the organ in St. Nicholas Church (now the Cathedral), Newcastle-on-Tyne, was so tuned for a festival conducted by Sir George Smart, in 1842. The movement doubtless received an impetus when Costa caused the organ in Exeter Hall to be tuned to equal temperament in 1848, on his assuming the conductorship of the Sacred Harmonic Society. A great believer in the new method was Dr. Crotch, who, on the authority of the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, had his own chamber organ equally tuned in the year 1840.

M. L.—You appear to have got rather mixed in manipulating your new treasure, the metronome. For instance, to quote your example, the C sharp minor Pianoforte Sonata of Beethoven: the indication $\text{♩} = 76$ placed before the second movement means that a whole bar (three crotchets = to a dotted minim) should be played at the speed of 76. Therefore, set your metronome at 76 and count one dotted minim, not a crotchet to each Tick. The same principle applies to the last movement— $\text{♩} = 84$, when you will count two minims in a bar with the instrument set at 84, just double the speed as that at which you have been experimenting! There is no charge for answering questions: we are very glad to be of any service to our readers in this respect.

KITTY.—(1) 'Casta diva' means 'chaste goddess.' (2) Louis Viardot was a distinguished writer and critic, and an opera impresario (Théâtre Lyrique, Paris). In 1840 he married a daughter of Manuel Garica, and in the following year (1841) he gave up the direction of the opera and managed the extensive tours of his wife throughout Europe. He died May 5, 1883. (3) You will find a biography of Rheinberger in 'Masters of German Music' by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland. (4) Thanks; we will gladly bear in mind your suggestion in regard to a further tilling of the biographical field.

H. W.—The passage which appears to trouble you is an enharmonic progression: the notes in bar three are of exactly the same pitch as those in the preceding bar, although the notation is different. There is not the slightest reason why you should not think of the C flats as B naturals, or the F flats as E naturals, if by so doing you can sing the passage better in tune and simplify the apparent notational difficulty of the modulation. Notice the progression—upwards or downwards—of those troublesome accidentalized notes.

PIANO PLAYER.—(1) Volumes 2 and 3 of Schumann's pianoforte works (Novello edition) have not been published in octavo form (like Vol. I.), but in folio size only. (2) Mendelssohn's Opus 3 is the String Quartet in B minor; Op. 4, the Pianoforte Sonata in F minor; Op. 17, the Variations (in D) for pianoforte and violoncello; Op. 121 (a posthumous publication), 'Responsorium et Hymnus' for male voices with violoncello and bass (or organ).

F. de G. E.—The form in which the tune 'Christians, awake' appears in John Wainwright's own Collection is in two parts, soprano and bass, with the bass figured; but at the words (e.g. verse 1) 'of God incarnate and the Virgin's Son' the music is written in four parts and headed 'chorus.' This may possibly account for the West Riding traditional custom of repeating the last strain of the tune as a chorus.

K.—The full score of Handel's 'Water Music' is published in the German Handel Society's edition, price 21s. net. The parts are not published. Six pieces from the 'Water Music,' arranged for string quintet with pianoforte accompaniment (ad lib.) are published by Messrs. Novello. The twelve concertos for string orchestra are issued by Messrs. Breitkopf and Haertel.

G.—The history of the Preces and Versicles in the Church Service is one of the subjects upon which the late Sir John Stainer intended to write a primer, but alas! his lamented death frustrated that intention. Consult Jebb on 'The Choral Service of the United Church of England and Ireland' (1843).

G. C. J.—Try these songs, for a deep contralto voice:—Barnby, 'When the tide comes in' and 'The Wrecked Hope'; Williams, 'The Angel-side'; Needham, 'Irish Lullaby' (in D flat); Hatton, 'The Enchantress'; Bohm, 'Still as the night' (in B flat); and W. H. Cummings, 'Yellow lie the corn rigs.'

G. H. W.—(1) The 'felicity' (not 'felicity') solo' is the name given to a difficult passage in Purcell's anthem 'O give thanks,' sung to the word 'felicity' by an alto voice. The solo is of such a nature as to cause an inexperienced singer anything but felicity.

J. H. C.—The following duets for soprano and tenor may suit your requirements:—Spohr, 'The Rainbow'; Pinsuti, 'Bygone days'; Ellicott, 'Sing to me'; Goring Thomas, 'Night Hymn at sea' and 'Sunset'; Gounod, 'Bells that are pealing' (in A flat).

J. H. N.—The Pianoforte Quartet in G minor by Henry Leslie can only, we fear, be obtained second hand. Perhaps some of our readers may be able to help you in acquiring a copy.

NOTATION.—For books on the training of choral societies consult: 'Choral Society Vocalisation' (Stainer), 'A Manual of Singing' (Richard Strauss), 'Hints on choir training for competition' (McNaught).

CHORISTER.—A description of the Lincoln Cathedral organ appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1898, p. 801.

V. G.—We do not know of any book on the training of the male alto voice. Thanks for your suggestion.

C. S. H.—Gounod died at Paris October 19, 1893.

C. T. C.—See answer to V. G.

MUSIC IN VIENNA. (FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, December 15.

The concerts of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde opened their new season with a fine performance of Schumann's 'Faust,' under the direction of Herr Ferdinand Loewe. Specially noteworthy on this occasion were the admirable rendering of the orchestral parts and the interpretation of the principal solo part by Herr Scheidemantel, of Dresden. In their second concert the Gesellschaft afforded us a first hearing of the 'Weihnachts Mysterium,' or 'Christmas Mystery,' set to words taken mainly from the Bible by Philipp Wolfrum, the erudite professor and director of music at Heidelberg University. This interesting work has made its way rapidly during the last four years in Germany, and I hear that an English adaptation of it is now in course of preparation. It will produce the most favourable impression if, in accordance with the composer's intention, its performance takes place in a church, accompanied by living and animated pictures,—that is, in semi-dramatic manner—for there is much of the decorative and dramatic element in the music, and not a few grandly beautiful colour effects in both chorus and orchestra. It is thus essentially modern in spirit, although its thematic material consists mainly of a number of the grand old German Christmas hymns, most skilfully utilized and elaborated.

There have been some interesting vocal recitals during the last few weeks. Amongst them may be mentioned that given by Herr Eduard Gärtner, a baritone with a sympathetic, full-compassed, and excellently-trained voice. His programme also was an attractive and unconventional one, consisting of Bach's cantata 'Selig ist der Mann,' followed by a number of Scandinavian folksongs, the singer acquitting himself throughout with much artistic intelligence and warmth of feeling.

Much success attended a concert given by Emil Sauer, in which he introduced a new work of his, viz., a second pianoforte concerto in C minor. Doubtless he has written it for himself; at all events, it will be no easy matter for another pianist to render this difficult composition with an equal amount of fire and brilliancy of execution.

A particularly hearty reception was accorded to the Leipzig artists Herren Felix Berber and Julius Klengel, whose masterly interpretation of Brahms's double concerto for violin and violoncello produced a profound impression. Under their single-souled, sympathetic and truly artistic performance the work, generally deemed abstruse and ineffective, assumed the character of a novelty and a revelation.

A real novelty to Viennese amateurs was Anton Dvorák's F major Symphony, which was introduced at one of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society. On the whole this work of the Bohemian master has not satisfied the expectations raised by it beforehand; albeit it shares with the composer's other compositions the freshness and brilliancy of invention and elaboration.

After many previously-made promises and announcements, Tchaikovsky's 'Pique Dame' has been at length brought out at our Imperial Opera, under Herr Mahler's direction. The work, which has been sumptuously mounted and brilliantly produced, created some interest, chiefly on account of its peculiar and exciting subject, while the music proved on the whole ineffective.

At the theatre 'An der Wien,' where light opera is cultivated, together with comedy and drama, the new opera 'The Polish Jew,' by Carl Weiss, has been brought out. This distinctly noteworthy work, which has already scored great successes in Frankfurt-on-Main and other German cities, possesses the somewhat rare advantage of an excellent, dramatically animated and effective libretto, the subject, taken from Erkmann-Chatrian's well-known story, being moreover of a deeply-moving and thrilling nature. The music wedded thereto, without being particularly distinguished, is not without numerous good points, and is the work of a highly-cultivated and experienced musician.

KING ARTHUR

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

JAMES SMETON, M.A.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

JOHN MORE SMETON.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

Full Score and Band Parts on hire.

(This work takes about an hour and forty minutes to perform, and has been produced with conspicuous success at London (3), Glasgow (2), Newcastle, Harrogate, Dundee, Jersey, Reading, Chichester, Bradford, Airdrie, Aylesbury, Paisley, Hamilton, Helensburgh, Martock, Arbroath, Buxton, Broughty-Ferry, Eydon, Greasboro', Kinton, Selhurst, Ayr, Montrose, Peebles, Coatbridge, Newport, Aberdeen, Southampton, Driffield, Louth, Stirling, Leigh, Stony Stratford, Stanwix, Jesmond, Salem, Belvedere, Lyncombe, Musselburgh, Byfield, Portobello, Brondesbury, Diss, Wigan, Lancaster, Bruton, Whitefield, Sheffield, Hatfield, Bradford, Harlesden, Penrith, Weston-super-Mare, Taunton (Mass., U.S.A.), &c., &c.)

"This beautiful work will enhance the reputation won for its composer by his similar composition 'Ariadne.' It shows a charming gift of melody, and no small musicianly skill in its merely technical qualities. It may be recommended to Choral Societies as well worthy of study."—Scotsman.

DICTIONARY

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR J. STAINER.

PREFACE.

The only way in which the Editor of a book of reference can show his gratitude to the public for demanding new editions on the exhaustion of the old, is by doing his best to keep its contents up to date. The reviser has done so; many articles have been entirely re-written or enlarged—e.g., Copyright and Licensing, Madrigal, Mass, Opera, Pianoforte, Pitch, and many of those little slips which show such persistent survival in works of this kind have been removed. The Editor is grateful to many, whose names are among the authors and helpers, for their share in this last revision.

MEG BLANE

A RHAPSODY OF THE SEA

FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

ROBERT BUCHANAN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Price Two Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.

Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts, 7s.

THE TIMES.

It is satisfactory to be able to say that his setting of Robert Buchanan's "Meg Blane" is one of the best things he has done. . . . The declamatory opening is very well imagined, and at the repetition great variety is brought about by allowing a choir of eight parts to answer the soloist's words. A phrase which obviously stands for the idea of intercession is developed and transformed in various ways with very decided skill, and the choral writing, as well as the orchestral, is vigorous and original. The composer, who conducted, was twice recalled and enthusiastically applauded.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Obviously such a subject calls for visibly pictorial treatment, with much energy and equal tenderness. I am glad to say that the composer has fully met the requirements, and that his work gained a distinct success. . . . and now expectant eyes will turn once more to the Anglo-African musician, who has again shown his power in a really masterful manner. . . . the vivid music makes a consistent picture, wild and gloomy—almost terrible—in its climaxes, yet at moments tender and beautiful as mercy itself. That "Meg Blane" will become a favourite work, and do much for the composer's reputation, I cannot doubt.

STANDARD.

In the late Robert Buchanan's poem the Anglo-African composer has found congenial material, and the result is a composition of great excellence. . . . The music is laid out for mezzo-soprano, chorus, and orchestra, the soloist being chiefly employed in the opening and closing portions of the work. Mr. Taylor is successful in painting the relentless fury and power of the sea, and the approach of the huge wave which sweeps the ill-fated vessel on to the rocks and swamps the lifeboat is treated with considerable dramatic power.

MORNING POST.

Mr. Taylor's music is broad in character and direct in its appeal. As usual, colour, both harmonic and orchestral, plays an important part in it. In both kinds the composer is strong. The prologue commences with a few bars of stormy music, and then is heard the central melodic thought of the whole work. From the places where it is introduced it is evidently intended as an "Intercession" theme. The work was admirably rendered under the composer's direction, and received with enthusiasm.

DAILY NEWS.

The subject seems especially to appeal to Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, the more especially as, altogether apart from the important work given to the chorus, it likewise has afforded him an opportunity for the skilful use of the orchestra. The orchestration is, in fact, in some respects more important than in any of his previous compositions. . . . The work is comparatively short, but it is beyond question one of the most effective which the young composer has yet given us. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor was present to conduct in person, and had a hearty reception.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It is quite worthy the best efforts of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, who has very picturesquely illustrated in music a tragedy of the sea. At no time during the festival, with the exception of the opening performance of "Elijah," was the choral work characterised by such grandeur and expression. The chorus "Silent upon the shore," and the epilogue, were the gems of the performance.

HYMN TUNES

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN

COLLECTED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

INCLUDING

SOME HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The fifty-six tunes, with the twelve arrangements, in this volume have been gathered from various sources, and, so far as can be ascertained, the collection is complete.

For eleven years (1861-1872) in the early part of his career, Arthur Sullivan held the organistships of two London churches—St. Michael's, Chester Square, Pimlico, and St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens, Kensington. To this practical experience of a congregation's needs and capabilities, his success as a hymn-tune composer is in a large measure due. "One of the brightest and last-risen stars of our English musical hemisphere," wrote John Hullah of him. . . . These words, charged with the sincerity of honest conviction, if somewhat prophetic at the moment they were written, have been indelibly endorsed by the hand of Time.

HYMN TUNES AND LITANIES

COMPOSED BY THE LATE

REV. J. B. DYKES, MUS. DOC.

COLLECTED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

INCLUDING

MANY HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

The Rev. J. B. Dykes was well known to most people as a writer of beautiful hymn-tunes, but it will come as a surprise to some to find that he had written such a large number as this volume contains.

On looking through the book one is struck by the many tunes that are known and loved by all religious-minded persons—tunes so successfully wedded to the words, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get on without them. . . . They are "on the lips of thousands," and are associated with the most solemn moments of life. But because Dr. Dykes was happy in expressing emotions in a way that was intelligible to the masses, we must not overlook the real difficulty and merit of discovering a musical way to the hearts of men—for not every great composer has been successful with hymn-tunes.

The world is richer for Dr. Dykes's music, and his memory deserves to be loved and honoured by all those who, like himself, strive to follow in the footsteps of the Divine Master.

A NEW EDITION

PREPARED BY

H. B. BRIGGS AND W. H. FRERE

UNDER THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCE OF

JOHN STAINER

(Late President of the Plain-song and Mediæval Music Society).

PREFACE.

THE first edition of The Psalter Noted was published in 1849 under the supervision of the late Rev. Thomas Helmore, and secured for the Gregorian Tones a general recognition of their appropriateness for Divine worship. Subsequently Mr. Helmore's scheme was enlarged by the issue of The Canticles Noted, of A Brief Directory, and of three Appendixes to the Psalter; and the whole collection was issued in one volume under the title of A Manual of Plain-song. The Manual had also two companion books, one of Words only, containing The Canticles and Psalter Accented, the other a collection of Accompanying Harmonies. Thus complete provision was made for the musical performance of the regular services of the Prayer Book. Practical objections, however, to the monotony of the recitation of several Psalms to one Tone without the relief of Antiphons, added to certain difficulties in the pointing, led to the issue of other Psalters which have competed with The Psalter Noted, but without obtaining, any of them, a marked supremacy; and nothing has been issued which covers the whole field so completely as Mr. Helmore's Manual.

Study of the art of Plain-song during the last half century has, however, undergone something like a revolution; on every branch of the question new light has been thrown, and not least upon the principles of pointing. In consequence of repeated demands for a new edition of the Manual, the work of revision was entrusted to the late Sir John Stainer. He readily undertook the task, and called into collaboration Mr. H. B. Briggs and the Rev. W. H. Frere, with the result that before his death he had passed for the press the greater part of the revised proofs prepared by them for the new edition. He had also devoted much time to the consideration, with Mr. Shebbeare, of the Organ Accompaniments, so that the complete work may be considered as his last contribution to the music of the English Church.

His was not the only loss that this book had to undergo in the course of revision, for on the eve of its completion, Mr. Briggs was suddenly called to his rest. So the foregoing words which he had written about Sir John Stainer have now become his own epitaph. Without competing with Sir John Stainer in the wider domain of Church Music he had, in the narrower department of Plain-song, an influence and a competence which were unrivalled; and whatever merits this book may have are due almost entirely to him.

The Manual thus appears in a New Edition, revised in accordance with modern standards of taste and science; it does not cover quite so large a field as formerly, for it contains no music for the Holy Communion; but it has the same counterparts as before in the shape of The Canticles and Psalter Accented, and The Accompanying Harmonies prepared by Mr. Shebbeare, which include accompaniments for the Responses, Te Deum and Litany, as well as for the Tones.

THE VILLAGE TUNE BOOK

CONTAINING

ONE HUNDRED POPULAR HYMN TUNES.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The one hundred hymn-tunes forming this collection have been selected from various sources, old and new. As the earliest can be traced to the year 1551, and the most recent was composed in 1901, they cover a period of three-and-a-half centuries.

In selecting these tunes, care has been taken to provide for all the metres in general use, and the index of first lines may be found useful as a guide to the selection of suitable tunes for particular hymns.

Clergymen and Organists of most Village Churches will find all they need in this collection, and thus be saved the trouble of searching through overlaid volumes; therefore, its practical utility, no less than its varied contents, will, it is hoped, render this book of one hundred hymn-tunes acceptable for use in Divine Service and also in the home circle.

FROM GRIEG TO BRAHMS

STUDIES OF SOME MODERN COMPOSERS AND THEIR ART

BY

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

In a series of essays on Grieg, Dvorák, Saint-Saëns, Franck, Tschalkowsky, and Brahms, Mr. Mason has undertaken to show how each man has brought to his work his own particular temperament and conception of his art, how each has contributed some special quality of expression or beauty to modern music. While the purpose of the book is thus chiefly biographical, the author has considered in an introductory essay, "The Appreciation of Music," and a concluding essay, "The meaning of Music," points of more general interest, such as the process by which music has developed and the place of the art among men's other activities.

Mr. Mason's method is indicated by a sentence in the preface:—"Music may be hard to understand, but musicians are men." So clearly is the human aspect of the subject presented throughout that the book will interest all music-lovers, whether or not they have a technical knowledge of the art. Each essay is accompanied by a portrait of the musician written of and a brief bibliography of those of his works which best illustrate the points touched on in the essay.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING
600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO REVISED EDITION.

With this issue of the new edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music it is desired to direct attention to the additional papers which are printed for the first time in this form.

These are the University of Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper required of all candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors.

These papers will be found most valuable and useful, and for the kind permission to make use of them the author desires to express his most sincere obligations to Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A.; Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc.; Edward J. Chadfield, Esq.; and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A. November, 1898. E. A. D.

A further reprint of the Handbook affords the opportunity of adding the papers set forth for the recent Mus. Doc. Examination at Victoria University, for the use of which the Author is indebted to the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles. August, 1901.

MANUAL OF THE ORCHESTRAL LITERATURE OF ALL COUNTRIES

COMPILED AND EDITED BY A. ROSENKRANZ.

IN CLOTH, PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

The Manual contains an almost complete list of the published orchestral compositions by composers of all countries, from Lully and Rameau (1651) up to the present time—Edward Elgar, Camille Saint-Saëns, and Richard Strauss (1902)—a period covering 250 years.

The 5012 separate works for Orchestra scheduled in the Manual are written by 1337 different composers, and are classified as follows:—

Overtures	1272	Miscellaneous Pieces	434
Symphonies	588	Marches	467
Various Concert Pieces... ..	1542	Music for String Orchestra	709

A special table, showing the degree in which the different nationalities of the various composers are represented, is given in the preface.

An alphabetical list of the names of the composers is placed at the end of the Manual, and whenever it was obtainable, the year in which each composer was born is stated.

In order to keep "The Manual of Orchestral Literature" up to date, and make it absolutely reliable as a Handbook of reference, supplementary lists will be issued at regular intervals.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION, WITH AN APPENDIX.

NOVELLO'S COLLECTION OF WORDS OF ANTHEMS.

*Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 5s. Red Basil and red edges, 7s. 6d.
Appendix only, paper cover, 1s.*

THIS Book, which now contains the Words of about 2,000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a BOOK OF REFERENCE FOR THE SELECTION OF ANTHEMS SUITABLE FOR SPECIAL DAYS, SEASONS, OR OCCASIONS, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly-incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES OF COMPOSERS, WITH LIST OF THEIR ANTHEMS.
ANTHEMS SUITABLE FOR CERTAIN DAYS AND SEASONS.

THE "MESSIAH"

EDITED, AND THE PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT LARGELY RE-WRITTEN, BY EBENEZER PROUT.Paper cover, 2s. ; paper boards, 2s. 6d. ; cloth, gilt, 4s.
Vocal Parts, 1s. each. String Parts, 21s. 6d. ; Wind Parts, 22s. 6d. Full Score, £1 11s. 6d.
Organ Part, 6s. Pianoforte Part, 6d.

In issuing this new Edition of Handel's "Messiah" the publishers may direct attention to two main features of special interest.

First, the assertion of Professor Prout that "it is extremely doubtful whether any other great musical work exists, the text of which is even approximately so corrupt as that of the 'Messiah.'" The Editor, in making the necessary corrections of many deep-rooted errors in the work, has carefully collated the autograph and other manuscript copies, as well as the numerous printed editions of the score, with the result that this edition of Handel's magnum opus may be regarded as practically the only correct version in existence.

Secondly, Professor Prout has in certain instances retained Mozart's additional accompaniments; but he has, to a great extent, re-scored the work in order that the instrumentation shall be practical—in fact, the practical utility of this new edition has been the main object throughout its preparation. The Professor has also written an organ part, and thoroughly revised and largely re-written the pianoforte accompaniment to the vocal score.

The more important discrepancies and alterations, including the discovery of no less than eighty-seven actual wrong notes, are for the most part set forth in detail in the Preface to the Full Score. It may suffice, therefore, to quote an extract from the final paragraph of what may be regarded as a manifesto by Professor Prout on the greatest of Handel's oratorios:—

"I have entered very fully into details in this account of the text, first, because nothing is unimportant that concerns so great a masterpiece as the 'Messiah'; and secondly, because it was only by showing the defects and inaccuracies of existing editions that the appearance of a new one could be justified. I dare not venture to hope that everything found in this volume will meet with unanimous approval; but I can truly say that I have endeavoured, as far as possible, to reproduce Handel's intentions, as I understand them, and so far as they can be realized under modern conditions."

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

It was good news, therefore, that the person best fitted to edit a pure text should have undertaken such a work, since he was marked out for it, not merely by his well-known abilities and tireless industry, but by the fact that he is professor of music in Dublin, the city which has the signal honour of being the place where the music was first brought to a hearing. The "Messiah," in the form to which Professor Ebenezer Prout has given his high authority, has been issued by Messrs. Novello in the ordinary octavo edition, and also in a full score, with a long and detailed preface by the editor. . . . There are a good many points which even the purified performances given by various conductors from time to time, among others by Sir Frederick Bridge at the Albert Hall, have not brought out as clearly as they are brought out by Professor Prout. The effect of the chorus "Let us break their bonds" is greatly enhanced by the omission of the traditional Da capo in the bass air "Why do the nations," and the stupid practice of giving "Since by man came death," and "For as in Adam" to a solo quartet, instead of to the chorus, has been properly denounced by the editor. . . . The performance on Wednesday attracted a very large audience, and was a complete success.

STANDARD.

Professor Prout undertook an exceptionally difficult task in preparing the much-desired revised version. He has been engaged upon it for the past twelvemonth, and the result of his labour has been published by Messrs. Novello. The edition will inevitably excite controversy, but there can be no doubt that Professor Prout was peculiarly qualified to deal with the intricate matter, and to speak with authority on debatable points. . . . An important feature is the division of the words, Handel's Italian method being restored, in several instances with notable increase of impressiveness. Another emendation that may be pointed out is the shortening of some of the quavers into semiquavers.

MORNING POST.

The Dublin professor in purifying the text—he discovered among other things no fewer than eighty-seven wrong notes—has rendered most valuable service. . . . One of the most striking features of the performance was the observance of the sensu ripieni and con ripieni indications in the famous score from which Handel conducted the work at Dublin, i.e., the full and the reduced strings to obtain loud and soft effects. These were specially noticeable in "For unto us," "His yoke is easy," and "He shall feed His flock."

DAILY CHRONICLE.

No more competent or zealous musician than Professor Prout could have entrusted with such a difficult task as that of the revision of a score subjected to so much tinkering during a century and a half. He has studied all the authorities available, and in several instances the results of his labours are exceedingly important independently of the correction of errors that have crept into performances from time to time.

DAILY NEWS.

It must be remembered that Professor Prout has had to bear one chief aim in mind—to provide a working, practical score, not for antiquarians, but for use by our many choral societies. . . . He has succeeded in producing an edition which is at least textually correct. . . . The alteration in which Professor Prout has been most successful is the omission of Mozart's wind parts in the Pastoral Symphony. It is now played very softly on the strings, accompanied by a pedal note on the organ. The effect I thought very beautiful.

GRAPHIC.

Professor Prout has devoted an immense amount of industry to the task of correcting the numberless errors which have gradually invaded the published scores of Handel's work, and his edition of the "Messiah" approximates far more closely to the original than the majority of those that have hitherto been generally used. He has purged the score to a great extent of Mozart's inappropriate prettinesses and of Costa's brazen philistinisms.

MORNING LEADER.

He has with the utmost care and skill collated all existing authorities, and purged the text of all later excrescences—and, as he pathetically exclaims, there is no musical masterpiece of which the text has been in so corrupt a condition. . . . Professor Prout has, with loving care, which cannot be too highly praised, restored in many places Handel's own expression marks, among others the pianos in the opening of "For unto us," for the adoption of which, by the way, some conductors have been very severely blamed. . . . Professor Prout has also discovered exactly when and where Handel wished ripieni (or extra strings) to be used and where not. . . . The whole performance was interesting. The audience was very enthusiastic, and at the beginning of the second part Professor Prout received a tremendous ovation.

THE GLOBE.

At the suggestion of Messrs. Novello Professor Prout recently undertook the work of preparing an authentic score, and his labours have resulted in the discovery and correction of a very great number of errors. The text itself seems to have been corrupt even from the day when the score was first engraved, for the work was very carelessly done. . . . Professor Prout has now given us a version of the "Messiah" which is probably almost exactly as Handel wrote it.

GUARDIAN.

Professor Prout conducted with unremitting zeal and discretion, and the unqualified success of the performance came as a worthy crown to his arduous editorial labours.

TRUTH.

The present generation owe a debt of gratitude to the Dublin Professor for undertaking this labour of love. And he has done his work with unwearying care. . . . the performance was in many respects a most interesting one, if only on account of the scrupulous care which Dr. Prout had taken in preparing it.

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

FIRST SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT, October 14, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters won favour at once with his fine, pure, bright tone, his declamatory powers and vigorous style. He gave first 'Preislied,' from 'Die Meistersinger,' and showed a mastery and power over Wagner's trying vocal music that was admirable. . . . 'Lend me your aid' suited the artist's voice and style to perfection, and he gave a capital rendering of it. . . . At the close of the second part Mr. Masters sang 'Onaway, awake, beloved,' with great expression."—The Northern Whig, October 15, 1902.

HANLEY GLEE AND MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

THE "MESSIAH."—"Mr. Samuel Masters was new to Hanley, though he is well known throughout the country as a most conscientious and capable singer. He has a very strong voice of even compass, and takes the trouble to sing the 'Messiah' music as if he was the first to deliver the impressive messages to humanity. His version of the cavatina 'Behold and see' was delightful, as also was his rendering of the air 'But thou did'st not leave'; his most signal achievement, however, was in 'Thou shalt break them,' choir and audience joining in giving expression to the admiration felt for the effort."—Stafford Sentinel, December 19, 1902.

DUNDEE CHORAL UNION.

THE "MESSIAH."—"Mr. Samuel Masters created a good impression at the outset. He has a voice stronger than the average tenor, but he is not merely a high-set baritone. He has the true tenor timbre in his voice, and he can make his most flute-like tones ring out with accuracy of pitch and rare power."—Dundee Advertiser, December 17, 1902.

SHEFFIELD CHORAL UNION.

THE "MESSIAH."—"Mr. Samuel Masters, a tenor who has proved very successful in London, also won the decided appreciation of the audience. His strong but well-controlled voice was heard to advantage in 'Comfort ye,' and 'Ev'ry valley,' and he sang very finely in later numbers of the work, particularly in 'Thou shalt break them.'"—Sheffield Independent, December 26, 1902.

Terms and Vacant dates apply:—

SAMUEL MASTERS, 61, Alexandra Road, Wimbledon.

MR. HENRY PLEVY

(TENOR)

For Oratorios, Concerts, &c.

Solo Tenor, Christ Church, Lancaster Gate.

BISHOP AUCKLAND.—("CREATION.")—"Mr. Plevy came in for unstinted approbation, his efforts throughout being marked with a style clear and correct."—Northern Echo.

"His singing was greatly to be admired. . . . Aroused considerable enthusiasm."—Auckland Times.

BIRMINGHAM.—("MESSIAH.")—"He has a voice of exceedingly pleasant quality, and gives evidence of highly artistic training; he made a most successful first appearance."—Birmingham Gazette.

SUTTON COLDFIELD.—("CRUSADERS.")—"As Rinaldo, Mr. Plevy showed himself possessed of a tenor voice of excellent compass and quality, which he had completely at command."—Sutton Coldfield News.

"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.

"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.

"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying roles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.

"HENRY J. WOOD."

"ELIJAH."—BROMLEY.—"The title-part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

"Mr. Montague Borwell was a perfect exponent of the fiery Prophet. He is the nearest approach to Santley I have heard for a long time. The dramatic instinct, the necessary sarcasm, and the devotional spirit of the Prophet were all there. The great air, 'Is not His Word,' being sung with much spirit, the top F sang as resonantly as a bell. The beautiful air, 'It is enough,' was splendidly sung, and Mr. Borwell had to repeatedly bow his acknowledgments."—Tonbridge Free Press.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).

"ELIJAH."—"Miss Winifred Marwood made a great impression by her rendering of 'Hear ye, Israel.' It was sung as it should be—prayerfully, and not shouted to the people."—Tonbridge Free Press.

"HIAWATHA."—"Miss Winifred Marwood, a soprano of wide range and pleasing method, and Mr. Montague Borwell, a resonant baritone, took the solos in the second scene, and their treatment of the deeply pathetic picture left little to be desired."—Surrey Advertiser.

Address, 56, Forburg Road, Stoke Newington, N.

MR. JOHN BROWNING

(BARITONE).

Soloist, Leeds Musical Festivals and of the leading English, Scotch, and Irish Concerts. Extensive repertoire of over 100 works.

"MESSIAH."—PHILHARMONIC HALL, LIVERPOOL, Dec. 26, 1902.—"Of the bass solo work Mr. John Browning gave a praiseworthy account, both voice and method being in perfect accord with the most artistic ideas of the requirements of the music."—Post.

"... Whilst from Mr. John Browning the bass solos received a most dignified and intelligent interpretation."—Mercury.

"Mr. John Browning's splendid bass voice was heard to advantage in that grandest of bass songs, 'Why do the nations,' which was rapturously applauded."—Courier.

"MESSIAH."—BLACKBURN ST. CECILIA SOCIETY, Dec. 25, 1902.—

"In selecting Mr. John Browning to fill the bass part the committee made a capital choice. His fine massive voice was heard to great advantage. In 'Why do the nations' his declamation was at once stirring and artistic. He received a furor of applause, which was repeated when he sang 'The trumpet shall sound.'"—Standard.

"Mr. John Browning is a thorough artist."—Times.

"MESSIAH."—HEBDEN BRIDGE CHORAL UNION, Dec. 23, 1902.—

"Added another to previous successes at Hebdens Bridge."—Times.

"Has a deep, rich voice, over which he has great command."—News.

AVR CHORAL UNION, Dec. 18, 1902.—"The two solo vocalists may be classed among the best that have appeared at the Union Concerts. Mr. John Browning has a smooth resonant voice, which he can make effective in a high degree, without any forcing of tone."—Advertiser.

"MESSIAH."—WAKEFIELD, Dec. 30, 1902.—"Was in remarkably good voice, and roused the audience to a pitch of enthusiasm."—Express.

"CREATION."—STOCKTON-ON-TEES CHORAL SOCIETY, Jan. 15, 1903.—"The able performance of Mr. John Browning was one of the features of the evening."—Northern Echo.

Address, Marlboro' Grove, Leeds.

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

(BASS).

Licentiate (Artist) of the Royal Academy of Music, of the Gloucester and Cheltenham Festivals, &c.

"ANCIENT MARINER" (LEICESTER).—"The bass solos were admirably interpreted by Mr. Henry Sunman. All through he sang with a polish and refinement that was superb, but in his rendering of the air 'Swiftly, swiftly flew' he fairly brought down the house."

Please address, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

MR. JAMES COLEMAN

(BASS)

(Vicar-Choral, Lichfield Cathedral).

WEST BROMWICH CHORAL SOCIETY,

December 23, 1902.

"MESSIAH."

"Mr. James Coleman's rendering of the recit. and air 'Thus saith the Lord' and 'But who may abide' stamped him as an artist of the first order."—Chronicle, Dec. 27, 1902.

"Mr. James Coleman's rendering of 'Why do the nations?' was about as brilliant and successful a performance as we remember to have heard in the Town Hall. It was emphatically one of the chief musical treats of the evening, and the singer may be warmly congratulated upon the brilliance and vigour with which he acquitted himself. The audience waxed very enthusiastic, and not without good reason."—Free Press, Dec. 27, 1902.

"As Vicar-Choral of Lichfield Cathedral, Mr. Coleman's training is one admirably adapted to interpret the 'Messiah' and sacred music. His singing was excellent, and his expression just and suitable. 'Why do the nations?' was magnificently delivered, and 'The trumpet shall sound' was everything that could be desired."—Midland Advertiser, December 27, 1902.

DARLASTON CHORAL SOCIETY.

"ST. PAUL."

"Too much praise cannot be awarded to Mr. Coleman's singing of the solos allotted to him; which was a brilliant performance. He is the happy possessor of a very fine bass voice, and what is more, knows how to use it. The feeling which he introduces into his readings is a notable feature, and adds further success to his achievements."—Leader, Jan. 3, 1903.

SUTTON COLDFIELD CHORAL SOCIETY.

"THE CRUSADERS."

"A most capable exponent of the Peter music was found in Mr. James Coleman. Both in quality of voice and artistic rendering of the music, one could hardly have wished for anything finer, and one would have to go a long way back in local musical annals to recollect a voice of finer timbre, waking the echoes of the Sutton Town Hall. Both in the softer and again in the declamatory passages, Mr. Coleman was alike successful. In the second part of the programme Mr. Coleman roused the audience to enthusiasm by his spirited rendering of 'Ho! Jolly Jenkin,' and he made an even greater impression in his encore."—Sutton Coldfield News, Dec. 12, 1902.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.

Thursday.—Up, and I up and down the town [Salisbury], and find it a very brave place. The river goes through every street; and a most capacious market-place. The city great, I think greater than Hereford. But the Minster most admirable; as big, I think, and handsomer than Westminster: and a most large Close about it, and houses for the Officers thereof, and a fine palace for the Bishop. So to my lodging back, and took out my wife and people to show them the town and Church; but they being at prayers, we could not be shown the quire. A very good organ. . . . So back home; and there being light we to the church, and there find them at prayers again, so could not see the quire; but I sent the women home, and I did go in and saw very many fine tombs. So home to dinner.—From the Diary of Mr. Pepys, June 11, 1668.

The leisurely travelling conditions of Mr. Pepys's day enabled the wayfarer to see places that are now rushed past at express speed. How often one hears something like this: 'Salisbury; yes, it has the tallest spire in England, I have seen it from the train'! But to spend a week-end, or even a day there under the shadow of its lovely Cathedral is a real enjoyment to anyone who is able to appreciate the beautiful.

The pleasure attending such a visit is, however, greatly enhanced by a little preliminary study of the history associated with a place, or building. This helps to create an environment, and one alights from the train feeling to some extent equipped for the personal contact with scenes that have become already deeply impressed upon one's mind. In regard to Salisbury, its history and that of its famous Cathedral are, for our present purpose, soon grasped. About a mile to the north of the city is the site of Old Sarum, —called by the Saxons Searobyrig, the dry city—formerly a fortified place, now a mound. A fine Cathedral, 270 feet long by 75 feet wide, stood there until the 13th century. One of the Old Sarum bishops, Osmund (died 1099), afterwards canonized as St. Osmund, deserves special mention in that he initiated the Sarum Use. In compiling this 'Consuetudinarium,' Osmund had collated the various forms of ritual in use in many churches both in England and abroad. The 'Use' was almost entirely re-written and re-arranged by Bishop Richard Poore in the 13th century. Its adoption by almost the whole of England reflected much glory upon Sarum throughout the country, so that, in the words of Bishop Giles de Bridport, 'like the sun in his heavens, the church of Salisbury is conspicuous above all other churches in the world, diffusing the light everywhere and supplying their defects.' Osmund was chaplain to William the Conqueror, and it is said that the first body of canons chosen by him were noted for their learning and skill in music. William of Malmesbury speaks of 'Canonicorum claritas cantibus et literatura juxta nobilium.'

Much of interest might be written about other bishops of Sarum—for instance, one Roger, who gained his mitre by singing a hunting mass quickly before Henry I.! and the aforesaid Giles de Bridport, who 'granted 200 lbs. of wax annually from his wardrobe for increasing the lights in the church—but we may specially refer to Bishop Richard Poore, who entirely belied his patronymic in that he waxed exceedingly rich. It was owing to the efforts of Bishop Poore that the site of Salisbury Cathedral was changed from Old Sarum to its present situation. This was early in the 13th century. The foundation stones—for there were many—of the stately structure as we now see it were laid on April 28, 1220. The building of the Cathedral occupied altogether forty-six years, and cost, according to present-day value, half-a-million of money. Two features of special interest from an architectural point of view are: (1) that it is the first important building entirely in the style known as Early English, and (2) that it has the rare distinction of having been erected upon a virgin site. Both these attributes are very vividly brought within the vision of the beholder. Most cathedrals contain a mixture of styles, but at Salisbury, with a few very trifling exceptions, Early English, as practised from A.D. 1220 to 1258, gives the noble edifice an unity of design unique among English cathedrals. This unity is not only a feature of the design, but can be traced in the astonishing regularity of the size of the stones. As soon as the builders finished one part of the stonework they copied it exactly in the next, regardless of trouble or expense. Certainly not to them could be applied the lines :—

They made the front, upon my word,
As fine as any abbey,
But, thinking they could cheat the Lord,
They made the back part shabby.

Hardly less beautiful than the perfectly proportioned Cathedral is the 'most large Close about it, and houses for the Officers thereof, and a fine palace for the Bishop,' to quote genial, gossiping Mr. Pepys. No wonder that poets and painters have been inspired by so fair a scene—the sanctuary standing there, like some fair jewel set in peaceful surroundings of perfect appropriateness.

The famous spire is literally the outstanding feature of Salisbury Cathedral. It is the loftiest

THE HIGH STREET GATE.

in England, being 404 feet in height, and the most beautiful in the world. The noble two-storied North porch, the imposing West front, and the symmetrically perfect cloisters add to the charm of the scene; and in gazing upon the whole structure, whether in the glory of the mid-day sun, or in the calm, cold light of the moon, one naturally recalls the lines :—

They dreamt not of a perishable home
Who thus could build

The plan of the building is that of a double cross. An uncommon feature of the Nave is the connected base of the main columns. Extremely beautiful is the Triforium, in style not unlike Westminster. The strengthening arches across the transepts will not escape notice, recalling as they do similar work at Wells and Canterbury; these arches (circa 1481) are perpendicular across the Great Transepts and inverted in the East (or Choir) Transepts. The unusually large number of windows, pillar and doorways in the Cathedral may be ascertained from the following local rhyme :—

As many days as in one year there be,
So many windows in this church we see;
As many marble pillars here appear
As there are hours throughout the fleeting year;
As many gates as moons one year does view—
Strange tale to tell! Yet not more strange than true.

The Chapter House, octagonal in form, is remarkable for the sculptures which ornament the spandrels of an arcade between the bases of the windows and the seats. These figures, in high relief, illustrate various scriptural subjects. On entering the Cloisters one cannot fail to be struck by the long vista of the arcades, the verdure of the grass in the open area, with the two cedar trees in the centre, and the view of the Cathedral; and the prospect is one justifying the statement that the Cloisters of Salisbury constitute 'one of the finest ornamental enclosures in the Kingdom.'

Before proceeding to refer to the literary and musical interests of the Cathedral, a slight digression may be made in regard to some ancient music-makings in the city. Two hundred years ago there existed at Salisbury a 'Society of Lovers of Musick.' A very early reference to the proceedings of these enthusiasts is to be found in—

A Sermon preach'd at the Cathedral Church of Sarum, November 22, 1700. Before a Society of Lovers of Musick. By THOMAS NAISS, M.A., Sub-Dean of Sarum. London . . . 1701.

From this discourse of the Sub-Dean's a sentence, quite Shakespearean in expression may be quoted: 'A man's mind must be very tough and dry, or the musick very mean and insipid, if he is not wrought upon thereby.'

A musical festival was held in 1727 and probably annually till 1741, when 'St. Cecilia's Concert included vocal and instrumental musick at the Cathedral Church in the morning and an ordinary for gentlemen at the Crown and Mitre tavern,' in addition to a ball after the concert. These festivals were held 'for the benefit of the City Musick,' but in one year (1743), 'Widow Gingell' shared in the proceeds. New music by Mr. Handel—then in the flesh—was frequently announced, the orchestra being strengthened by 'additional hands from London, Oxford, and Bath.' In September, 1748, a local professor announced as the most attractive features of his benefit concert 'the two celebrated French Horns from the Opera House; and likewise the famous March in Judas Maccabæus, accompanied by the Original Side Drum.' One would like to know where that 'original side drum' came from.

To return to the festivals. That of 1749—then a two-days' function—brought forward 'a Grand Concerto for a Trumpet, Kettle Drums, &c.' On October 5, 1750, 'at the New Assembly Rooms was performed the Messiah, or Sacred Oratorio.' This is a very early instance of the performance of Handel's masterpiece in the provinces, as it was not given at the meetings of the Three Choirs till seven years later. The 'Messiah,' however, did not gain admittance into the Cathedral until the year 1752, when it was announced as 'an anthem taken from the first and second Acts of the Messiah, or Sacred Oratorio' on the first day, and the remaining portion on the second day of the festival. The band and chorus parts of the 'Messiah' used on these occasions must, of course, have been in manuscript. An account, from the Salisbury Journal, of the festival concert given on September 28, 1750, may be quoted as showing the disposition of the band, &c. :—

The vocal performers were eighteen in number, among whom the principal were Dr. Hayes, Professor of Musick at Oxford, his two Sons, and Mr. Freeman. The Instrumental Performers consisted of sixteen Violins, two Hautboys, two Tenor Violins, a Bassoon, a Harpsichord, four Violoncellos, two Double Basses, with French Horns, Trumpets and Drums.

The Music was performed with great Spirit and exactness, and was received with Applause by a numerous and brilliant audience.

It should be remembered that at that time Handel was living in London, and this information shows that during his lifetime the composer did not restrict the performances of his 'Messiah' to London or to those under his own direction.

All the above-mentioned pieces ['Messiah,' 'Te Deum,' 'Samson,' 'Judas,' &c.] were the compositions of one and the same Author, Mr. Handel, whose fertile and transcendent genius has justly acquired him a continued and universal Admiration for more than forty years past.

company of the librarian, the Rev. S. M. Lakin, who has been connected with the Cathedral for more than half-a-century. One of the oldest books in the Library is a Psalter of the Gallican Version, written on vellum and dating from the 10th century. The Calendar is ornamented with the signs of the Zodiac drawn in red outline, and the Psalter and Canticles have large initials chiefly formed of dragons. A 'Breviarium secundum usum Sarum' (circa 1460) contains the service for the enthronement of the Boy Bishop. This fine and handsomely written manuscript is ornamented with initials and borders in gold and colours. The unique 'Tonale secundum usum Sarum' bound up with an 'Ordinale secundum usum Sarum,' written on vellum, is of the 14th century. Another treasure is a contemporary copy of Magna Charta, said to be the transcript entrusted to the care of William Longespée, Third Earl of Salisbury, but which is doubtless one of the copies sent round to all the Cathedrals. Among the printed books are 15th and 16th century tomes of extreme rarity. A copy of the 'Returning Backslider,' by the Puritan divine Richard Sibbes, contains this couplet in the handwriting of Izaak Walton :—

Of this blest man let this just praise be given,
Heaven was in him before he was in heaven.

THE NAVE TRANSEPT.

In considering the strictly musical part of our subject the various organs may first claim attention. An early reference thereto is of the year 1480, when the great organ was standing in the Nave (in corpore ecclesiae). Three organs are mentioned in the year 1539—of which the chief then stood on the choir screen, the remaining two instruments being located in the Lady Chapel and probably near the High Altar. There is a recorded charge for a 'Sache of Colles, for to breathe the Organ in the Choir,' whatever that may mean. A hundred years later a contract was made for enlarging the great organ and adding a choir organ in order to make it 'a perfect good organ after the fashion of St. Paul's, London.' In anticipation of the troublous times of the Commonwealth the Dean and Chapter caused the organ to be taken down and its parts safely stowed away, thus in 1648 we find the following disbursement recorded:—

4 men helping to take down the organ .. 4s. od.
Beer for them 6d

After the Restoration, Thomas Harris, organ-maker, was employed to re-erect the hidden instrument. In December, 1668, he also undertook to build a new organ to consist of '4 stops and one half,' viz. :—

A diapason, consort pitch.
A flute.
A twelfth, from y^e diapason.
A fifteenth.
A hoyboy half way.

The compass from A re to C sol in alt.

This miniature organ was probably erected as a security for the debt of £50 then owing by Harris to the Dean and Chapter. One of the seven signatories to the agreement was 'Michael Wise,' then recently appointed organist.

We may now pass on to the wonderful organ built in 1710 by Renatus Harris. Its magnificent case (of which we give an illustration) stood forty feet high and twenty feet broad; moreover, this instrument had the distinction of being the first four-manual organ erected in England. One of the keyboards, however, acted on stops borrowed from the great organ. The specification (printed in full in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' ii., 595) included a 'Drum Pedal, C C,' the 'roll' of which was caused by the addition of a second pipe sounding a semitone below the first pipe, with which it caused a rapid beat. The following particulars of this Harris organ are taken from the original of the illustration given on the opposite page :—

This instrument consisting of four sets of keys and fifty stops, stands over y^e choir door and is above 40 foot high & 20 foot broad, the arch under which it stands being lofty, and but narrow, would admit no larger extension in breadth, and yet it was judg'd necessary to carry the finishings very high, to render this figure more lively & proportionable to the structure of the Church (which is from the pavement to the vaulting thereof 80 foot high). The Organ Blower, as well as the bellows which are very large, have room in the body of y^e case, in which are all y^e movements, keys, rollar boards, and eleven stops of Echos, and yet the sight of the work is conceal'd from him as he is from the people in the church or gallery. This Organ is a new contrivance, and on it may be more variety express'd than by all y^e Organs in England, were their several excellencies united. The figures designed for the finishing of y^e Choir Organ are not as yet set up, neither are y^e finishings of y^e great organ fore short'n'd in this print according to perspective, because all parts of the instrument should answer the scale.

In 1792 Renatus Harris's four-manual organ gave place to one of three manuals built by Green, the gift of King George III. in his capacity of 'a Berkshire gentleman,' as until 1836 that county was included in the diocese of Sarum. The present instrument—a splendid example of the handiwork of the late Father Willis—was built in 1876-77 at a cost of £3,500, and is the munificent gift of Miss Chafyn Grove. The case cost an additional £1,000, and on the blowing apparatus—invented by Willis for Salisbury, and afterwards used by him at St. Paul's Cathedral and elsewhere—a further sum of between £800 and £1,000 was spent. Here is the specification of the organ, which is divided and placed on each side of the Choir, as at St. Paul's Cathedral:—

Salisbury has a Choristers' School attached to its Cathedral; moreover, it is one of the earliest which obtained a separate endowment, due to Bishop Roger de Mortival in 1319. In the reigns of Edward II. and Edward III., property of very considerable value was dedicated to the maintenance and education of fourteen choristers. A copy of a tailor's bill for the clothing of a chorister in 1632 has been preserved. It reads thus:

Cloath Coate and hose and sharge Weskett.
8 doz. silke coate buttons at 4½d. per dozen.
Flaning to line y^e Coate.
For a shoulder nott 1s. 5d.
For knee strings and pockets 8d.

For a pr. of wostered stockings.
For making of y^e Cloath Coate and hosen and half slives and sharge weskett 7s.
For letter Pockett. . . .

Several former choristers became cathedral organists: Edward Lowe, organist of Christ Church, Oxford, from 1630 (?) to 1682, and Joseph Corfe and J. E. Richardson, both organists of Salisbury, being amongst them. The following can also be claimed as 'old boys': Charles Lucas, third Principal of the Royal Academy of Music; Dr. C. G. Verrinder, the late Signor Franco Novara (W. F. Nash), and Albert Ernest Alsor Clair Ford, better known as Mr. Ernest Ford.

One of the choristers is appointed 'Bishop's boy.' This is an office of great antiquity, as there are frequent entries in the Capitular Registers with regard to him, and in the 15th century the names of some of these boys are recorded. One of the duties of the 'Bishop's boy' is to ascertain before every service whether the Bishop will attend at the Cathedral, and he walks before the Apparitor, in his surplice, on such occasions. He is admitted to this office by the Bishop in a formal manner. The boy kneels before the Bishop, who lays his hands upon him and says:—

A. B. admitto te in Puerum Episcopi, in nomine Patris, et Filii et Spiritus Sancti. Amen.

This is an old custom in Sarum Cathedral, and it would be interesting to know whether there are other cathedrals in which such custom is observed, or can be traced as formerly in use. At the enthronement of a new Bishop the Bishop's boy, under a tree opposite the Choristers' School, speaks a congratulatory address in Latin to the Bishop, and the Prelate replies, also in Latin, beginning with 'Boy of eminent hope, and you white-robed scholars of our Church,' and concluding, before the Benediction, with 'May God guard you in school and in games, at table, and at your chambers.'

At the present time the Choristers' School is in a very flourishing condition under the able direction of the Rev. Arthur G. Robertson, the Headmaster and a Vicar-Choral of the Cathedral who, by-the-way, is an old boy of St. Michael's College, Tenbury. Sixteen choristers are under his care and influence, and they give evident proof of happy lives spent in delightful surroundings. Candidates must have good voices; they are admitted between the ages of eight and ten years, and they receive a good classical education. The parents of the boys are required to pay the sum of £12 per annum towards the cost of board and education. The boys live in a fine old house in the Close, but their practice room is located in the garden of the organist's house. Here one may listen to the careful vocal training imparted to the choristers by Mr. South, the organist. There is an organ in this old apartment, and the music library is a model of neatness. In the accompanying photograph the traditional cambric frills worn by the Salisbury choristers will be noticed.

Once a year—on the August Bank-holiday—there is held an annual festival of old choristers who, in the absence of the Lay Clerks on vacation, sustain the entire service at evensong. The proceedings also include a cricket match (Past v. Present), a concert in the Schoolroom, tea at the Deanery, &c. The Sarum Choristers' School is one that deserves 'full marks' for admirably discharging a very important duty in Cathedral life.

The most famous of the Vicars-Choral was the Rev. Thomas Lawes, eminent as the father of Henry and William Lawes. He died November 7, 1640, and was buried in the Cathedral or its precincts. An old-time singing-man (circa 1609) distinguished himself in quite and in 1539 Thos. Knyght received the sum of 2s. for playing 'in the week of Pentecost.' These payments were doubtless those made to Vicars-Choral before a regular organist was appointed—the title 'Sir' being used as a designation of those in holy orders.

According to Mr. John E. West's 'Cathedral Organists,' the earliest recorded 'chief musician' at Salisbury was John Farrant, composer of 'Farrant in D minor,' who reigned from 1598 to 1602. But although Farrant may be the earliest post-Reformation organist, there is mention of one Thomas, called 'Organista,' who was given a minor office on Sept. 27, 1454.

an extraordinary manner. This gentleman left the Cathedral during service and made his way to the Deanery, where he tried to murder the Dean, chasing that alarmed cleric round the house till he locked himself in a room. The murderously disposed Lay Clerk thereupon returned to his place in the Cathedral and took part in the anthem!

Some of the organists may now claim attention. In the year 1536 the following entry occurs in the Chapter books:—

Pd. Thos. Knyght for playing the organ his salary for the quarter . . . 6s. 8d.

Again:—

Pd. to Sir Beckwyth for playing the organ for the whole year . . . 26s. 8d.

To John Farrant succeeded John Holmes, one of the contributors to 'The Triumphs of Oriana' and the master of Adrian Batten and Edward Lowe. Ellis Gibbons (brother of the famous Orlando, and also a contributor to 'Oriana'), Edward Tucker and Giles Tomkins are also worthy of mention. These three were the immediate predecessors of the most widely known organist of Salisbury, Michael Wise, composer of such deeply expressive anthems as 'The ways of Zion do mourn,' and 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord,' and other similar creations to the number of thirty-six. He is said to have been born in the city (but this lacks confirmation) in 1638. He was appointed organist of Salisbury in 1668. That he was a pluralist is proved by the fact of his having been sworn in a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal—in succession to Raphael Courteville, deceased—on January 6, 1676, but at the coronation of James II. (April 23, 1685), Mr. Wise 'was then suspended and did not appear.' On January 27, 1687, in the year of his death, he became Almoner and Master of the Choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral. He must therefore have spent much of his time in travelling between Salisbury and London.

The Chapter records of Salisbury throw light upon Michael Wise's doings and misdoings. On April 20, 1679, a Mr. Mitternacht was appointed to play the organ as his substitute, Mitternacht's salary during the time he thus acted being deducted from that of the chief musician of the Cathedral. Fines of 5s., 10s., and 20s., and admonitions for absences and irregular attendances on the part of Mr. Wise, profess, that I am heartily sorry for that my miscarriage, & do very humbly desire their pardon; promising to behave myself hereafter with all reverence & duty in my place, according to y^e promise which I made at my admission.

Against the foregoing must, however, be recorded the following payment made by the Dean and Chapter, and to their credit, be it said:—

To Michael Wise 50s. for his paines in setting certain anthems.

He figures in 'The Wiltshire Ballad' of 1680 (Bagford Collection), of which a specimen stanza may be quoted:—

This was the Humble Holy Guise
Of the Religiously Precise
Which made them Gallop to Mic. Wise
To Sign it.

Michael Wise met his death at the hand of a night watchman on August 24, 1687. He is and the dismissal of Mitternacht—all recorded in the Chapter books—show that the organist and his deputy gave their superiors some trouble. The following entries refer to an accusation made against the Dean and Chapter by Organist Michael Wise:—

11 May, 1674—Accusation: That y^e Dean and Chapter within these seven years last past had received of y^e choristers rents above y^e sum of Three Hundred pounds more than ever they pay'd to him or y^e choristers.

May 23, 1674.—I Michael Wise do acknowledge that rashly and inconsiderately I said some words, which tended to y^e reproach & dishonor of y^e Dean & Chapter which upon better thoughts I have reason to believe were false. I do therefore hereby declare & said to have 'quarrelled with his (second) wife on some trivial matter, and rushed out of his house. The watchman met him while he was boiling with rage, and commanding him to stand and give an account of himself, he struck the guardian of the peace to the ground, who in return aimed a blow at his assailant with his bill, which broke his skull, of the consequence whereof he died.' All biographers of Wise give Salisbury as the place of his untimely end, but, strangely enough, no entry of his burial is to be found anywhere in that city. Burney and Hawkins are generally given as the authorities for the statement that Salisbury was the deathplace, but these historians probably obtained their information from Anthony à Wood's MS. biographical notes of musicians, now in the Bodleian Library. Here is the extract from Wood :—

He [Wise] was knock'd on the head & kill'd downright by the night-watch at Salisbury for giving stubborn & refractory language to them on S. Bartholomew's day at night, an. 1687.

Anthony à Wood, not altogether a model of accuracy, may easily by a slip of the pen have written Salisbury for London, and the possibilities are that Wise met his death during one of his necessary visits to the Metropolis.

We may now pass on to the two Corfes, father and son, both natives of Salisbury, who between them held office for the long period of seventy-one years. Joseph (the elder) is buried in the Cathedral, and the remains of Arthur Thomas Corfe rest in the South cloister. The latter died suddenly, while kneeling at his bedside in the act of prayer, in his ninetieth year. The present holder of the office is Mr. Charles Frederick South, born in London, February 6, 1850. He studied music under his brother, Mr. H. J. South, and the late George Cooper. His organ appointments previous to Salisbury were Aske's Hospital, Hoxton (1866), and the Church of St. Augustine and St. Faith, under the shadow of St. Paul's Cathedral (1868). He resigned the latter post on his appointment to Salisbury in succession to Mr. Bertram Luard Selby in 1883. For a few years he conducted the Sarum Choral Society; but he now devotes most of his time to the Cathedral, with results that testify to his conscientious attention to duty in one of the fairest of fanes in the land.

It is no wonder that music-loving and saintly George Herbert experienced untold delight in his 'twice-a-week foot-walk' to Salisbury from his parsonage at Bemerton hard by. And has not a gentle poet of later time (Coventry Patmore) said :—

Once more I came to Sarum Close,
With joy half memory, half desire,
And breathed the sunny wind that rose
And blew the shadows o'er the spire,
And toss'd the lilac's scented plumes,
And sway'd the chestnut's thousand cones,
And fill'd my nostrils with perfumes,
And shaped the clouds in waifs and zones,
And wafted down the serious strain
Of Sarum bells.

For valued assistance in the preparation of this article thanks are ungrudgingly tendered to the following: the Rev. S. M. Lakin, M.A., Librarian of the Cathedral; the Rev. Arthur G. Robertson, M.A., Master of the Choristers' School and Vicar-Choral; Mr. A. R. Malden, Chapter Clerk; Mr. George Freemantle, Dean's Verger; Messrs. Witcomb and Son, for permission to reproduce their excellent photographs; and to Mr. Charles F. South, Cathedral organist, for his kindness in various ways.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

English Church Music has claims which should not pass unheeded. In it the art is devoted to its highest use. The men who, through the centuries, have created this glorious heritage of native productiveness by their devotional strains should be held in grateful remembrance. Certain of them have found a place in the niche of fame for all time—Henry Purcell to wit—and the chosen few of these masters of sacred song would surely be incomplete without honourable mention of 'the chief musician' who forms the subject of this Biographical Sketch.

Maurice Greene made his entry into the world about the time that Henry Purcell took his departure. The exact date of his birth—it took place in London—is unknown, but the years 1695 or 1696 may be accepted as the nearest approach to accuracy. His ancestors were of the law and church—his grandfather, John Greene, a Recorder of London; his father, the Rev. Dr. Thomas Greene, vicar of the now demolished church of St. Olave, Jewry, and St. Martin, Ironmonger Lane. Master Greene became a chorister of St. Paul's Cathedral. He is said to have first worn his surplice during one of Queen Anne's visits—'repeated with glorious frequency,' says Milman—to the great and then unfinished Cathedral in 1707. If this be true, the occasion in all probability was 'the General Thanksgiving for the happy Union of the Kingdoms of England and Scotland,' on May 1, 1707, 'when the Te Deum with proper anthems were sung by Her Majesty's Choir.' At that time Jeremiah Clark, composer of the tune 'St. Magnus,' was organist, and Greene doubtless shared in the consternation caused by the untimely end of poor Jerry Clark, who 'shot himself with a little Screw-Pistol in the side of the Head' in consequence of a love affair. Charles King—designated by Greene 'the serviceable man'—succeeded Clark as Almoner and Master of the choristers, and the subject of this sketch became his pupil for harmony.

In the year 1710, Greene was articled to Richard Brind, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, for a term of six years. It was during this period that, according to Burney, 'from Greene's great admiration of Handel's manner of playing, he had sometimes literally condescended to become his bellows-blower, when he went to St. Paul's to play on that organ, for the exercise it afforded him in the use of pedals. Handel, after the three o'clock prayers, used frequently to get himself and young Greene locked up in the church together; and, in summer, often stript unto his shirt, and played till eight or nine o'clock at night.' If, as Burney asserts, there were pedals to the St. Paul's organ at that time, their introduction into England is much earlier than is always stated. Certain it is that subsequent to Handel's death

Father Smith's fine organ contained two octaves of short pedals—'toe pedals'—which, however, only pulled down the great organ keys, as there were no pedal pipes.

At about the age of twenty, Maurice Greene obtained the organistship of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West through the influence, it is said, of his uncle, Serjeant Greene, learned in the law. The following advertisement from the Daily Courant of December 12, 1717, may serve to introduce the next change in the young organist's career:—

Whereas Edward Purcell, only son to the Famous Mr. Henry Purcell, stands candidate for the Organist's place of St. Andrew, Holborn, in the room of his uncle Mr. Daniel Purcell, deceased—This is to give notice, that the place is to be decided by a general Poll of Housekeepers of the Parish, whom he humbly hopes, notwithstanding the false and malicious reports of his being a Papist, will be assistant to him in obtaining the said place.

N.B.—The election will begin upon Tuesday the 17th, at nine in the morning, and continue till Friday following, to four in the afternoon.

The above advertisement states that Daniel Purcell was not in the flesh at the time of the contest, but some authorities assert that he had been 'displaced' from the organistship of St. Andrew's. No record appears to exist giving the result of this four-days' voting of the 'Housekeepers of the Parish,' but the final decision seems to have been in the hands of the Vestry, and its Minutes of February 17, 1718, furnish the result:—

The question being put whether the vestry should take the election of an organist into their nomination, it was agreed in the affirmative.

The candidates were:—

Mr. Short
„ Isham „ Young „ Green „ Pursill „ Haydon
„ Harris
„ Hart.....

Mr. Green is elected Organist of the Parish of St. Andrew, Holborn.

In other words the election was unanimous. A salary of fifty pounds was attached to the post, which Greene held conjointly with that of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, a plurality which the Vestry did not allow to his successor, Mr. John Isham, who also received a yearly salary of 'Fifty pounds pay'd him out of the Bells and Palls.'

Greene had only held his new post at St. Andrew's, Holborn, for a month, when, on March 20, 1718, he was appointed organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, in succession to Richard Brind, deceased. He was then twenty-two. The oft-repeated statement that, in addition to his salary as organist, Dean Godolphin procured him the emoluments of a Vicar-Choral, as a special mark of favour, is not borne out by the Chapter records, as Greene's predecessors also held a Vicar-Choralship in addition to the office of organist. Handel continued his visits to the organ in St. Paul's, as we learn from Applebee's Weekly Journal of August 29, 1724, that:—

Their Royal Highnesses the Princess Anne and Princess Caroline came to St. Paul's Cathedral and heard the famous Mr. Handel (their musick-master) perform upon the organ.

The next recorded event in his life is not musical, but Masonic. In the year 1725 he was registered a member of the Masonic Lodge meeting at the Ship Tavern, without Temple Bar, Charles King, his quondam master and fellow-worker at St. Paul's being the Master of the Lodge, and two of the Minor Canons the Wardens. From the Ship to the Crown and Anchor is an easy transition, especially as both those taverns were situated in the Strand. At the latter the Academy of Vocal Music held its music-makings on alternate 'Frydays, solemn dayes excepted.' At the first feast of song—held on Friday, January 7, 1728—the thirteen members present (exclusive of the St. Paul's boys) included King, Gates, Weely, Pepusch, Greene, Gaillard, each of whom paid half-a-crown towards the cost of the evening's proceedings. The expenses are set forth thuswise:—

A coach for ye children	2	0
Wine and bread	10	6
for the use of ye room, fire and candles ..	5	0
the Drawer	1	0

At the next meeting we meet with the names of Flintoft and Dr. Croft, and later on Bononcini, Haym, Geminiani, Dieupart, and Senesino. In 1727, Steffani was elected President, and two years later the sixty-nine members included Hogarth and John Robinson. The Society continued to exist until 1731 and, judging from the names above given, the meetings must have been of a very enjoyable nature.

Honours came to Maurice Greene with remarkable rapidity. In 1727 Dr. Croft died, and the Cheque Book of the Chapel Royal of that year records the following appointment:—

Mr. Maurice Greene, by Virtue of a Warrant from the Rt. Revd. Edmund, Lord Bishop of London, Dean of His Majesty's Royal Chapels, was Sworn Organist and Composer of the Chapel Royal, vacant by the death of Wm. Croft, Dr. of Musick, this 4th day of September, 1727.

EDW. ASPINWALL,

Sub-Dean.

It is said that Greene obtained this coveted post through the influence of the Countess of Peterborough, formerly Anastasia Robinson, one of Handel's prima donnas.

His daily duties at St. Paul's Cathedral doubtless caused him to pass along Paternoster Row. Now in those days two sisters, Dillingham by name, kept a milliner's shop in that now bookish thoroughfare. These fair damsels were related to the wife of Charles King and to Jeremiah Clark, and in course of time to Maurice Greene, as Mary of those milliners twain became Mrs. Greene.

The next event in his career was not altogether a very creditable episode of the Handel-Bononcini quarrel. Greene appears to have shown warm friendship towards Handel and at the same time to have courted his rival with no less servile admiration. When Handel discovered this duality of affection, he angrily withdrew from all intercourse with Greene, who thenceforward threw all the influence of his position into upholding the cause of Bononcini. Unfortunately, Greene was made the instrument of introducing at the Academy of Ancient Music a madrigal—'In sua siepe ombrosa'—professedly composed by Bononcini, but which turned out to be the production of Antonio Lotti. Righteous indignation was aroused at this fraudulent proceeding, though no voice appears to have been raised against Handel's depredations of a similar nature. In spite of this discovery and the expulsion of Bononcini from the Academy, Greene stuck to him and strongly espoused his cause; moreover, he withdrew from the Academy of Ancient Music, and, taking all his St. Paul's boys with him, he founded a rival concert-giving society in the great room called 'The Apollo,' at the Devil Tavern, near Temple Bar. This proceeding gave rise to the saying, attributed to Handel, that 'Doctor Greene had gone to the Devil.' Another Handel-Greene story may find a place here. It is to the effect that on one occasion Greene left with Handel the manuscript of an anthem he had written, in order to obtain his opinion on the composition. Not having received back the manuscript, Greene called upon the great man for his opinion. 'Oh! Doctor Greene,' said Handel, 'I did hang your anthem out of the window because it did want more air.'

The outcome of these disagreeable incidents—due to the rival factions of the Handelians and Bononcinians—does not seem to have affected Greene's chances of promotion and his prospects of gaining further distinction. In 1730 he was elected Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, and made a Doctor of Music. His exercise was a setting of Pope's 'Ode for St. Cecilia's Day,' performed at the Public Commencement, July 6, 1730, when the new Senate House was opened. Monk, in his 'Life' of Dr. Richard Bentley, Master of Trinity, says: 'The University was treated with an extraordinary exhibition of musical talent, by Maurice Greene, the celebrated composer, who set to music Pope's Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, altered and enlarged by the poet himself for this occasion.' An extract from a London newspaper—the Daily Journal of July 20, 1730—may also be quoted:—

Mr. Green, Organist of the King's Chapel and St. Paul's Cathedral, who on the 7th instant commenced Doctor of Musick at Cambridge, was, on account of his well-known merit, chosen Professor of Musick in that University.

On the occasion of this visit to Cambridge Greene performed two new anthems of his own composition at Great St. Mary's Church.

As already mentioned, Pope, at Greene's request, made extensive alterations in his poem. He reduced its length by about one-third and introduced a new stanza which begins—

Amphion thus bade wild dissension cease,
And soften'd mortals learn'd the arts of peace

(had this any reference to the Handel-Bononcini feud?), besides making modifications in the first part. The following, the prelude to a vocal duet in the Ode, may serve as a specimen of Dr. Greene's style in a less familiar field than that of Church music:—

In 1735, on the death of John Eccles, Dr. Greene became Master of the King's Musick; thus he held all the chief musical appointments in the country—Organist of St. Paul's, Organist and Composer to the Chapel Royal, Professor of Music at Cambridge, and Master of the King's Musick—before he was forty years of age. The next most important incident of our composer's career was the active part he took in founding the Royal Society of Musicians, of which his friend Michael Christian Festing was the father. This act of benefaction took definite form on April 19, 1738, and among the original members of the Society were, in addition to Festing and Greene, Handel, Boyce, Arne, Henry Carey, Hayes, Pepusch, Christopher Smith, Travers, Edward Purcell and others.

The year 1743 witnessed the publication, in two volumes, of the following classic in the literature of English Church music:—

Forty | select anthems | in | score, | composed | for
1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 voices. | By Dr. Maurice Greene, | organist and composer to His Majesty's Chapels Royal, &c.

The dedication is to the King and reads thus:—

Sir,

May it please your Majesty to permit me, in the humblest manner, to beg Your Majesty's gracious Acceptance of the following ANTHEMS, composed for the Service of Your Royal Chapel; as a sincere Testimony of that Duty and Zeal with which I am

Your Majesty's Most Faithful and Obedient Subject and Servant

MAURICE GREENE.

The list of 140 subscribers to these Forty anthems—headed by Frederick, Prince of Wales—included the names of Boyce, Beard, Gallupi, B. Gates, Hasse, Howard, Charles Jennens, Kent, Monticelli, Nares, Pepusch, and Porpora. The name of Handel is absent.

An interesting side-light on the early meetings of the Three Choirs is afforded by the following paragraph, under the heading 'London News,' from the Gloucester Journal of May 29, 1745:—

This day, Dr. Greene, Master of His Majesty's Band of Musick, with several Gentlemen belonging to the Chapel Royal, Westminster Abbey, and St. Paul's, set out for Gloucester, where they are to meet the Gentlemen belonging to the Choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, in order to perform at the last mentioned place, on Wednesday and Thursday next, a Grand Concert of Musick, both Vocal and Instrumental, for the Benefit of poor Clergymen's Widows and their Children.

On this festival occasion a dramatic pastoral by Greene, entitled 'Love's Revenge: or Florimel and Myrtillo,' was performed at the Boothall, Gloucester.

In the year 1750, Dr. Greene became the fortunate recipient of an estate in Essex, bequeathed to him by a son of his uncle Serjeant Greene. This possession, which brought in an income of £700 a year, placed Dr. Greene in a position of comparative affluence. The property, known as Bois Hall, was situated near Abridge, the village close to Epping Forest, from which the name of Isaac Smith's familiar psalm-tune was probably derived. Here, in this sylvan retreat, Greene commenced a project which was to prove of lasting benefit to English Church music and one for which his name should ever be held in remembrance—the publication in score of an important collection of cathedral music. Ill-health unfortunately prevented him from carrying out his design, so he handed the material to his gifted pupil, Dr. William Boyce, and the result is the monumental work known as 'Boyce's Cathedral Music' (3 vols., 1760—1778), but which owed its inception to Dr. Maurice Greene.

The Public Advertiser of Wednesday, December 3, 1755, contained the following announcement:— Monday night died, at his house in Beaufort Buildings, Dr. Maurice Greene, Organist and Composer to his Majesty, Master of his Majesty's Band of Musick, Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, and Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge.

The Gentleman's Magazine informs us that he died at Bois Hall, Essex, a statement which is at variance with the above announcement. The books of the Vicars-Choral of St. Paul's record that he died on December 3; but as the date given in the Public Advertiser agrees with that on the leaden coffin there can be no doubt that December 1 was the actual day of his demise. He was buried in the minister's vault of his father's church, St. Olave's, Jewry. When that old sanctuary was about to be demolished and the bones of those who had been interred there had to be removed, Dr. W. H. Cummings very happily suggested that the body of Dr. Greene should find its last resting-place in St. Paul's Cathedral. The necessary authority was obtained through the instrumentality of the late Sir John Stainer and Dr. W. A. Barrett, and the re-interment took place on May 18, 1888, when the remains of Dr. Greene were laid beside those of another Cathedral worthy, his pupil Dr. William Boyce, in the crypt of St. Paul's. On that interesting occasion a very representative gathering of musicians assembled round the grave, when Dr. Barrett related the circumstances attending the removal of the remains, concluding his remarks with the words: 'Here we hope his bones may rest for ever, unless St. Paul's Cathedral is required for City improvements.' At the afternoon service Greene's world-famed anthem 'God is our hope and strength' was sung. It is rather unfortunate that the inscription on the tomb (given below) should have preserved the wrong date of the death—December 3, instead of the first day of that month, in the year 1755:—

the remains of
DR. MAURICE GREENE
Born 1695. Died 3rd. Decr. 1755.
Organist of this Cathedral 1718 to 1755, removed from the Church of
S. Olave, Jewry, on its demolition and re-interred here on the 18th
May, 1888.

He left an only daughter, who was married to the Rev. Michael Festing, rector of Wyke Regis, Dorset, and the son of Greene's old friend.

According to Burney, Dr. Greene was 'very much deformed,' but this physical defect found no counterpart in his bearing towards his fellow-men, he being described as 'amiable and courteous in manner and beloved by all who knew him.' Among his pupils were Dr. Boyce (already mentioned), John Camidge (of York), Samuel Porter (of Canterbury), John Stanley (the blind organist of the Temple), and John Travers. Greene was held in high repute as an organist, and had a predilection for the use of the solo stops, at that time somewhat of an innovation. To him belongs the rare distinction of having been mentioned by a contemporary German writer, Johann Mattheson, who, in his Vollkommene Capellmeister (1739), classes 'Green in London'—the only Englishman mentioned by him—among the famous organ-players of the day, Bach and Handel being included in the category.

In regard to Dr. Greene's fame as a composer, the opinion of Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland (Dict. of Nat. Biog. xxiii. 64) may be quoted: 'In his criticism of this composer's works Burney was singularly unfortunate, for so far from showing the influence of Handel or the Italian opera to any appreciable extent, the best of them are thoroughly English in character and style, and his ballads, such as "Go, Rose," and "The Bonny Sailor," have a perfect right to be included in all collections of national music. In these and in his anthems his melodies are always natural and flowing, while in the latter especially there is no lack of scientific skill or earnestness of purpose.' His anthems 'God is our hope and strength,' 'I will sing of Thy power,' 'Lord, let me know mine end,' and 'O clap your hands' are still to be heard in those cathedrals which preserve the best traditions of the old school of English Church Music.

Dr. Greene's printed compositions include:—

Forty Anthems (1743).

Nine Anthems in score, principally from manuscripts never before printed (n.d.).

A Service in C, with five Anthems, in Arnold's Cathedral Music.

Six Overtures for violins, German flutes, hoboys, &c., in seven parts.

Twelve Voluntaries for the organ or harpsichord.

Voluntaries in a collection by Greene, Travers, and several other eminent masters.

A Collection of Lessons for the harpsichord. This is an early work, issued in a very incorrect form by John Johnson, a publisher, according to Hawkins, 'who printed nothing that he did not steal!'

A Cantata and four English Songs.

The Chaplet. A collection of four English Songs.

Spenser's 'Amoretti.'

Catches and Canons for three and four voices, with a collection of Songs for two and three voices.

Songs, 3 Glees (A.T.B.), 2 Trios (T.T.B.), &c.

Much of his music remains in manuscript. The following information as to its location, though by no means pretending to be complete, may be found useful to future investigators:—

(i.) British Museum. Add. MSS. 5324, 5325, 5326, 5327, 17830, 31462, 31821.

(ii.) The Bodleian Library, Oxford, contains a large collection of Greene manuscripts, many in the autograph of the composer—e.g., Anthems; Court Odes, King's birthday Odes, and New Year's Odes. These are set forth in detail in the catalogue of the Wight collection: Nos. 16681, 16695-6, 16737-60. Among the foregoing calling for special mention are Pope's Ode, 1730 (already mentioned); an anthem for Founder's day, King's College, Cambridge, March 25, 1728; anthems for the Sons of the Clergy Festivals at St. Paul's Cathedral, 1719, 1720 and 1722; 'Phœbe,' a pastoral; and 'Jephtha,' an oratorio.

(iii.) The Royal College of Music Library. Nos. 1645, 1652, 1714-17, 1745, 1853-4, 1911-14, 1929, 1933, Vols. D and I. (These numbers are from the printed catalogue of the Sacred Harmonic Society, the previous owners of the collection.) The more important of the above are the following, some in the autograph of the composer: Te Deum in D, for voices and instruments; Service in C, 'Begun at Farnham Castle in May, 1737, and finish'd in London in June following'; 'Florimel, or Love's revenge,' full score (1737); Part of the 'Song of Deborah and Barak,' in the handwriting of Dr. Alcock, who has added to the fly-leaf the following endorsement: 'N.B.—This is y^e only copy of this Piece of Musick except one I wrote for Cha^s. Jennens, Esq^r.'

The special Supplement portrait which we give of Dr. Greene, with his friend John Hoadly the poet and dramatist standing by him, is from the painting by Francis Hayman (1708-1776) in the possession of Mr. J. Edward Street, Honorary Secretary of the Madrigal Society. It is by the kind and special permission of Mr. Street that this interesting and hitherto unpublished portrait of Dr. Greene is reproduced in THE MUSICAL TIMES.

F. G. E.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF MUSICAL STYLES,

FROM MOZART TO THE END OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

A LECTURE DELIVERED BY PROFESSOR NIECKS
AT THE BEGINNING OF THE WINTER SESSION
IN THE UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

The study of styles, whether of art or of literature, is a matter of downright utility, not of mere idle curiosity. In fact, it is a study that profits the consumer of art and literature as well as the producer. Whether we wish to write or to enjoy music we shall gain by the knowledge obtained in the study of styles. Our powers of observation and discrimination, our expressional and our gustatory faculty, cannot but be improved by it. Apart, however, from this directly practical outcome there is another—practical also, but only indirectly—the value of which is oftener underrated than overrated; I mean the philosophical outcome—that widening of the sphere of vision, that deepening of the insight, that illumination of causal connections, natural affinities, and individual, national, and age idiosyncrasies, that power and pleasure of knowing the whence and whither, the how and why, at least in such measure as is permitted to sorely limited humanity.

Nothing brings the peculiar qualities of a style more strikingly before us than a comparison with a style of a totally different nature; for instance, two styles so strongly contrasting in character and so widely separated in time as those of the last third of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Of course everybody feels the difference that exists between the prevalent styles of these periods, nay, feels even the differences that exist between the styles of individual composers, and not only of composers belonging to distant ages, like Mozart and Wagner, and Haydn and Tchaikovsky, but also of contemporaries, like Mendelssohn, Schumann, Berlioz, Chopin, Bellini, and others. But how many of those who feel this have a clear perception of the facts that produce the feeling of difference! How few have actually realised what are the material and spiritual constituents, and the various manipulations and treatments of these, that give to each style a tone, a colour, a feeling, a taste, and a scent of its own. Many will say it is strong emotionalism that distinguishes the new from the old. This is true enough. Still it does not hit the main point. We can find in the late eighteenth-century music, although of course much more rarely, examples of emotionalism which in strength matches the most recent emotionalism, but what we cannot find in the former is the peculiar type or types of emotionalism for which the latter has a predilection. Again, many will say that it is the greater number of harmonies and instruments employed that distinguishes the new from the old music. No doubt this too is true. But it is not the chief truth; for far more important than the number of harmonies and instruments is the manner of their utilisation. Or, again, we hear it often said that chromaticism and dissonance are the most characteristic features of the modern style. In acknowledging the truth also of this we must, however, guard against the mistake of imagining that these features of the new technique are an entirely original invention, instead of being for the most part, as they really are, merely a quantitative and qualitative increase of means already utilized in earlier styles.

There can be nothing more wrong than the only too common view that the styles of periods were originated by single individuals, or can be reckoned from a certain year. Of course, this is not a discovery. But as authors go on writing histories of reigns and centuries, although these do not form rational divisions, so critics go on attributing to an individual, or to a time, what belongs to groups of men and generations. How much has not unwarrantably been attributed to Palestrina, Handel, and Wagner! Which in the cases of the first two masters is so much the more remarkable, as their eminence was not at all based on the novelty of their materials and devices. However, even unexceptionable theory as regards formation of styles by no means secures satisfactory practice in their historical treatment. Of this I am reminded by an author who, after pointing out all the weighty objections to such a course, dates the beginning of the new style from the middle of the nineteenth century. Now it was undoubtedly after 1850 that Wagner produced the most advanced of his works—'The Ring of the Nibelung,' 'Tristan and Isolde,' 'The Meistersinger,' and 'Parsifal'—and Liszt his symphonic poems, symphonies, oratorios and masses; but before 1850, Berlioz, Chopin, Schumann, and others of their time and before their time, had already done their work, and they were factors in the evolution that cannot in fairness and reason be ignored. Besides the composers named, we have to consider Beethoven, Weber, Schubert, Spohr, and Meyerbeer, all of whom made in one or another way for the new.

There remains only one more preliminary remark—namely this: The invention of new technical means arises from two impulses—the need of expression and the desire for novelty. The need of expression produces necessarily the more substantial and lastingly valuable results. But the results of the desire for novelty, though to a considerable extent trifling and transient, supply also materials serviceable for the nobler purposes of the art. Thus, what the artificer invents for one purpose, the poet-musician utilises for another, the merely piquant trait born of the play-impulse becoming a significant vocable in a language. It is passing strange that nowadays, when the art of music is in so advanced an expressional stage, we still meet with so many people who view technical means as something apart from expression. Composers who do not constantly make use of all the new technical means are told that they are not on the level of their age. The critics do not ask themselves whether the new technical means are appropriate in all cases. Unfortunately the composers are, as a rule, worse than the critics. They follow indiscriminately a fashion, and transfer unhesitatingly the voluptuous accents of Tristan and Isolde's love duet to a child's prayer, and the gorgeous pomp of Walhalla to a rustic idyll. The irreconcilableness of the two should be obvious, but it is not. A tyro should be able to understand that the simple can only be expressed by the simple, the naïve by the naïve, and the tranquil by the tranquil, not by the complex, the passionate, and the turbulent; nevertheless, the masters of the craft often fail to do so. There is nothing so common in our present-day music as illustrations of 'much ado about nothing.' A very instructive example of how not to do is Humperdinck's wonderfully clever opera 'Hänsel and Gretel,' wherein folk-tunes are wedded to the Wagnerian dramatic symphony—that is, the union is attempted of two contradictories. We have good reason to be proud of and thankful for the technical acquisitions made in music. I wish we could also be proud of and thankful for the use made of them by the followers of the great masters who invented and improved these means.

In studying the development of music, that is the changes that take place in its texture and structure, we have to keep our eyes on the elements—the tonal, rhythmic and colouristic—as they appear at the various stages. We have to see whether in melody and harmony (that is, in the two aspects of the tonal element) diatonicism holds absolute dominion, or chromaticism more or less effectually disputes its absolutism and perhaps even its dominion; and further, whether enharmonicism asserts itself to any notable extent. As regards harmony, we have to consider, besides its diatonicism, chromaticism, and enharmonicism, whether it is contrapuntal or chordal harmony, whether the chords used are few or many, whether the amount of dissonance contained in them is small or great, and whether the form of the harmony is solid or liquid—in other words, whether it is plain or intermixed with passing, anticipating, retarding and other auxiliary notes.

Rhythm we have to embrace in its narrowest and widest sense as it manifests itself in the structure of motives, phrases, periods, groups of periods, and whole compositions. With regard to rhythm in the usual and narrow sense, we have to note whether it is strong or weak, varied or the reverse, simple or involved, straightforward or syncopated; and with regard to rhythm in the wider sense, we have to ascertain whether the form is periodised or not, architectural or not. What is meant by colouring does not stand in need of explanation, nor is it necessary to point out the immense importance of colouring in the music of our time. Everyone knows that the success of innumerable compositions depends on the clever blending, contrasting, combining, alternating, and distributing of instrumental tone qualities. Well then, in studying the development of music we must keep our eyes on the nature, quantity and mixture of the above enumerated elements as they appear in each style of historical significance. But that is not enough. If we keep our eyes only on this, we shall miss a great deal of what contributes to the making of styles and to the development of an art—namely, the new melodic, rhythmic, harmonic, and colouristic traits born of original individuality, and the impulse of as yet unexpressed thoughts and feelings, traits that do not always necessitate a change in the elements and an extension of the means. That these individual traits on account of their subtlety are often more difficult to fix and describe than the elemental means, must be obvious.

The starting-point of our sketch, then, is Mozart. In this master's music beauty reigns supreme, and manifests itself invariably in euphony of sound and symmetry of form. The demands of the characteristic are not allowed to exceed the limits of the beautiful. Although Mozart expressed in his dramatic works all kinds of moods, his predominating personal moods were gentle moods—gentle moods both gay and sad, but with a strong bias to the tender and sweetly melancholy. Technically considered, this master's music is radically and essentially diatonic; its harmony is as a rule chordal, not contrapuntal, solid, not liquid, consisting as it were of pillars supporting the melody, not of a subcurrent river on which it floats, and its form is in the highest degree architectural, and unsurpassed as such in definiteness and lucidity combined with harmoniousness. However, the radical diatonicism admits frequent touches of chromaticism; the prevailing harmonic texture by no means altogether excludes counterpoint or even fugue, and the all-pervading euphoniousness here and there gives way momentarily to an exceptional harshness—clashing and crashing seconds, major and minor, are a favourite device. Indeed, chromaticism not only serves Mozart to express in his dramatic works fear, gruesomeness, and entreaty, but also more particularly ministers to the moods in which he indulges most readily and fondly. It accentuates the tender softness and smoothness, the clinging affectionateness and the insinuating complaints and requests which he knew how to express by the general character of his lines, shadings and colours. Mozart was almost as fond of that essentially chromatic harmony, the chord of the diminished seventh, as he was of the minor mode. He also uses often the chord of the German sixth. But if it is important to note Mozart's use of chromaticism, it is not less important to note the limited extent of his use of it—limited quantitatively and qualitatively.

Beethoven's individuality is of quite another type than Mozart's, and in accordance with it we find his music grand, sublime, virile, and nobly and profoundly impassionate. The new worlds which it opened required for their revelation both new applications and extensions of the old means. Boldness, freedom, and vigour speak out of everything—out of the pronounced diatonicism, the simple harmony, and the immensely developed rhythm, form and orchestration. Beethoven does not add much to the number of instruments, but he evolves from them undreamt-of capacities and qualities of character. Think of the bowed instruments of the orchestra, the oboe, the bassoon, the horn, and the kettle-drums, of what they were before him and what they became through him. Think of the wonderful combinations of the thus educated, ennobled, and invigorated individuals. As he advanced in his life and his art, he amazes us more and more in his form by its life-like organism, by its increasing vastness of proportion, numerousness of members, and neglect of tradition. What a distance from the first to the ninth symphony, from the first trios to the last quartets! In connection with form, the departure from the orthodox key-distribution calls for special notice. What Beethoven achieved by rhythm may be easily realised. The recollection of a very few symphony movements suffices. We cannot but be at once forcibly struck by the extraordinary variety and the electrifying power of the rhythms that stir within them. Then there are the startling and overwhelming chord-progressions and modulations. And lastly, there is that for which all these mighty efforts are made: the expressiveness of his music, which is a hundred times greater than that of any one of his predecessors.

As it is my object not to describe the styles of the composers of whom I am going to speak, but only to point out their chief contributions to the development of the resources of music, I can in most cases be brief. Weber, one of the earliest and most influential of the romanticists, added many characteristic tones and colours to the art, both in the domain of the human and the superhuman. In the former he felicitously expressed on the one hand the naïve sentiment and the straightforward simplicity of the people, and on the other hand the nobility, pride, and circumstance of chivalry; in the latter the demonic in its malignancy and gruesomeness, fairyism in its sweetness and gentleness, and the ghostly in its benignancy and mysteriousness. Weber greatly increased the individuality of the instruments, and the effects producible by their combination. The demonic music in the 'Freischütz,' the fairy music in 'Oberon,' and the ghostly strains of the violins in 'Euryanthe' are epoch-making achievements. The frankness of Weber's melody depends chiefly on its predominantly chordal nature and the simplicity of the underlying harmony. By predominantly chordal nature I mean the predominance of harmony notes. Weber was also one of the first to utilise national local colour—German, Eastern, Spanish-Gipsy, Chinese. He did not add new harmonies to the old stock, but he showed—for instance, by the exploitation of the chord of the diminished seventh—how many new applications may be made of an old means.

The ultra-tender sentimentalist Spohr, another early romanticist, plays an important part in the development of music through the highly chromatic nature of his style. In the compositions of none of his predecessors is diatonicism invaded by chromaticism to such an extent as in those of Spohr's. But let us note the quality as well as the quantity. We may distinguish between gliding and abrupt chromaticism; the former consists of passing notes, the latter of freely taken dissonances. Spohr, who shrank from everything harsh, rough, and ignoble, was of course a cultivator of gliding chromaticism, indeed was the cultivator of gliding chromaticism par excellence. We may say that Spohr's style in general, and his chromaticism in particular, derives from and is an extreme development of the tender and sweetly melancholy features, with its corresponding softness and roundness, of Mozart, the sole master that completely satisfied his delicacy and fastidiousness.

Much might be said about the contributions of the original and poetic Schubert—about his abrupt harmonic progressions and other even more important novelties—but I hurry on to the composers of the generation that arose about 1810. It is with them that the extension of the means, more especially of the harmonic means, begins in a very marked manner, Berlioz, Chopin, Schumann, Wagner, and Liszt being the leading progressives. Mendelssohn is in this respect inferior to them, although by no means a negligible quantity, for was he not the discoverer of the frolicsome fairy world (Weber's fairies were of a different race), a masterly painter of landscapes and seascapes, and a raiser of some of the forgotten Bach lore?

Before particularising the main contributions of the progressives, it will be helpful to indicate the common direction of their tendencies. For different and opposed to each other as their ideals were, their efforts in the way of development of technique, of extension and multiplication of means tended, without the actors being conscious of it, to one and the same goal. Now what is this goal? It is the solution, the liquefaction, of the tonal, harmonic, and rhythmical solids. The solution of the tonal and harmonic solids is brought about by the addition of other modes to our common major and minor, by the raising of the chromaticism to full partnership with diatonicism, by the unrestricted admission of chromatic alteration of harmonic notes and the luxuriant admixture of non-harmonic notes of all kinds, and last, but not least, by the full legitimization of dissonance, which no longer needs to be introduced by consonance. The solution of the rhythmical solids is brought about by the more complex constitution of motives and the more extensive use of syncopation, unsymmetrically combined compound measures ($5/4$, $7/4$, &c.), and simultaneous combination of different measures or of different proportions within measures. As regards rhythm in the wider sense, the solution of the rhythmical solids is brought about by departure from the strictly symmetrical formation of periods where one phrase is balanced by another phrase of the same number of bars, and by greater complication and closer welding of the parts, and a veiling and even entire abandonment of architectural structure.

Berlioz is by all admitted to have been the greatest developer of the orchestral resources and the most ingenious inventor of orchestral effects, which he utilised for the interpretation of his fierce and ecstatic emotions and his grotesquely and entrancingly fantastic conceptions. The other most outstanding merit of Berlioz is his rupture with tradition and convention in the matter of rhythm, freely forming his periods of all sizes and proportions. In his abstinence from enharmonicism he was unlike the other progressives. Saint-Saëns points this out, and compares him favourably with Wagner, who was enharmonicism personified.

Few realise how much of the development of the modern style is owing to Chopin. A long list of items has to be placed on the credit side of his account. Here are some of them: frequent employment of other modes than major and minor, immense extension of chromaticism, great multiplication of harmonies by the extension of chromaticism and the bolder use of dissonances, substitution of serpentine and twirling lines for straight ones and of sophisticated for plain arpeggios, introduction of novel rhythmical formations in which syncopation and transposition of accent play important parts. By sophistication of arpeggios I mean their intermixture with non-harmonic notes and their unusual ordering as regards rhythm and sequence.

Of Schumann I shall mention especially his novel harmonic combinations, explicable to a large extent by the assumption of anticipated, retarded, sustained, and other non-chordal notes, his peculiar syncopated rhythmical devices, his variously and strangely affecting forms of accompaniment, often intentionally vague and even confused, and some haunting orchestral colourings.

Liszt, unequalled as an experimentalist, has proved himself also a great discoverer. No one has been bolder in modulation and harmonic progression, and in the introduction of dissonances. His abandonment of the classical forms, and fashioning of new ones in accordance with the nature of the subjects, is not a whit less bold, nay, required even greater boldness. His pianoforte style must be allowed to be a creation of his own, and his orchestration abounds in miracles.

But great as was the influence exercised by others on the development of the modern style, it is undeniable that Wagner's was the greatest. He focussed the musical tendencies of his time, and strengthened and modified them by his own powerful individuality, with the result that he formed a new style and art-form, and has imposed this style and art-form on a large portion of civilised society, and more or less influenced by them the practice of every composer and the taste of every lover of music.

The composers I have mentioned, although the most important, are not the only ones that helped in the evolution of the art. Men like Meyerbeer, Verdi, and the lesser Gounod are notable forces, especially the first. Again, there are the contributors of national peculiarities, such as Gade, Grieg, Dvořák, and the Russians. Chopin and Liszt were in this respect also of great importance. Lack of space precludes my entering into greater detail. I shall therefore conclude with the remark that we have in Richard Strauss the most advanced progressive of to-day, the chief representative of programme music, in whose music the tendencies described by me are to be found in a higher degree than in that of his predecessors, Liszt and Wagner included. We cannot escape the question: Where is the advance in this direction going to stop, and when it stops, what new direction will the further advance take? Perhaps one may venture to prophesy so much as to say that it must be a change to greater simplicity, not, however, to a formerly existing simplicity, but to a new simplicity, one coloured by the character and attainments of the age.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION AND MUSICAL INSTRUCTION IN TRAINING COLLEGES.

A modification made recently by the Board of Education in the requirements of the musical examination of students in Training Colleges for elementary school teachers, has in some musical circles occasioned comment that must be described as unwarrantably optimistic. It seems to be assumed that a few strokes of the pen at Whitehall will effect a millennium. As a matter of fact, the deliberate policy of Whitehall for the last few years has been to withdraw its examining influence over education and to transfer responsibility to other shoulders. It is disposed now to benignantly reign and advise rather than to govern and dictate. This is a statement of fact, and is not intended as a criticism.

Vast changes in our educational system are pending. Great hopes and great schemes loom large on the horizon. But what about the machinery by which the work is to be done? Much of it must be created, but it is certain that for a considerable period we must largely depend upon existing machinery and grooves which are the inheritance of several generations of more or less imperfect efforts. This being so, a brief statement regarding existing forces and circumstances may serve to inform musicians who desire to interest themselves in the matter, but who have no time to investigate for themselves the facts of the matter.

The official authority for education in England and Wales is called the Board of Education. Formerly it was styled the Education Department.

Scotland is governed by an independent authority called the Scotch Education Department.

Ireland has also an independent authority consisting of the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland.

It will be sufficient for the purpose of this short article if the situation in only England and Wales is described.

Colleges have not hitherto been formed by the Board. They have been instituted mainly by the various religious denominations, the Board simply inspecting the teaching and apportioning grants, and issuing certificates of competency to students. Formerly, all colleges were residential, but about ten years ago the Board decided to recognise colleges for day students, and accordingly many have been started chiefly in close association with University colleges. In 1901 the following colleges were at work:—

RESIDENTIAL	45	accommodating	4,067	students
DAY	17	"	1,607	"
TOTAL			5,674	"

The normal course lasts two years, but some students are admitted for one year only and others may remain for a special third-year course.

The colleges have never been able to meet fully the demand for teachers. It has been a common experience for candidates for admission to pass the examination entitling them to a scholarship, and then to find the colleges too full to take them in. Consequently, thousands have had to forego scholarships and to endeavour to get experience elsewhere, and the Board has been compelled to certificate untrained teachers and even to permit untrained and uncertificated persons to teach in State-aided schools. Apart from the fact that the colleges do not turn out nearly enough teachers to staff all the schools of the country, many thousands of voluntary schools, unaided by the local rates, have not been able to offer salaries that would attract trained teachers, and so they have had to be content with less efficient service. The result of this tension is that in 1901 there were in the schools—

Certificated teachers:	Trained	- -	38,023	66,101
	Untrained	- -	28,078
Uncertificated teachers				- - 35,625
'Additional' women teachers				17,956
				53,581
				119,682

Besides this army of adult teachers there were 28,002 pupil teachers between 15 and 19 years of age. These potential teachers have now a three-years' course, and at the end the endeavour is to secure a place in a training college.

It must be added that 'untrained' does not necessarily imply 'inefficient.' Many of the certified untrained are excellent all-round teachers; but, as a class, the untrained are of course not as generally fit as the trained.

It is now time to say something as to how music fares in this great organisation. In the first place it must be noted that at the present time we are in a period of transition and some bewilderment, and no one can say with confidence where the changes that are in progress will land us. We can but fervently hope that musical education will emerge safe and sound from the hurly-burly. But there is real danger that, in the strenuous struggle for existence, music may be elbowed out, however unintentionally. The extent of the changes that have been made recently in the direct connection of the Board with teachers and schools may be gathered from the following statement:—

MUSICAL EXAMINATIONS RECENTLY ABANDONED BY THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

SCHOOLS.—The yearly examinations at known periods, which could be prepared for. Surprise inspection now substituted, which may or may not include singing.

PUPIL TEACHERS.—Four individual examinations in practical skill and theory. Nothing substituted. The pupil teachers will now be examined only once in theory and once in practice during the three-years' course.

TRAINING COLLEGES.—The first-year examination in theory. It is probable that soon the second-year leaving examination will be abandoned and the inspector will sample by hearing a few students and will accept the teacher's valuation of the bulk. This is how the colleges in Scotland are now assessed.

Acting teachers, that is uncertificated persons who are allowed to teach and who endeavour to pass the certificate examination which, so far as music is concerned, is wholly a paper one, are still encouraged to exist. The able Chief Inspector of Colleges, Mr. Scott Coward, says in his last report:—

[The Colleges] do not nearly overtake the great number of persons who need training, are clamouring for it in vain, and who, therefore, must pass into the ranks by the narrow and inefficient side door of the acting teachers' certificate, obtained with effort by study carried on at odd times, in exhausted physical conditions, often without adequate guidance, and under the pressure of the daily work of teaching. Last year about 2,500 women, and nearly 400 men, were recruited to teach thousands of children from such material as this. This is, to be frank, an injustice to the teachers and an injury to the children, who are deprived of the higher education which can only be secured, speaking generally, by the employment of teachers properly prepared for their work by a good previous course of training. It has, I think, ceased to be a matter of opinion, and has become now almost an axiom, that training is necessary to form efficient teachers. The urgency of the matter growing daily rather than diminishing, I feel no hesitation in reiterating statements and opinions that I have made often before in other reports.

All that Mr. Scott Coward says as to the axiomatic necessity of training is a fortiori true of music teaching. It is certainly unreasonable for us to complain (as some people who should know better do) that our school teachers are not all Admirable Crichtons, that they are not voice-production specialists, highly expert class-singing teachers, and refined in musical taste, when at the same time we do not provide adequate means of training and withal expect the whole business to be done on the cheap. The teaching staff being recruited as described, the musical results in schools vary widely as a matter of course. You may chance upon a well equipped and staffed Board School where the vocal training is excellent, or you may light upon a village or even a town Voluntary School (i.e., a school State-aided but not rate-aided) and find musical results no better than they are usually in expensive middle-class schools.

But under the recent Education Act, which brings all schools under local control, the local authorities are empowered to create training colleges. So it may be presumed that in the course of a few years all newly engaged teachers will have to show that they have been trained. That the new colleges will be non-residential bodes no good for music. The restricted opportunities for directed practice, the overlapping of the timetable where University courses are added to the strictly college course, tend to lead to a depreciation of music in colleges of this type. The University-bred authorities who in many cases make the atmosphere in day colleges, are disposed to suffer musical practice rather than to encourage it. Music is admitted to be a capital thing, but—other matters are more exigent. The enthusiasm of day college music teachers has in some cases conquered circumstances and enabled them to present results equal to the best attained in residential colleges, but elsewhere the teaching has been paralysed and occasionally sadly futile.

The modification of the musical requirements for colleges referred to in the opening of this article, is the regulation that students are in future to be examined in both the tonic sol-fa and staff notations. Under the Stainer régime (1884—1901) the leaving students were individually examined in practical skill and theory, and marks were given, the maximum number obtainable being fixed by the Board, the Inspector having no power of modification. The marks gained by a student went to swell a general total, by which position in the 1st, 2nd, or 3rd Division was determined. It was quite possible for a student to avoid music entirely, and yet to pass in the 1st Division. According to the Board's regulation the examination had to be conducted in one notation only, the choice of notation being at the option of the college authorities, not of the individual student. At the practical examination about one-third chose the staff and two-thirds the tonic sol-fa, but at the ensuing theory examination the majority chose the staff. Most of the residential colleges teach both notations. Some years ago efforts were made to induce the Board to grant extra marks where students were examined in both notations. The Board was willing to include both notations in the examination, but declined to add to the marks on the ground that music generally was sufficiently assessed in relation to the other subjects of the curriculum. Sir John Stainer therefore decided not to press the matter, inasmuch as the departure would necessarily on the whole act as a fine, because no college could get more marks than before for the additional work, and all might get fewer by virtue of the new standard to be set up. But now the plunge has been made by the Board, presumably on the advice of the new Inspector, Dr. Arthur Somervell, and no promise is made of more marks. We may however hope that teachers and students, human as they are, will show that they have souls above mere marks, and will do their best to meet the requirements. The advantage of equipping school teachers with a knowledge of both notations is unquestionable and has long been recognised.

As hinted above, the system of assessing teaching by inspection and sample examination which obtains in Scotland may soon be applied to colleges in England and Wales. The students will then be classed on the results of examination conducted by the college staff. A grave responsibility will thus be cast upon the teachers. Fortunately, there are many men and women in training colleges who are among the most enthusiastic expert class-singing teachers in the country, and who may be fully trusted to do their duty to themselves, their pupils and the public. As a general proposition it must be conceded that the expert teacher is more likely to be able to assess fairly and truly the acquirements of his pupils than an outside examiner can hope to do. The dubious point is whether the withdrawal of outside stimulating influences will induce students to drift into a casual treatment of music.

The object of affording all this information is mainly to draw attention to some of the conditions under which schools and colleges now work, and to show how dependent the musical future in these quarters is upon the establishment of a general and strong belief in the advantages of musical culture rather than upon paper codes and regulations.

If the new and influential local authorities now to be formed turn out to be as zealous for musical education as the School Boards of Leeds, Bradford, Birmingham and London—to mention only a few of the best—have been, there will be reason for satisfaction. Anyhow, the attitude towards music of these authorities deserves the steady attention of musical educationists.

Dr. Elgar was very much to the fore in the German musical press of last month. Lengthy articles, illustrated with portraits and many musical examples, appeared both in Die Musik and in the Neue Musik Zeitung. In the former, Herr Max Hehemann, of Essen, already known as an admirer of Dr. Elgar by his analysis of 'The Dream of Gerontius' published at Leipzig, waxes enthusiastic over those works which he has selected for detailed description. These are, in addition to the 'Dream,' 'King Olaf,' the 'Enigma' Variations, the 'Cockaigne' Overture, the 'Military Marches' and the 'Grania and Diarmid' incidental music, and Funeral march. Herr Hehemann appears to have studied everything by Elgar that has so far been published. Where his available space does not permit of a detailed criticism upon a work, he yet manages in a few words to give some idea of its character. He insists strongly on the national character of most of Dr. Elgar's music, and as specially illustrative of this 'English' quality, he mentions 'King Olaf,' 'Cockaigne,' and the 'Military Marches.' In regard to 'The Dream of Gerontius,' he writes:—

The strange, world-removed tone of the poem is marvellously reproduced. The yearning of the dying for the beyond has rarely been clothed in tones more devotional or moving, and rarely has the dread sublimity of Death's majesty been depicted with greater boldness or more majestic awesomeness than in the scene of the 'Angel of the Agony.'

After drawing a parallel between 'Gerontius' and Richard Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung,' he refers to the 'Demon' music as 'the most daring that Dr. Elgar has so far written,' and says:—

In wonderful contrast to this demoniac episode are the Choruses of the Angelicals with their mystic mood (Stimmung). The way in which Elgar exhausts every possibility of this mood, from a fervent devoutness to a rushing pæan of triumph, cannot be described in words. . . . The effect is unique of its kind, for here all is glowing, enchanting tone-colour.

That Dr. Elgar's fame in Germany is spreading rapidly is proved by yet two more performances of his Orchestral Variations at Cologne, under Dr. Hans Richter, and at Danzig, under Herr Fritz Binder. The latter gentleman, by-the-way, is at the present moment rehearsing 'Gerontius' with the Danzig Singakademie. Of the performance of the Variations in the ancient Baltic port, Dr. Carl Fuchs writes in the Danziger Zeitung:—

An extraordinarily valuable and interesting addition to the musical gains of the season. In this work we met with a pronounced originality; at first so strange that it was difficult to appreciate it, and then so fascinating that it became even more difficult, after these quite unusual impressions, to prepare oneself once more for the reception of ordinary impressions. In this composition there pulsates a vigorous life, mainly rhythmical and colouristic, but in both respects absolutely original.

To the foregoing may be added that Herr Richard Strauss will shortly produce in Berlin Dr. Elgar's 'Military Marches,' and Sir Charles Stanford's 'Irish Rhapsody.'

In a recent number of Die Musik (Beethoven Heft, Jahr 2, No. 6) there are several articles of special interest. The first is by Dr. Alfr. Chr. Kalischer, in which a long and hitherto unpublished letter of Beethoven's is given with explanatory notes. This communication concerns the education of the master's nephew, Carl, and although dated February 1, 1818, was, as the contents clearly show, written in the following year. It was addressed to the magistrate at Vienna before whom the action concerning the guardianship of the nephew had been brought. The letter, a very long one, is couched in most dignified terms; in it Beethoven shows his intense love for the youth, and his strong desire to train him up so that he might become an honour to the State. Dr. Kalischer recently found a copy of this letter among some papers in the Royal Library at Berlin; on it was written by Von Köchel: 'Copied from the original, entirely in Beethoven's handwriting, addressed to the court of justice.'

The Prospectus of the Philharmonic Society—now in the ninety-first year of its existence—is a document upon which its Directors and well-wishers may be congratulated. This is especially the case in regard to the eclectic nature of the scheme in which the names of native composers have been admitted with commendable freedom. The actual novelties are:—

Overture, 'Pelleas and Melisanda' ..	G. W. Cox.
A new Symphony ..	Glazounow.
A new Orchestral Suite
Ballade for baritone and orchestra, 'Thyra Lee'	Reginald Somerville.

Among the quasi-novelties (those new to London, &c.) we find:—

Vocal Scena, 'The Triumph of Alcestis' ..	F. Cliffe.
Violin Concerto in D minor ..	F. D'Erlanger.
Concert Overture, 'Youth' ..	Arthur Hervey.
Suite, 'London Day by Day' ..	A. C. Mackenzie.
Second Pianoforte Concerto ..	Emil Sauer.
Vocal Scena, 'Die Wallfahrt nach Kevlaar'	C. V. Stanford.

Mr. Edward MacDowell will play the solo part of his own pianoforte concerto, the distinguished American composer making a visit to England expressly for that purpose; and M. Glazounow has promised to conduct in person the two new compositions from his pen. As Mr. Arthur Hervey is announced to conduct his overture, we shall have the novel experience of beholding a critic-conductor. If all the promises set forth in the Prospectus are fulfilled, the season will be an interesting and vigorous one, and indeed such as will help on the old Society to the attainment of its centenary ten years hence. By that time, perhaps, an adequate history of the Philharmonic Society will have been written.

Dr. F. H. Cowen was entertained at dinner on the 16th ult. by the Edinburgh Society of Musicians, with Mr. J. A. Moonie as a general chairman. In responding to the toast of his health, the guest of the evening, in the course of a felicitous speech, said:—

He could not but feel that in honouring him they also wished to honour, through him, the Scottish Orchestra, of which he had the honour of being conductor. After all, he was, if he might put it musically, only the driver of the engine, whose duty it was to see that the train kept good time, that it did not go off the lines into the spaces—also to see that when it reached its terminus, the success should be something more than, as the French said, a succes d'estime. To put it once more musically, he was only the steersman of the ship, to take advantage—he ought to say not to take advantage—of the wind when it blew properly, as it always did, he was glad to say, to take her safely over the many bars she had to encounter, and to convey her also as safely as possible from one quay to another as required.

By the courtesy of the Master of the Musicians' Company (Mr. F. Harwood Lescher) we are enabled to furnish photographs of the Loving Cup recently presented to the Company by Mr. Charles Rube, one of the members, together with a description of his generous gift. The predominant idea of the design of this Loving Cup is naturally Music, as is shown in the two panels, the subjects of which are taken from the Greek Mythology. One of these, by Morel Ladeuil, representing the Spirit of Music surrounded by her attendant nymphs, is a replica of one forming part of the Helicon Vase presented by the Household to Her late Majesty Queen Victoria as a Jubilee gift. The other panel, by Spall, illustrates the story of Orpheus charming the wild beasts by the beauty of the music of his lyre presented to him by Apollo. The space between these panels is filled in its lower part by rich foliage with entwined vine leaves and grapes, suggesting the purpose for which the cup is to be employed, and the upper part is ornamented with trophies composed of musical instruments. The cover bears on one front the arms and motto, 'Preserve Harmony,' of the Musicians' Company, and on its opposite the arms and motto of the City of London. Surmounting the whole and forming a knob to the cover is a figure of a winged Cupidon playing with cymbals. The richly-chased foot of the cup bears the following inscription:—

'Music in courts and alleys: a record of four summers in Manchester' is the title of a brightly-written and illustrated booklet by Mrs. Emilie J. Minton, the Hon. Secretary and Treasurer of the 'Manchester and Salford Court and Alley Concerts,' founded in 1899. An extract from its pages may serve to show the scope of this brightening organization:—

During the last four years, 120 concerts of good music, vocal, instrumental, and choral, have been given in the most squalid spots in the city and borough, and many thousands of the very poorest have enjoyed the concord of sweet sounds from which their circumstances had previously debarred them. This desirable change has been brought about by the untiring efforts of a number of men and women who have given ungrudgingly their musical powers, their money, their time and their sympathy in cheerful co-operation.

Presented to the Musicians' Company by CHARLES RUBE, Esq., to Commemorate the Coronation of His Majesty King Edward VII.

The handles are composed of figures of nymphs gracefully draped and bearing aloft the golden lyre. From the base to the top of the figure on the cover the cup measures twenty inches, and its extreme width across the handles is sixteen inches. The total weight of silver is about 150 ounces. Messrs. Elkington and Co. are the manufacturers of this handsome specimen of handicraft in silver.

Dr. H. Walford Davies, Organist of the Temple Church, has been appointed Conductor of the Bach Choir, in succession to Sir Charles Stanford, who has retired from that office. The Society therefore is not to be disbanded, and efforts are being made to fulfil the object for which it was originally founded: 'The practice and performance of choral works of excellence of various Schools.' The works selected for rehearsal during the present season include Bach's Church Cantatas, 'God's time is the best' and 'My spirit was in heaviness'; Palestrina's Mass, 'O admirabile commercium'; Mendelssohn's 114th Psalm; and Samuel Wesley's fine motet, 'In exitu Israel.' The Secretary of the Society is Mr. W. R. B. Tann, 55, Warwick Road, Maida Vale.

A certain newspaper gravely states that Dr. Edward Elgar is at present occupied in the composition of a new 'choral' work! What next? Perchance 'A Coral Highland Symphony'!

A plébiscite programme has been arranged by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union for their orchestral concert to be conducted by Dr. Richter on the 11th inst. Purchasers of tickets had the right to vote upon certain pieces set before them under three heads: Symphonies (one vote), Overtures (two votes), and Intermezzi (two votes). The result is that Beethoven's 'Eroica' heads the symphony poll with 137 votes against 81 given to Tchaikovsky's No. 5. In the Overture section, Wagner ('Parsifal') and Mendelssohn ('Midsummer Night's Dream') have scored—the one with 107 votes, the other with 94. Wagner again takes the lead in the selected Intermezzi with a poll of 240, followed by Richard Strauss, in that 129 of the expected audience wish to hear his 'Tod und Verklärung.' It may not be without interest to give the years in which these five selected works were written and the ages of their composers at the time:—

Mendelssohn	.. 'Midsummer Night's Dream'	1826.	.. 17

Mr. T. W. Taphouse has been delving among the old files of Jackson's Oxford Journal. The following extracts will show that he has been instrumental in finding some curiosities:—

May 2, 1767.

At the Dancing-Room in Ship-Lane, on Wednesday Evening next being the 6th of May (which will be Mr. Noel's last night) will be performed a concert of Vocal and Instrumental Music: In which will be introduced several select Pieces, upon a new invented Instrument called the Panthaleone, never heard in this Kingdom, and so called from the Name of the inventor, by whom Mr. Noel has been instructed, who is the only surviving Scholar and Performer on the above instrument in Europe.

It is eleven Feet long, and consists of 276 gut strings of different magnitudes.

November 15, 1771.

Music Room. Three Italian Musicians are engaged on Monday next to perform some select Pieces on the Calificino, the Roman Guitarr and Maundolins.

The next extract, though of a more domestic nature, shows what may befall a Master of Musick in his old age:—

May 11th, 1771.

On Sunday last was married Mr. John Hall, of the Parish of Kingston Bagpuize, Berks, Master of Musick, aged seventy-eight, to Miss Mary Baldwin, of the Parish of Longworth, aged eighteen, a very agreeable Young Woman with a genteel Fortune.

In connection with the unveiling of the Wagner monument in Berlin by the German Emperor, a seven-days' International Musical Festival as well as an International Congress of Musical Art and Science will take place in the German capital next autumn. A very influential committee and ample funds—as much as half-a-million marks—are mentioned, and the event promises to be one of the most remarkable musical festivals ever held. The important question, however, is this: How will British musical art be represented at this 'International' Feast of Reason and Flow of Soul?

Mr. F. Gilbert Webb has been appointed chief musical critic of the Standard, to the staff of which journal he has long been attached. Congratulations to a hard-working, conscientious, and much-esteemed member of the musical press.

The Right Hon. George Wyndham, M.P., the Rev. Canon Duckworth, and Mr. W. Johnson Galloway, M.P., have been elected members of the Musicians' Company. The three-hundredth anniversary of the Incorporation of the Company is to be celebrated by an exhibition of Musical Instruments and Manuscripts to be held, under the auspices of the Company, in 1904.

Socialism has various outlets for its votaries. Here is one, as exemplified in the following extract from a provincial newspaper kindly sent by one of our readers:—

SOCIAL.

Mr. ——— (pupil of Miss ———), has passed, Grade III. (intermediate), at the recent examination of the I.S.M., gaining honours for pianoforte playing. Mr. ——— is open to engagements for concerts, drawing room parties, etc., and intends entering the profession at a later date.

From this it may be gathered that the gentleman in question is in an 'intermediate' stage, and that further 'honours' will doubtless await him 'at a later date.' But does not this sort of thing tend to degrade examinations of all grades?

A Parisian organist found his instrument out of order. The body of an attendant who had killed himself was found in the bellows.

A correspondent in sending us the above cutting from a London newspaper refers to the incident therein described as 'a new organ stop.' He says: 'I expect the man bellowed while he was alive below,' adding 'he couldn't have died from want of wind.' But if the said 'attendant' bellowed in the bellows below, the vox humana would be called into play, but in such a manner as might cause the organist to feel all of a tremulant.

BEETHOVEN IN BADEN.

The recent publication, under the above heading, of a pamphlet* by Dr. Hermann Rollett, has brought to my recollection a most pleasant and interesting day which, in August, 1892, I spent with him and my friend the late Sir George Grove. It was at the time of our visiting the Musical Exhibition at Vienna, which brought us much instruction and satisfaction; and here, by-the-bye, it seems worth remarking that analytical programmes then first came into use in that city. Sir George was in quest of information as to something Dr. Rollett had written about Beethoven. Failing to acquire this in Vienna, we started off one morning for Baden and called upon Dr. Rollett. He received us most kindly, and readily furnished Sir George with the information he required. On hearing that we were bound for the Helenen Thal, he volunteered to accompany us. We jumped at this, and invited him to lunch. This he declined, but said that after his early dinner at home he would join us at the Garden Restaurant at the entrance to the Helenen Thal. He kept his word, and thus it came about that we had for our guide one of the few living men who in his early youth had seen Beethoven in the flesh. He gave us a lucid account of his first meeting with Beethoven. While out for a walk in Baden with his mother or nurse, Beethoven, with his imposing figure, was pointed out to him, and it was strongly impressed upon him that for ever afterwards he should hold this great genius in the highest veneration. This in after life he never failed to do, as the present pamphlet and other writings about Beethoven sufficiently prove. It was a most memorable and enjoyable afternoon that we spent together in the Helenen Thal, as he beguiled us with interesting conversation, and pointed out to us the different spots which were known to be most intimately associated with Beethoven, who during several summers resided at Baden—a noted health resort—and spent most of his time in the beautiful Helenen Thal, where he sketched the greater part of the Ninth Symphony and other works. It must have been about six o'clock when we got back to Baden, and Dr. Rollett very kindly escorted us to the house of a Vienna banker, who had his summer quarters in Baden, and with whom we were engaged to dine. I should probably have written about this memorable day at the time, but felt sure that Sir George Grove would do so.

* "Beethoven in Baden." Biographischen und stadtgeschichtlichen Beitrag von Dr. Hermann Rollett, Stadtarchivar in Baden bei Wien. Vienna: Carl Gerald's Sohn, 1902.

It has not so much been my aim to speak of our wanderings in the Helenen Thal on that memorable day—or I might have said a good deal more—as to say a few words about Dr. Rollett and his recent pamphlet 'Beethoven in Baden.'

In Meyer's Conversations-Lexicon of 1879 Hermann Rollett is put down as an Austrian poet, born August 20, 1819, at Baden, near Vienna, in which latter city he received his early education. A long list of his poetical works is given therein, but not a word is said of his musical writings. In 1848, or thereabouts, he allied himself with poetry of a revolutionary character, and to escape the censorship had to flee his country. After residing in various places in Germany and Switzerland he returned, in 1854, to his native place, where he still resides as Stadtarchivar, i.e., Keeper of the Town Records, a post which probably provided him with opportunities of investigating Beethoven's connection with Baden which were not so open to others.

From a prefatory note we learn that Dr. Rollett's pamphlet 'Beethoven in Baden' had its origin in an article which he contributed in December, 1870, to the Baden weekly newspaper, the Badener Bote ('Baden Messenger') in commemoration of Beethoven's one-hundredth birthday. It soon appeared in pamphlet form. This being out of print, a second and enlarged edition was issued in 1902. It contains (1) the result of Dr. Rollett's own researches into the history of Beethoven's many summer visits to Baden; (2) references to all, or nearly all, of the passages under this heading contained in the writings of Beethoven's biographers: Nohl, Köchel, Schindler, Ries, &c., many of which are collated at length; (3) an account of the ceremony which accompanied the unveiling, on July 1, 1900, of the Beethoven-rock erected to the great master's memory in the Helenen Thal; (4) the inclusion of a letter of Beethoven's, dating from 1814, which he believes had not been previously published; and (5) four illustrations of the several houses which Beethoven from time to time occupied in Baden, and one of the Beethoven-rock as it now stands.

To students of Beethoven, especially those of a biographical turn of mind, this booklet of Dr. Hermann Rollett's will prove extremely interesting and instructive.

Church and Organ Music.

HANDEL'S 'THE PASSION OF CHRIST.'

Bach's noble settings of the 'Passion' have almost eclipsed those by his great contemporary, Handel. Comparatively few, even among well-read musicians, are acquainted with the two 'Passions' composed by Handel in the early part of his career. The first of these 'Passion Oratorios' is a setting of the St. John narrative, and dates from 1704. The composition of the second, which we have especially under consideration, owed its origin to a sacred poem entitled 'Der für die Sünden der Welt gemarterte und sterbende Jesus,' by Barthold Heinrich Brockes (1680-1747), a native of Hamburg, and a poet of some repute.

The poem—known in England as 'The Passion of Christ,' or Handel's second 'German Passion'—was set successively by Keiser, Telemann, Handel and Mattheson all within a few years. Handel seems to have occupied himself with his setting during the autumn of 1716 at Hanover. He was then thirty-one years of age and temporarily absent from London with the Court of King George I. There is nothing to show that Handel composed the Brockes 'Passion' with a view to any special performance, 'but,' according to Chrysander, 'simply from the desire to try his powers at a poem which was then generally admired and had already been set to music by some of the first composers.' That the work was performed, probably after Handel had returned to England, is evidenced by Mattheson, who, with a naïve lack of modesty, records that his version was preferred to that of Handel!

No copy of Handel's autograph of the score is known to exist, but there are five transcripts. One of these, now in the Royal Library at Berlin, is of supreme interest. It is a manuscript of sixty leaves, of which twenty-three are in the handwriting of J. S. Bach, and the remainder in that of his wife! Handel's 'The Passion of Christ' remained in manuscript till the year 1863, when it was published by the German Handel Society. Probably its first performance in England was that at the Norwich Musical Festival, November 1, 1866, when a selection was given under the direction of the late Sir Julius Benedict.

The work contains music of real beauty, of which the airs assigned to the Daughter of Zion may be instanced as gems of expressive melody. Of these 'Our God, the heavenly circle filling' (No. 5), is no less charming in its vocal portion than in its beautiful orchestration—strings, two oboes, and bassoon, and 'Break, my heart' (No. 20), for the same voice, is of exquisite tenderness. An all too brief arioso for tenor (No. 62) is another example of Handel's simple means to an effective end, and mention must be made of the Chorals of the Christian Church, so characteristic a feature of the Passion music of Germany. Of the latter, Handel's arrangement (No. 9) of Crüger's beautiful 'Schmücke dich'—Mendelssohn's favourite Choral—with its free accompaniment, is charged with true devotional fervour.

Why has this 'Passion' of Handel's been so long neglected? The answer to this question is that the music is of the church, not of the concert-room. Its length—there are no fewer than 105 numbers, many of them tedious recitatives—has militated against its practical use in church. But the work is most admirably suited to Lenten services. To this end some abridgment of the original is necessary. This has been very carefully done by the Rev. James Baden Powell, the result of experience gained from renderings given in St. Paul's Church, Knightsbridge, of which he is Precentor. In its abbreviated form, 'The Passion of Christ' has just been published by Messrs. Novello for church use, though the complete work, issued by the same publishers twenty-five years ago, can still be obtained. This music of Handel's may be interspersed with familiar hymns sung by the congregation, and, in the absence of an orchestra, the accompaniments to the work can be made very effective if played only upon the organ. So interesting an early work of the great master of sacred music deserves to be made known in order that its devotional strains may serve to enrich the services of the Church.

CONCERNING SOME HYMN-TUNES.

Complete collections of hymn-tunes composed by Barnby, Dykes, Stainer, and Sullivan have been issued, and now another volume has to be added to the list, namely, those from the pen of the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, published by Messrs. Weekes and Co. Here we have upwards of 150 hymn-tunes by a man who was singularly gifted in producing devotional expression by simple means, though with highest artistry, which especially manifests itself in the melodic interest of both upper and inner parts, thus making music which is always grateful to the singer whether he be in the choir or of the congregation. This interesting collection, edited by Mr. William H. Stocks, and containing an excellent portrait of Dr. Hopkins, is sure to receive a very warm welcome. While on the subject of hymn-tunes, attention may be directed to a pair of the processional kind which Messrs. Novello have recently issued. The first is a fine specimen of what Samuel Sebastian Wesley could do in the way of stately melody, and the tune is one that would prove most effective at festival services. The words, specially written by Miss Mary Bradford Whiting, and beginning 'Lift your heads, ye gates of God,' fit the music like a glove. The second of the twain is a Windsor-Eton production—the music by Sir Walter Parratt, the words by Mr. A. C. Benson. A foot-note on the printed copy states: 'This Hymn was written for use in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, for Obiit Sunday, the day on which Founders and Benefactors are commemorated.' Those, like the present writer, who have heard these stately strains of Sir Walter Parratt on such an interesting occasion (vide THE MUSICAL TIMES, November, 1902, p. 733), can testify to their dignity and thrilling fervour. The first verse of the hymn may be quoted as a sample of Mr. Benson's excellent lines:—

God of glory, King of nations,
Giver of all gifts divine,
Thou didst once in Zion's city
Set Thine own appointed shrine;
Make with us Thy secret dwelling,
Make this sacred Temple Thine.

Mr. Charles Macpherson, the sub-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, has shown to what extent variety can be infused into the Benedicite by his recently published setting of the 'Song of the Three Children.' He avoids all feeling of monotony by his clever treatment of (i.) changing rhythm, (ii.) well-planned organ accompaniment, and (iii.) judicious disposition of the voices. He is too reverent an artist to seek for effects in mere word-painting, and the entire work with its fine climax in the strains of the Gloria, is one that reflects credit upon its composer and one that should meet with due appreciation by choirmasters and choirs.

The anthem at the afternoon service held in Lincoln's Inn Chapel on the 11th ult. consisted of Dr. Elgar's 'Light of Life,' an early and beautiful work of the composer. The Times, in a notice of the performance, said:—

It [the work] is sincere in expression, and although the admirable scoring is always a great factor in the success of Dr. Elgar's music, yet even when given with organ accompaniment (admirably played by Mr. Reginald Steggall), it made a great impression, and was finely sung in all parts, although both the alto and tenor soloists made alterations in their parts which were in no way improvements.

EASTER ANTHEM.

1 Corinthians xv. 55—57.

Composed by A. HERBERT BREWER.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; AND NOVELLO, EWER AND CO., NEW YORK.

Allegro moderato. ♩ = 120.

The musical score is written in 3/4 time with a key signature of two flats (B-flat and E-flat). It begins with a piano introduction marked Allegro moderato and a tempo of 120 beats per minute. The piano part consists of two staves, with the right hand playing chords and the left hand playing a steady eighth-note accompaniment. The vocal parts enter with the lyrics: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy vic-to-ry?". The Soprano part is on a single staff, while the Alto, Tenor, and Bass parts are grouped together. The lyrics continue: "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the". The score concludes with a final piano accompaniment.

This system contains five staves of music. The first four staves are vocal parts, each with the lyrics 'Thou wilt keep him in per - fect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee.'. The fifth staff is a piano accompaniment. The music is in G major and 4/4 time. The piano part features a melodic line in the right hand and a harmonic line in the left hand, with a 'pp' (pianissimo) marking at the beginning and a 'rall.' (rallentando) marking at the end.

Piano introduction in G major, 3/4 time. The music features a series of chords and arpeggiated figures in the right hand, with a more active bass line in the left hand. Dynamics include f (forte) and mf (mezzo-forte). The tempo is marked Tempo lmo. (lento).

Reviews.

Clara Schumann von Berthold Litzmann. Erster Band, Mädchenjahre. [Breitkopf u. Härtel.]

The lives of great pianists as a rule do not make very interesting reading. The account of the wonderful achievements and the enthusiasm which they created becomes at length monotonous. Liszt was perhaps the greatest of all, but his friendship for Wagner and his early recognition of that master's genius, and the counsel and encouragement which he gave him during the years of exile—these are facts of greater importance and interest to musicians than all the dazzling stories of his triumphant tours throughout Europe. Clara Schumann's life forms one of the exceptions, for not only did she become the wife of one of the most gifted of modern composers, but she knew him personally from early childhood, admired his music, and during the long years of courtship and afterwards through those of wife and widowhood, took the most vivid interest in his art-work. They were devotedly attached the one to the other, and of this the many letters which passed between them give strong evidence. Clara, on one occasion, was taken in by a man who professed the greatest interest both in her and in Schumann, but who was only seeking his own advantage, and she listened too readily to proposals of literary partnership which seemed to her to offer such bright hopes for her Robert's future. For the most part, however, she showed judgment, taste, and tact far beyond what one would have expected from a young girl. Readers of the letters in this first volume must well bear in mind that she was Schumann's junior by nine years, and that when they first became engaged she was only eighteen years of age.

The letters are full of terms of endearment, as is common in lovers' letters, and even though the dramatis personae are so attractive, readers might but for one thing find them occasionally monotonous. All through the volume before us there runs a vein of musical news, told in so fresh, so ingenuous a manner, so thoroughly without any idea of other eyes than those to whom it was sent ever reading it, that the love story forms as it were a sympathetic surrounding.

We must only venture to refer to one or two passages, so as not to spoil the enjoyment of those who will read the book. The story is known of Schumann's visiting Beethoven's grave when he went to Vienna in 1839, and finding a pen there; but already, a year before, he had written to Clara, who was giving concerts in that city, 'Listen, I have one request. Will you not visit our Schubert? And Beethoven? And take some myrtle branches, bind them together in pairs, and place them on their graves—then slowly utter your name and mine—not a word more—you understand me.'

Clara and her father arrived in Vienna towards the end of 1837, and the young lady writes about her first concert, and adds: 'Mendelssohn is almost unknown here, his "Songs without Words" lie idle on the shelves of the music shops—here they do not sing! His "Midsummer Night's Dream" overture has been performed, but it was an utter failure . . . I wished to play something of his at my first concert, but I did not dare venture until I had the public on my side.' Now-a-days such a statement sounds strange indeed! Apropos of Mendelssohn, we read of him in Paris in 1832. Clara first visited the French capital in that year, when she was only thirteen years old. At a soirée (March 14) at which Mendelssohn's Octet was performed, she met that composer in company with Chopin and Hiller, and we read how in the artists' room she saw them, in merry schoolboy mood.

In many of her letters Clara shows how thoroughly she appreciated Schumann's music. But it vexed her to play it to the general public who did not understand it. She wanted, however, his genius to be properly recognised, and bethought of a little artifice to win over the public. Here is what she once wrote to the composer: 'Listen, Robert, will you not just for once compose something brilliant, something easy to understand, and something without a superscription, but a piece which hangs thoroughly well together (ein ganzes zusammenhängendes Stück), not too long and not too short? I should so like to have something to play at concerts for the public. For a genius this is certainly humiliating, but policy sometimes requires it.' Schumann, of course, could not grant the well-meant, neatly-expressed request.

And now by way of close let us quote a serious sentence from a letter of Clara's to her friend Becker. She is speaking of Schumann's music: 'One must know him, as I do, and one will find his whole self in his compositions. The time will yet come when the world will recognise him, but it will be long in coming.' Clara was indeed a true prophet!

We have had some difficulty in refraining from further quotation, for the letters offer so many tempting bits. The story of the life connecting together the letters is told by the author in clear, attractive style. Musicians will look forward with eagerness to the next volume. We may add that Herr Litzmann has had placed at his disposal diaries kept by Madame Clara Schumann during her whole life.

The Viola. By Berthold Tours. Edited by Alfred Gibson. (No. 61 of Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series.)

The manuscript of this Primer was found in a practically completed form among the papers left by the late Mr. Berthold Tours. The editorship of the work was entrusted to the able hands of Mr. Alfred Gibson, and the result is an instruction book for the viola which, when it becomes known, will probably rank as high in favour as the same author's popular Violin Primer. The plan and scope of the two books are, indeed, nearly identical. A clear and concise explanation of the correct method of holding the instrument and the bow, &c., is followed by plenty of simple exercises in the first position, with an accompaniment for a second viola, the whole concluding with studies in various methods of bowing (legato, martelé, sautillé, staccato, &c.) and a few exercises in the higher positions. There is, moreover, an important addition to the book in the shape of four excellent photographs, specially taken. Two of them are life-like portraits of Mr. Gibson in the act of playing, first with the bow held ready to start at the nut, and secondly, at the point; whilst the others more clearly exhibit his method of holding the bow.

The primer is excellently adapted for teaching purposes, and also for a guide to violinists who may wish to gain a knowledge of viola-playing by themselves. It is a pity that more amateur violinists do not turn their attention to the tenor instrument; they would often find a warm welcome awaiting them in quartet circles. The clef difficulty which, perhaps, deters a good many, is really not so alarming as it appears to be at first sight, and with perseverance can be easily overcome.

Give rest, O Christ. Edited by Walter Parratt.

Let my prayer be set forth. Let Thy hand be strengthened.

Behold, O God, our Defender. By George C. Martin.

Sing to the Lord. By Christopher Tye.

O hearken Thou. By Arthur Sullivan.

Let my prayer come up. By Henry Purcell.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The first of the above additions to the series known as 'Novello's Short Anthems' is sung in the 'Pennykhida,' or Dirge, of the Orthodox Church of Russia, the melody being known as Kieff. The music has much in common with that of plain chant, its rhythm being dictated by the accentuation of the words. The text, which it should be mentioned is suitable for the Protestant funeral service, has been ably translated by Mr. W. J. Birkbeck, and the music, in four vocal parts, for soprano, alto, tenor and bass, has been edited by Sir Walter Parratt. The anthem, which has been heard at various Royal memorial services, is intended to be sung without accompaniment, and well rendered, with due attention to the indicated gradations of light and shade, the music would be extremely impressive.

Sir George Martin's short anthem, 'Let my prayer be set forth,' is also designed for the same division of voices and intended to be sung without instrumental help. It is a most effective piece of devotional choral-writing. 'Let Thy hand be strengthened,' and 'Behold, O God, our Defender,' by the same composer, reach the limit of shortness in an anthem, each composition only occupying a single octavo page; but they are none the less interesting on that account. 'Sing to the Lord,' by Dr. Christopher Tye, is an attractive example of 16th century Church music. It has been carefully edited by Dr. Walford Davies, and is worthy to become well known in our churches.

The last two anthems on the above list were heard at the Coronation Service, and this hall-mark endows them with special interest, but apart from this fact they are singularly representative of their respective composer's genius. The music of the first is an adaptation by Sir Frederick Bridge of the concluding bars of the chorus 'Men and Brethren,' in Sullivan's oratorio 'The Light of the World'; the latter is an arrangement, also by the Organist of Westminster Abbey, of a portion of Henry Purcell's setting in five parts of the psalm 'Jehovah, quam multi sunt,' and is a wonderful example of our great composer's anticipation of modern methods. It would be difficult to imagine anything more beautiful in music, and it was a most happy thought of Sir Frederick's to adapt it as an offertorium.

Suite for Pianoforte Solo (Op. 34). By Signor Esposito. Drei Klavierstücke. Norwegisches Fantasiestück. By Halfdan Cleve. [Breitkopf und Härtel.]

Signor Esposito's suite consists of seven pieces. Book I. comprises a 'Prelude in G,' short and bright. This is succeeded by a 'Presto' with a somewhat paradoxical heading, Agitato tranquillo, which may be presumed to suggest emotional control, with a touch of perhaps unconscious appropriateness. The next piece is headed 'Badinage.' As indicated by this title, the music demands a light touch and vivacious style. The second book opens with a 'Nocturne' in six flats, which is apparently intended to form an introduction to the following number, a 'Graceful Valse,' which has the merit of being easy and effective. Perhaps the succeeding 'Petite Sérénade' is intended to suggest that one of the dancers has seen his partner home, and the 'Réverie' which concludes the suite Adagio, to represent thoughts next morning.

Pianists with an advanced technique may be recommended Herr Cleve's music. The three pieces comprise a 'Fantasia,' a 'Capriccio,' and a 'Perpetuum Mobile,' titles which fairly indicate the character of the music. The Norwegian piece is based on a characteristic melody which is ingeniously treated. The final Presto brillante, with its uprushing semiquaver octave passage for both hands, would be very effective—or a catastrophe.

Four Songs. Composed by Arthur Hinton. [Breitkopf und Härtel.]

The recent production of a symphony and pianoforte trio by Mr. Hinton attaches importance to these songs. The composer has gone to William Blake for his words, and selected the poems 'Spring,' 'The Fly,' 'A Cradle Song,' and 'I love the jocund dance' and set them in a vivacious manner, with manifest endeavour to suggest their inner meaning. A commendable feature is the independence of the pianoforte accompaniment, which greatly adds to the musical interest of the songs. The most important is the fourth of the series, a very attractive and effective composition.

Six Highland Dances for Violin and Pianoforte. By J. McEwen. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

With his 'Six Highland Dances,' Mr. McEwen has provided violinists with a delightfully fresh and effective set of original pieces, the only complaint against them being that they form a veritable embarras de richesses. Pleasing and inspiring as they are, and enthusiastic as one may even feel over them, it is hardly possible to present all six at a performance, and the difficulty is to know which to select and which to reject, so full of charm and varied interest is each number! Nos. 1, 2, and 4 are the easiest to play, and moreover they are the most likely to please, or 'catch on,' at a first hearing; but if well rendered all six should command success. There are no great difficulties to overcome in the violin parts, as is the case, for instance, with the Hungarian Dances by Brahms and Joachim; but what they specially require is a skilful and expressive interpretation, in thorough keeping with the composer's themes. One must be prepared to sympathetically follow him in his sad and plaintive moods, when the music sometimes seems to interpret the lines of Burns—

'Fu' aft at e'en wi' dancing keen,
When a' were blythe and merry,
I car'd na by, sae sad was I
In absence o' my dearie.'

as well as in his gay and joyous moments, when he bids us dance and trip it with a merry heart—

'Hale be your heart, hale be your fiddle!
Lang may your elbuck jink and diddle!'

for joy and sorrow, sorrow and joy, alternately chase each other through these bewitching Dances.

The following examples, culled from No. 4 of the Dances, may serve as excellent specimens of Mr. McEwen's charmingly contrasted themes:—

Andante con molto espress.

Allegro di molto.

The pianoforte part is by no means in the nature of a tum-tum accompaniment; its duties are nearly as important as those of the violin, and to render the pieces satisfactorily both performers should be in perfect accord.

The Passion. For Tenor and Bass Soloists and Chorus. By J. Varley Roberts.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The sub-title of this work is 'A meditation on the sufferings of Christ,' which aptly describes its purpose and character. It is planned on the familiar 'Passion Music' model, inasmuch as the vocal parts for the choir are interspersed with hymns and chorales intended to be taken up by the congregation, with feelings quickened by the thoughts induced by the context. Thus the work opens with the hymn 'Lord, as to Thy dear cross we flee,' assigned to the familiar 'Dundee' tune from 'Este's Psalter.' The scene in the 'Garden of Gethsemane' according to St. Matthew is then related, the narrative by a bass soloist, the words of Christ by a tenor vocalist, and meditative comments being set as chorales. The succeeding section is headed 'Betrayal and Committal,' which is followed by a short 'Meditation' for the organ. The remaining divisions are entitled 'The Compassions of Mankind,' 'The Sympathies of Christ,' 'The Witness of Nature,' and 'The Saviour's Death.' The music is devotional in expression and presents no difficulties.

Peace, perfect peace. Transcribed for the pianoforte and organ by Willem Coenen.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. Coenen has taken the familiar and simple tune associated with Bishop Bickersteth's hymn 'Peace, perfect peace' and produced, in an effective pianoforte transcription, a piece which will doubtless find favour in the drawing-room on Sunday evenings. Its interpretation would be suggestive of an echo of the sanctuary drawn from the keys of the household instrument. The arrangement for organ, which is different from that just referred to, presents no difficulties, and monotony of key is avoided by the presentation of the theme in the mediant of its main key.

Correspondence.

HERR RICHARD STRAUSS.

DEAR SIR,—As so much is being written and spoken just now about Richard Strauss, and as in your interesting paper upon him in this month's MUSICAL TIMES you speak of his first appearance in England at Queen's Hall in 1897, would it not be possible to supplement this by recording that in 1899, at the invitation of the Directors of the Philharmonic Society, he conducted a performance of his 'Tod und Verklärung' at a Philharmonic Concert on June 15?

I think it would be a fair recognition of the enterprise of the Directors of the Philharmonic Society to recall the fact at this moment, while it certainly constitutes an important event in the biography of 'the musical man of the day.'

Yours faithfully,

FRANCESCO BERGER.

Honorary Secretary of the Philharmonic Society.

ELGAR'S 'CORONATION ODE.'

SIR,—In your Provincial Notes for this month you say that Bishop's Stortford Musical Union claims the honour of the first provincial performance of the above work on December 3.

The first performance of the 'Coronation Ode,' after those of the Festivals and the one given in London, was by the Stourbridge Concert Society on November 3. Dr. Elgar is a Worcestershire composer and Stourbridge is a Worcestershire town, and we naturally feel a little proud of having been the first Choral Society in the provinces to produce this beautiful and popular work; so that I hope, Mr. Editor, you will see that Bishop's Stortford does not deprive us of our pride of place.—

Yours faithfully,

H. WATSON SMITH.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Conference opened on Tuesday, December 30, with a meeting at the Mansion House under the presidency of the Lord Mayor of Dublin. The report of Mr. Edward Chadfield, the Secretary of the Society, contained the following information in regard to progress:—

'With respect to membership, the Register of Members published before the Conference held in Dublin in January, 1895, contained the names of 1,477 members, whilst the number on the Register now being issued is 2,114. It is very satisfactory that this increase of membership has been general throughout the various Sections of the Society, there being only two in which there are fewer members than was the case in 1894. Seven new Sections have been formed by dividing some of the original Sections, which is another evidence of the great increase of the Society.'

An exhaustive and learned paper on 'Chromatic Harmony' was then read by Professor Prout. At the afternoon meeting in the Royal Dublin Society's Lecture Theatre, a pleasant paper was read by Professor Mahaffy, 'Notes on the Dublin School of Cathedral

Music, from Mornington to Stewart.' In the course of his remarks the Professor said:—

'The Dublin school, rising with the childhood of Lord Mornington, lasted until the days of Sir Robert Stewart. The music produced in it was not the greatest in the world. It had faults, but, nevertheless, it grew up in Dublin, it was composed in the atmosphere of the city, it was loved by the people who heard it, and it was a part of the life they were very proud to recognize, even though it was now gone. What claim had this school to be called an Irish School of Music? He thought it had the strongest claim in the world. It might be said that it was Anglo-Irish, but a great many good things in this country were Anglo-Irish, although regarded as distinctively Irish. Many of the great families, as the Fitzgeralds, the Fitzmaurices, the Burkes, and others, were Anglo-Irish, and the great peculiarity of the Anglo-Irish was that when they came here they repudiated the land of their origin. Therefore, he held that they had the right to call this an Irish school.'

Musical examples were played on the fine Willis organ by Mr. Charles Marchant, the accomplished organist of St. Patrick's Cathedral. In the evening the members of the Society were entertained at a brilliant ball at the Mansion House.

On Wednesday, December 31, Dr. James C. Culwick read an interesting paper on 'Fifty years in the life of a great Irish Musician, Sir Robert Stewart—his lectures and other literary work, with some particulars of his musical compositions.' Dr. Culwick gave the following interesting estimate of Stewart's achievements:—

'Stewart, in Ireland, played a very special part as general instructor and leader in things appertaining to the musical art; and seeing that the angels of knowledge and illumination are ranked before the angels of office and dominion, men like Stewart may often have it in their power to add more of sweetness and of light to the sum of life than most of those who fill the highest places under the State. Speaking of his lectures, whether delivered as the professor of the University, or upon any other occasion of a more public character, one remark fits the whole—they were brilliant, sparkling with bright thoughts, and filled with interests garnered from all available sources. They were always interesting, and always showed a width of view and of sympathy. For Stewart was not a musician merely. He was—at the end as at the beginning—a student. His good taste, moderation, and proper feeling, sufficiently brightened by a saving sense of humour, made him, as a lecturer, very popular. His learning was never allowed to carry him into pedantry. Indeed, he had the very remarkable power of so disguising his most technical teaching, and it was presented with such attractive qualities, that the listener, never wearied, could hardly forget the lessons.'

In the evening a choral and orchestral concert was given (by permission of the Senate) in the large hall of the Royal University. The programme consisted of Dr. Culwick's Concert Overture, Professor Prout's Organ Concerto (the solo splendidly played by Mr. Vipond Barry, the organist of St. Bartholomew's Church and one of our best local organists), two English Dances by Dr. Cowen, and Signor Esposito's Irish Symphony. The choral pieces were contributed by Mr. Joseph Seymour's Glee Choir and Dr. Culwick's Orpheus Choral Society. These excellent choralists were heard to advantage in madrigals and part-songs by Stewart, King, Harold White, Seymour and Jozé.

On New Year's Day a paper on 'The Profession and position of the modern organist' was given by Dr. A. Madeley Richardson. This has resulted in a lengthy correspondence on 'Congregational Singing' in one of our local newspapers. In the afternoon Mr. Duncan Hume read a paper on 'The Physiology of Pianoforte playing.' The annual banquet was given at the Shelbourne Hotel in the evening.

The Annual General Meeting of the Society was held on Friday morning, the 2nd ult., and in the evening the Leinster Section entertained over a thousand guests at a Conversazione in the Science and Art Museum. The next Conference will meet in Glasgow.

SOME ASPECTS OF BEETHOVEN'S INSTRUMENTAL FORMS.

Mr. Gustav Ernest read an exhaustive paper on the above subject before the Musical Association on the 20th ult., Mr. Clifford B. Edgar in the chair. The following is an authoritative digest of the discourse.

Two centuries claim Beethoven for their own, the 18th with its worship of the form, the 19th with its worship of the idea. In Beethoven both meet, in him both find their greatest representative, in him their leading principles become reconciled. For just as the great ideas which were agitating his time were instrumental in shaping his entire mode of thinking, his entire personality, so the latter was instrumental in shaping the traditional forms. Thus his forms were largely the outcome and reflection of those ideas.

The lecturer then referred to the prejudice existing in the modern musical mind against preconceived forms. 'Is he more free,' he asked, 'who lives outside the law, or he who accepts it and shapes his course within it, yet in accordance with the demands of his own individuality?' What is necessary, of course, is that the laws should be conditioned by the Art, not the Art by the laws. With regard to music more particularly, the object of the laws should be to do away with the difficulties which prevent it being as easily and quickly comprehended as the other arts. These difficulties rest on the fact that firstly it has no models in nature, and that secondly its creations come, as it were, into existence bar by bar as we listen to them, thus making it impossible for us to gain at once a full impression of the work as a whole. There is only one way of overcoming these difficulties, and that is by introducing into Music the element of Symmetry, most perfectly expressed in the formula a-b-a, i.e., the grouping of two similar parts (a) around a different one (b). This formula, which is the basis of most instrumental forms, gives a distinct and easily recognisable outline to a composition, and offers that assistance to the listener, the necessity of which modern composers acknowledge by adding explanatory remarks to their music or basing it on some well-known poetical work, picture or historical event. This formula has been equally adapted by other Arts, notably Painting and Architecture, a Gothic Cathedral exemplifying it just as clearly as a Sonata movement. Wherefore, said the lecturer, if Architecture in general has been called frozen Music, we might call a Gothic Cathedral a frozen Sonata.

Beethoven instinctively recognised the advantages and possibilities of the forms as they were handed on to him by Mozart and Haydn, and at first accepted them pure and simple. Life in those days was lying before him, a vista of golden hopes; its deeper problems did not concern him yet, the old forms sufficed for what he had to say. Soon all this changes, the tragedy of his life begins; the clouds which ultimately are to shut out every ray of earthly happiness are gathering around him, 'fate is knocking at his door': and now his whole nature undergoes a change, a change that is a moral growth, such as we can trace in few men. The old forms soon appear too narrow, too conventional, and while leaving their general outlines intact, he begins to extend them, add to them in accordance with the new demands his personality makes on its medium of expression. The 'Sonata form' with its final return of all the subjects in their original form seemed incapable of expressing life's drama; for drama means action, and action means development and change. He overcomes the difficulty by introducing his elaborate Codas, which frequently contain the climax of the whole work (3rd movement of Moonlight Sonata, 1st movement of 'Appassionata'). For similar reasons he replaces the placid Minuet by the more pliable Scherzo, in which so often his wild, weird humour finds expression, and equally the suave, idyllic rondo by other forms ('Sonata-form,' theme with variations, fugue) whenever the progress of the work demands it. In the last period, when misfortunes thicken, when intercourse with him becomes more and more difficult, he gradually withdraws from the world without into that within, and begins to live a new life—a life of his own creation, in a world of his own making. The old world with its disillusion vanishes, life is beautiful once more, and he uplifts his voice in its praise. His music becomes a reflection of these dreams, an echo of the voices within him. The accustomed modes of expression no longer suffice, his works assume essentially different formal aspects (Sonata, Op. 109, 110, Ninth Symphony, last Quartets). These, then, are the three principal phases of Beethoven's life and the principal stages in the development of his musical style: in the first, form reigns supreme, in the second, form and feeling (idea) appear in happy union, in the third, feeling reigns supreme.

Mr. Ernest—having first explained the frequent use of the fugal form during this last period—then turned to a different subject: the proportions in Beethoven's works. In 1854, Adolf Zeising made the discovery that a well-proportioned human body always exemplifies the law of 'the golden mean,' i.e., the smaller (upper) part stands in the same ratio to the larger (lower) one as the latter to the whole body. This law he found equally carried out in the masterpieces—of Architecture, &c.—of all ages. Emil Naumann tried in 1869 to apply it to music too, though with results which were so little convincing that his attempt attracted no attention whatever. The lecturer recently took up the subject more thoroughly and systematically than Naumann and with results altogether surprising. To the Sonata-form with its four distinct parts (first part, working-out, reprise and Coda) it seemed most important to apply the test, the point being to find out if the larger part (first part plus working-out, or first part alone) stood in the same ratio to the smaller one as the whole movement to the larger one. By a simple process, which it would take up too much space to explain here, Mr. Ernest, after counting the number of bars of the whole movement, calculated how long the two parts should be, then compared these with the actual figures. Thus he found that the 1st movement of the 'Pathetic' Sonata (not counting the introduction) has 299 bars, which, according to the law of the golden mean, should be divided into two parts of 115 and 184 bars respectively, and indeed the first part, plus the working-out, counts 184, the reprise, plus the Coda, 115 bars. That the figures do not always agree as accurately as in this instance goes without saying. But science has always taken into account the inaccuracy of the evidence afforded by our senses. Zeising therefore allowed for such a difference between the actual and the arithmetical figures, as could not be perceived by the eye or the ear; this margin he fixed at $\frac{1}{10}$, Naumann, in regard to music, at $\frac{1}{10}$ of the whole, while in all his calculations, Mr. Ernest allowed only for one of $\frac{1}{100}$, and in a few instances $\frac{1}{20}$ of the whole. To give the final result, he found that out of fifty-five movements examined the proportions of forty-two were in accordance with the law of the golden mean. Even in eleven out of the thirteen remaining ones, Mr. Ernest discovered that the parts were in one way or another curiously symmetrically constructed. To give one instance only: in the first movement of both the 1st and 2nd Pianoforte Sonatas the working-out has exactly the same number of bars as the reprise plus the Coda.

In considering the general questions involved in Zeising's discovery, Mr. Ernest emphasised the fact that none of the masters could have had any knowledge of this law, which yet, as if under a mysterious compulsion, they applied. That, furthermore, we could not but accept it as a fresh proof of the unity of all the Arts and the continuity of their general principles, if we found in a Gothic Cathedral of the 12th and a Sonata of the 19th century the same law exemplified.

Finally, he dwelt on the difficulty experienced by all who tried to fathom the problem of beauty in Art, and asked: Did not this discovery bring us one little step nearer its true comprehension?

A discussion followed the reading of the paper, in which the following gentlemen took part:—Mr. H. H. Statham, Mr. George Langley, Mr. T. L. Southgate and the Chairman. Mr. Gustav Ernest's dissertation on this 'problem of beauty in Art' will be read with interest when it appears in the printed Proceedings of the Society.

London and Suburban Concerts.

BROADWOOD CONCERTS.

The chamber concerts instituted last year by Messrs. Broadwood at St. James's Hall steadily increase in musical interest and value. A specially commendable feature is the variety and far-reaching character of the programmes. Compositions stretching over many centuries and new works of widely different styles succeed each other with refreshing change and acceptance.

At the concert on the 8th ult. were produced for the first time four new songs by Sir Charles Stanford, settings of lyrics from Mr. Edmond Holmes's second volume of sonnets, entitled 'The Triumph of Love.' Mr. Holmes writes in impassioned strains of the mighty moulder of men's destinies, and like a true Irishman, Sir Charles has manifestly been inspired by the subject. The music allied to the first, 'O one deep, sacred outlet of my soul,' is chiefly declamatory in style. The second, 'Like as the thrush in winter,' lends itself to more lyrical treatment and is more pleasing. It is, however, in the third sonnet, 'When, in the solemn stillness of the night,' that the composer has been most inspired and achieved his greatest success. We are inclined to think he has written no finer vocal music than this. The concluding number, 'O Flames of passion, will ye never die,' is also an impressive song. The sonnets imperatively demand a singer of keen dramatic perception, and Sir Charles Stanford is therefore to be congratulated on having them introduced to the public by Miss Marie Brema. At this concert was also brought forward for the first time a pianoforte trio in G by Dr. Alan Gray. This work consists of one movement only, which, however, includes two clearly-defined sections, severally headed Andante sostenuto and Allegro vivace. Musically, the former is the most engaging, but both are well written. The other instrumental works were Sir Hubert Parry's early but attractive pianoforte trio in B minor, dating from 1884, and Beethoven's rarely-heard quintet for pianoforte and wind instruments in E flat, composed in 1797. Both compositions were excellently interpreted, the former by 'The London Trio,' the latter by Miss Amina Goodwin and Messrs Clinton, Borsdorf, Malsch, and Wotton.

The concert on the 15th ult. was made peculiarly attractive by the engagement of the Brompton Oratory Choir, which, under the skilful direction of Mr. Barclay Jones, sang a selection of motets, several of which were very fine. Specially so was one entitled 'Christus factus est,' by the old Roman master Felice Anerio, who in 1594 succeeded Palestrina as composer to the Papal Chapel. This excerpt is remarkable for tender and delicate beauty, and it was devotionally rendered, unaccompanied, by the Oratory Choir. Other noble examples of early sacred music were 'Justorum animae,' by William Byrd, and 'Exaltabo Te, Domine,' by Palestrina. Mention is also due of 'Amavit Sapientiam,' by Thomas Wingham, and 'Os Justi Meditabitur,' by Mr. E. d'Evry, the present Organist of the Oratory, who presided at the organ. Further distinction was imparted to the evening by the first performances of a Suite in D for violin and pianoforte by Mr. Arthur Hinton, and a song entitled 'A Reverie of the East,' by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. The Suite is a very pleasing and well-written composition. It comprises four movements, each of which is built up with melodious themes tersely and pointedly developed. Miss Maud Powell and Miss Katharine Goodson played it with expression and brightness, and it was much applauded. Sir Alexander Mackenzie has set some lines by Mr. Owen Seaman, which appeared in Punch in connection with the recent Delhi Durbar, and has made remarkably clever use of intervals common to Hindoo scales. Miss Ethel Wood sang with manifest appreciation of the requirements of the style, and the composer accompanied. Sir Alexander's music, it should be added, also made its appearance in Punch. The other vocalists were Miss Gwendolen Maude and Mr. Charles Bennett.

For the concert announced to be held on the 30th ult.—too late for notice in the present issue—Mr. Alberto Randegger, junr., composed a sonata for pianoforte and violin in E minor, of which report speaks most favourably. The work is said to be essentially melodious and free from the extravagancies characteristic of some modern works, especially in the so-called development section, which might sometimes be more appropriately designated 'padding.' The last movement is reputed to be a happy combination of technical construction and musical interest.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

At the Students' concert on the 23rd ult. was produced for the first time a new pianoforte quartet by Mr. Frank Bridge, whose previous Trio in D minor and String Quartet in B flat played in public last year created favourable impressions of their composer's talent. His latest addition to chamber music is an excellent composition. The themes are significant and melodious; they are effectively treated, and throughout the four movements of which the quartet consists there is displayed a lively sense of contrast. It was admirably interpreted by Mr. Harold Samuel (pianoforte), Miss Ethel Sinclair, Mr. Bridge, and Mr. Arthur Trew (strings). Two clever pianoforte solos, severally entitled 'Study in F minor' and 'Toccata in F sharp minor' were also heard for the first time; they were admirably interpreted by their composer, Mr. Frank H. Yapp.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The New Year's Day concert had as its chief feature a repetition performance, under the careful direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, of Richard Strauss's tone-poem 'Heldenleben,' the work which caused so great a sensation when it was first produced (in England) on December 6 last, conducted by the composer. Its performance took five minutes longer on the occasion under notice, but its beauties and, in the opinion of many, its defects were again made manifest. Professor Carl Halir played the violin solo in 'Heldenleben,' and also the solo part of Spohr's Violin Concerto in A minor. The remainder of the concert, excellent in achievement, does not call for detailed notice.

On the 17th ult. Herr Kreisler gave a masterly rendering of Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and the programme further included Richard Strauss's tone-poem 'Tod und Verklärung,' and Goldmark's 'Säkuntal' Overture. Mr. Wood skilfully conducted as usual.

An interesting concert was given at the Parish Room, Teddington, on the 19th ult., by Mr. W. A. Everington's Amateur Male-Voice Double Quartet Party and others with much success. The glees and part-songs sung were:—'Hark, jolly shepherds' (Brewer), 'The Knight's song' (Pressey), 'Sweet, if you love me' (Harris), 'Cold is Cadwallo's tongue' (Horsley), 'Requital'—the Coronation Prize Glee by Dr. Alfred King—'A Franklyn's dogge' (Mackenzie), 'Discord, dire sister' (Webbe), 'Come, gentle zephyr' (Horsley), 'Music all pow'rful' (Walmisley), 'The Goslings' (Bridge), 'When Sappho tun'd' (Danby), 'Jack and Jill' (Jarvis), and 'Good-night, beloved' (Foster).

The Ealing Choral and Orchestral Society gave a very fine rendering of Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' on the 20th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Wood, Mr. Ben Johnson, and Mr. Daniel Price, all of whom sang excellently, the soprano especially displaying much dramatic instinct. The choir was well balanced, and sang the music with power and expressiveness. There was a complete orchestra, the bass and wood-wind being reinforced from the Richter and Queen's Hall Orchestras. The orchestra also gave very effective renderings of 'Album Leaf,' by Wagner, and the 'Dream Pantomime' music from Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel,' the vocal parts of which were well sung by Miss Ethel Wood and the Misses Allright. Mr. J. Cliffe Forrester, the conductor, may be congratulated on the success of his endeavours to further the cause of good music in this locality.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, January 10, 1903.

There was a lull in the musical activities of New York during the holiday season, but there are several things of interest to record.

At the opera the illness of singers, compelling frequent changes of bill, coupled with the illness of Mr. Grau, created an apathy which seemed to threaten danger to the financial success of the enterprise until the advent of Madame Nordica and with her the later Wagnerian list. Since then the outlook is propitious. Two representations of 'Tristan und Isolde' crowded the vast theatre, though they were but four days apart. Next week the 'Nibelung' dramas begin. There have been no novelties thus far, and the only things that have piqued curiosity have been the experiments with new tenors and the appearance of Mesdames Sembrich and Eames in rôles new to them. They were respectively Mimi in 'La Bohème,' and Tosca in Puccini's opera of that name. Both essays were gratifyingly successful. Herr Anthes, who embroiled himself with the management of the Royal Opera at Dresden by accepting an engagement with Mr. Grau is the most successful of the new tenors. His work in 'Lohengrin' and 'Tannhäuser' fell short on the histrionic side, and he did not become persona grata until he appeared as Tristan, and it seems likely now that Mr. Grau's judgment in bringing him from Germany for a term of years will be vindicated long before the season closes.

The country has echoed with the strains of Handel's 'Messiah' from coast to coast for a month past. In New York the Oratorio Society, under the direction of Mr. Frank Damrosch, made use on December 26 and 27 of Professor Prout's new edition. So far as I have observed, this was the second experiment of the kind in the world, the first having been the performance under Professor Prout in Queen's Hall, London, on November 12. Mr. Damrosch's first purpose was to adhere closely to Prout in all things, but in the end he contented himself chiefly with the Prout orchestration and followed his own judgment and taste as to tempi and expression. Under the circumstances, I cannot say that Professor Prout's version of the oratorio had a fair trial, though the 'Messiah' had a stirring performance. The most satisfactory feature of the solo work was Madame Suzanne Adams's singing of the soprano airs, though it was her first essay in oratorio.

In the department of choral music the most completely satisfying concert in New York since my last letter was that of the Musical Art Society, a small choir of professional singers, which is also under the direction of Mr. Damrosch. The centre of gravity in its schemes lies in the à capella music of the 16th century and the cantatas of Bach. The Society has been in existence nine years, and gave the first concert of its tenth season on December 18 in Carnegie Hall, a room much too large for the attainment of the proper musical effects, but none too large for the audiences which attend these concerts. The seating capacity is something over 3,000. Its size, moreover, enables Mr. Damrosch to produce some peculiarly thrilling antiphonal effects by enlisting a choir of from 400 to 800 voices from the People's Choral Union, which he places in the gallery. At this concert the large amateur choir sang responsively with the professional body in Vittoria's 'Pange lingua' (singing, with fine effect, the old chant in unison with organ accompaniment), Palestrina's 'Gloria Patri,' and Bach's Reformation Cantata 'Ein feste Burg' (the concluding chorale). Other numbers of the programme were Sweelinck's Psalm cxxiv., a Benedictus and Jubilate by Johannes Gabrieli, Brahms's 'Fest- und Gedenksprüche,' Henschel's 'To Music,' and Leslie's 'Charm me asleep.' As a rule the Musical Art Society sings all its pieces in the language in which they were composed.

The Boston Society of similar kind, which Mr. Wallace Goodrich organized last season, also gave a concert last month with fine success, in which Professor Parker played one of the organs, in Trinity Church.

From this it will be seen that America, supposed to be peculiarly restless in its striving towards progress, is not forgetful of the old in music. This fact was accentuated on January 6, at Mr. Sam Franko's Concert of Old Music in Daly's Theatre, in this city. Here all the old music was new to the listeners. Mr. Franko visited Europe last season in the interest of his delightful enterprise, and persuaded Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch to bring his unique entertainments to the United States. At his concert he had the help of Mr. and Mrs. Dolmetsch and Miss Johnston, who played old-time instruments and old-time music. More than that, Mr. Franko had invoked the help of M. Saint-Saëns, M. Gevaert and Dr. Prieger, of Bonn, who lent him manuscripts from their collections. From M. Saint-Saëns we had his restoration of some of the music composed in 1673 by Marc Antoine Charpentier for the first production of Molière's 'Le Malade Imaginaire'; from Dr. Prieger, Johann Christian Bach's Symphony in G minor (played two years ago at Düsseldorf under the direction of Professor Julius Butts—see THE MUSICAL TIMES of April, 1901, p. 237), and from M. Gevaert a ballet-suite compiled from four of Sacchini's operas. The visitors from London took part in Bach's fifth Brandenburg Concerto Grosso for violin, flute, harpsichord and strings, a sonata for viola d'amore and harpsichord by Ariosti, and the first of Rameau's Concertos for viola d'amore, viola da gamba and harpsichord. Mr. Dolmetsch and his companions have now begun a series of illustrated lectures on archaic instruments and music, but it is too early to say what measure of success they are likely to attain. Under the happy surroundings of Mr. Franko's concert they made a most gracious impression.

Two other incidents in the musical life of Boston deserve mention. On December 2 the Cecilian Society performed Georg Henschel's 'Requiem' (composed in memory of Mrs. Henschel), under the direction of the composer. It will be heard in New York at a charity concert on January 21. On January 6, Mr. B. J. Lang employed the same society, of which he is conductor, in a concert performance of Wagner's 'Parsifal.' The first act was sung in the afternoon, the second and third in the evening, in Symphony Hall, and aroused great enthusiasm. The solo parts were in the hands of singers from the Metropolitan Opera House, namely, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Herr Gerhäuser, Herr Van Rooy, Herr Blass, and Herr Mühlmann.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, January 15.

The excessive number of concert-givers during the season is frequently made the subject of complaint in the larger cities, and it must be admitted that the demands thus made upon the attention of the music-loving public are not by any means always justified by artistic results. But the evil, if such it be, is not an unmixed one. The numerous candidates for public favour are apt, at least, to keep the audience au fait and to improve their judgment, so that genuine merit is likely to obtain due recognition and an enthusiastic welcome accorded only to truly great artists. One such, Frau Lili Lehmann, has recently appeared at the Opera in quite a number of great dramatic parts, such as Isolde, Brünnhilde, Norma, Leonore in 'Fidelio,' and others, in her assumption of which it was difficult to know which to admire most: the beauty and admirable training of her voice, the nobility of her action and general characterisation, or the marvellous versatility of her talent.

Joachim, equally great in his artistic earnestness and lofty idealism, also visited us, and with the members of his quartet enchanted his hearers at several chamber concerts. Amongst the aspiring younger pianists who have recently appeared there may be mentioned: Wilhelm Kurz, of Lemberg, an earnest and talented artist; Fräulein Bertha Jahn, whose delicate touch and general artistic qualities would seem to point her out as a worthy successor to Ilona Eibenschütz; and the blind pianist, Rudolph Braun, whose compositions for two pianofortes have caused him to be numbered amongst the most gifted young composers resident in Vienna.

At a recent Philharmonic Concert, Ignaz Brüll, the composer of 'Das goldene Kreuz,' achieved a very good success with a new 'Rhapsody' for pianoforte and orchestra, of which he interpreted the pianoforte part himself. Another native Viennese composer, Hans Koessler, at present a professor at the Budapest Conservatorium, successfully introduced at one of the concerts of the Concert Verein a number of Symphonic Variations; a substantial and most musicianly work, brilliantly instrumented. It is dedicated to the memory of Brahms. On the same day, a new opera by Koessler, 'Der Münzenfranz,' was brought out at Strassburg, and very favourably received. Another operatic novelty, although not produced in Vienna, has excited much interest here. I refer to Goldmark's 'Goetz von Berlichingen,' the libretto founded upon Goethe's drama, which has just been brought out at Budapest. Its reception, it appears, was a most enthusiastic one, a complete triumph for the composer, who, being a Hungarian by birth, would moreover command the special sympathy of a Budapest audience. The new work will probably ere long be mounted also at our Imperial Opera. Meanwhile, the impending revival here of Weber's 'Euryanthe' is being looked forward to with eager interest on all sides.

Considerable attention has been attracted in musical quarters by two orchestral concerts given by distinguished foreign conductors. One of these was Felix Weingartner, who with the Kaim Orchestra, of Munich, conducted the 'Symphonie fantastique' by Berlioz, and the 'Dante' symphony, by Liszt, both from memory. The orchestra, though not always able to realise the intentions of its conductor, rendered a good account of itself on the whole. Our other visitor was M. Safanoff, the famous director of the Imperial Conservatorium of Moscow, who, with the orchestra of the Concertverein, gave a performance consisting entirely of works by Russian composers. These included Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony; a charming Sérénade by Glazounow; a musical trifle, entitled 'Une tabatière à musique,' by Liadoff; a Caucasian scene, 'Im Aul,' by Ipolitoff-Iwanoff (with an incidental and highly-effective duo for corno inglese and viola); a very ably-written pianoforte concerto by Rachmaninoff,—played by the composer and extremely well received—and a somewhat trite composition, entitled 'Musical Illustrations to the story of Czar Saltan,' by Rimsky-Korsakoff. As a conductor, Safanoff proved himself possessed of the very highest qualities, a magnetic personality, under whose inspiring influence the orchestra entirely surpassed itself. With his perfectly natural temperament and eminently sound and unaffected musical feeling, he can be compared only to the greatest of living conductors, Hans Richter.

An excellent performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew Passion' has been given recently by the Singakademie, an institution founded some forty years ago, and which during that period has been doing some meritorious, if not always particularly noteworthy, work. The solo parts were in fairly efficient hands, while the choir, under Herr Lafite's direction, left nothing to be desired as regards readiness of attack and dramatic fervour.

MANDYCZEWSKI.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bristol and Clifton Philharmonic Society on the 3rd ult. gave a performance of 'Elijah' at the Victoria Rooms. Band and choir numbered nearly 400, Mr. Ernest Lane holding the principal first violin, and Mr. Edward Cook being at the organ. The soloists were Madame Bertha Wise, Miss Florence Bulleid, Mr. Vivian Bennetts, and Mr. Charles Tree. In the concerted pieces the following local vocalists assisted:—Miss Eveline Gerrish, Miss Maud Willcocks, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Edgar, Mr. R. McGregor, and Mr. J. Sharland. The music of the Youth was well taken by Reginald Neville, a choir-boy from the Church of the Holy Nativity. Mr. E. Pavey directed the performance, which was listened to with gratification by a large audience.

Considerable interest was manifested in the Ladies' Night of the Bristol Madrigal Society at the Victoria Rooms on the 15th ult. The choir numbered 108 voices, and Mr. D. W. Rootham, as usual, conducted. It had been intimated that some members of the London Madrigal Society intended being present, and out of compliment to them some pieces by Wilbye were included in the programme, as they are specially admired by the Metropolitan visitors. There were two compositions new to Bristol in the scheme, and in both cases the composers were among the audience. Dr. E. T. Sweeting, who contributed a piece in 1898, had been requested to write another composition, and he sent 'An April Pastoral,' a dialogue madrigal, the words by Mr. Austin Dobson, dedicated to Mr. Rootham and the members of the Society. The madrigal was finely rendered, and re-demanded, and Dr. Sweeting rose and bowed his acknowledgments. The other contribution which obtained a first hearing in Bristol was 'To take the air,' by Mr. W. Wolstenholme, a madrigal written for the St. Cecilia Society, Blackburn, in 1888, the composer having been born in that town. It is an attractive piece and was well received. The programme afforded much satisfaction to a large and appreciative audience.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Great interest was taken in the first performance of the 'Dream of Gerontius' by the Choral Union on the 12th ult., and the feeling in the minds of all hearers was that another truly great work had been born into the world of art. In the performance of this fine but complex composition, the Choral Union achieved signal distinction, and much honour falls to the share of Mr. Collinson for the infinite pains he must have taken with the preparation of the choral work. Great praise is also due to the soloists—Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Robert Burnett—and to the orchestra for remarkably fine renderings of their several parts.

At the other concerts, all of which have been conducted by Dr. Cowen, conspicuously fine performances have been given of, among other works, Mozart's Symphony in D and that of Brahms in F (No. 3). The pianist on December 29 was M. Edouard Risler (a first appearance), who showed astonishing technique and great powers of exposition in the E flat Concerto of Beethoven, and in Brahms's 'Rhapsodie' (Op. 79). At the same concert we heard Mackenzie's charming 'Cricket on the Hearth' Overture for the first time. The programme on the 5th ult. was, with the exception of two numbers (the 'Danse Macabre' of Saint-Saëns, and a Scena from Goldmark's 'Queen of Sheba') devoted entirely to Tchaikovsky, and included the 'Romeo and Juliet' Overture and the Symphony in D, No. 3, superbly played. The leader of the orchestra, Mr. Maurice Sons, appeared as soloist on the 19th ult., and in the Mendelssohn Concerto and Corelli's Variations 'La Folie,' again demonstrated the fact that we have in him a violinist of the first force.

An event of considerable interest was the Dinner given by the Edinburgh Society of Musicians in honour of Dr. Cowen on the 16th ult. A distinguished company of musicians and music-lovers, numbering considerably over a hundred, assembled under the presidency of Mr. J. A. Moonie, and much good speaking was heard and fine music discoursed.

The two series of Saturday Evening Popular Concerts, those of Messrs. Paterson's and of the Committee of the Central Halls, are running their course in vigorous rivalry, and vieing with each other in the excellence of the fare provided and the quality of the artists engaged. So with the concerts of the Sunday Society, which continues to provide healthy fare for those who wish to spend the Sunday evening listening to high-class music, as the programmes are all modelled on good taste. Only good vocalists are engaged, and the orchestra, under the direction of Mr. F. Laubach, is excellent.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

What must be regarded as one of the most important events of this season was the appearance of Herr Richard Strauss as conductor at the fifth classical concert, on December 23. With the exception of Spohr's overture to 'Jessonda' and Beethoven's Symphony No. 8, the programme consisted of Richard Strauss's own works—viz., Sérénade for wind instruments, and the tone-poems 'Don Juan' and 'Death and Transfiguration,' the two last being heard for the first time here. Under the composer's inspiring beat, the playing of the Scottish Orchestra reached the highest level. The reappearance of Herr Kreisler as solo violinist (in Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, and Saint-Saëns's 'Rondo Capriccioso,') and a popular programme which included Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony and Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien,' attracted a very large audience to the sixth concert on Christmas Day. The seventh classical concert, on December 30, was notable chiefly for the first appearance here of M. Edouard Rislér, whose performance of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat made a deep impression. The programme likewise included a novelty in the shape of Mozart's overture and entr'actes from 'Les petits riens' and Berlioz's Symphony 'Harold in Italy,' the viola obbligato in the latter work being finely played by Mr. Maurice Sons.

The new year opened with the Choral Union's time-honoured performance of the 'Messiah,' on the 1st ult., I may well use the word 'time-honoured,' because did not the Choral Union originate sixty years ago in a 'Society for performing the Messiah'? The famous oratorio was first sung in Glasgow by these pioneers in the City Hall, April 2, 1844. The 'Messiah' was also given on the 5th ult. by the Young Men's Christian Association Choir, under the energetic direction of Mr. R. L. Reid. The soloist at the ninth classical concert, on the 6th ult., was Lady Hallé, who, supported excellently by the Scottish Orchestra, gave an ideal reading of Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 6 in E flat. At this concert, Tchaikovsky's 'Polish' Symphony was given for the first time in Glasgow, but, although beautifully played, it evoked only moderate enthusiasm. After quite a run of foreign virtuosi, the appearance of Miss Fanny Davies at the tenth classical concert, on the 13th ult., was most welcome. Although the programme contained no novelties—of which there has been no lack this season—it was one of the most satisfactory we have had. Miss Davies, besides giving a fine performance of the solo part in Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, contributed some familiar solos which many leading pianists are wont to ignore. Quite a first-rate reading of Gade's Symphony No. 1 in C minor, and Dvůřák's Slavonic Rhapsody No. 3 in A flat, was given under the baton of Mr. Maurice Sons, who conducted the performance in the absence of Dr. Cowen.

At the eleventh concert on the 20th ult., Mr. Sons, the accomplished principal first violin in the orchestra, appeared as soloist, taking part in Mendelssohn's ever-popular Violin Concerto and playing the 'Chaconne' from Bach's Fourth Sonata. The programme also included a first performance here of Tchaikovsky's 'Fantasia' for orchestra, after Dante's 'Francesca di Rimini'—a capital specimen of programme-music brilliantly played by the band—and a most satisfying rendering of Brahms's Symphony No. 3, in F. The habits of the popular orchestral concerts have had a fair share of 'novelties,' among which may be mentioned Elgar's 'Dream Children,' Gretry's suite de ballet 'Céphale and Procris' (first performance in Scotland), and Stanford's 'Irish Rhapsody' No. 1. A one-composer programme—Tchaikovsky being selected—was given by way of experiment on the 10th ult., but it was only a moderate success. Among the solo artists who have appeared are Misses Muriel Foster, Jenny Taggart, and Edna Thornton, and Madame de Vere Sapio. On the 21st ult., Dr. Edward E. Harper, principal of the Athenæum School of Music, delivered a thoughtful and suggestive lecture on 'Higher Musical Culture.'

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Fifth Annual Concert of the Gloucester Orpheus Society, held in the Shire Hall on New Year's Day, was a complete success from every point of view. Mr. A. Herbert Brewer takes the greatest possible pains to secure the most perfect renderings of male-voice part-songs, and there is an enthusiasm among the members of the Society which would delight any conductor.

To the programme the Society contributed ten items and the selection covered a wide range. Opening with Cooke's immortal 'Strike the Lyre,' the members sang Lee Williams's 'Encouragement to a Lover,' which had to be repeated (the composer being an interested listener), 'The Hunt is up' (John Bennett), 'A wet sheet and a flowing sea' (Harford Lloyd), 'Come, let us join the roundelay' (W. Beale), 'All things love thee' (Hatton), and 'This pleasant month of May' (Beale). In addition to these, two absolute novelties were presented. Mr. Brewer had written for and dedicated to the Society an excellent setting of 'Hark, jolly Shepherds,' from Morley's madrigals, and the part-song met with such acceptance that the public insisted upon its repetition. The other novelty was a stirring and vigorous part-song from the pen of Sir Hubert Parry, the President of the Society, the words of the Loyal Ode, 'Vivat Rex,' being supplied by Mr. H. Godwin Chance, who is Chairman of the Committee and one of the most enthusiastic members of the Society. This is the third lyric of his which has been set to music for the Society since its foundation. The spirited and patriotic performance of the Loyal Ode was followed by a remarkable demonstration. Sir Hubert Parry, who conducted, readily consented to an encore, and the second rendering was, if possible, better than the first. Sir Hubert insisted upon Mr. Chance sharing in the demonstration, and it was generally agreed that as the Loyal Ode was the most difficult work the Society has yet given, its performance was the crowning effort of its work. Associated with the Society on this interesting occasion were Miss Mabel Manson (soprano) and Miss Jessie Grimson (violin), and their performances were greatly appreciated. The accompaniments for the soloists were played by Mr. Brewer and his able deputy, Mr. S. W. Underwood.

Since Mr. Joseph Bennett became President of the Gloucester Choral Society, now many years ago, it has been his generous custom to deliver one lecture a season for the subscribers and members. This pleasing function took place at the Guildhall on the 6th ult., when Mr. Bennett gave many pleasant reminiscences of 'Musicians I have met,' including Dr. S. S. Wesley (some time organist of Gloucester Cathedral), Sir John Goss, Sir W. S. Bennett, Sir G. A. Macfarren, Henry Smart, and J. L. Hatton. Miss Fanny Davies during the evening played a number of pianoforte solos with the greatest possible acceptance.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

That which musical Liverpool has lacked in practice—and the past month has been singularly dull and unprofitable—we have emphatically made up in precept, for the question of a 'municipal orchestra,' first mooted by a communication to the papers from Mr. W. J. Bowden, has already assumed large proportions, and has awakened a most vivid and general interest. Liverpool, as a rule so slow in extending welcome to new ideas, has taken up this particular suggestion with remarkable avidity, and the possibilities are being discussed amid every symptom of hopefulness. The scheme embraces the formation, as its tentative name suggests, of a large orchestra, under the ægis of the Corporation, and the aim is, ostensibly, the bettering of public taste. In Liverpool there is a wide divergence between the money spent upon the arts of sculpture and painting and that doled out to music, and it is felt that something should be done to give music an equal attention. The matter will probably be officially brought to the notice of the City Council, and signs are not wanting that it will have warm support from the most enlightened members of the Chamber. Up to the present, Liverpool's corporate acknowledgment of music has found expression only in the organ recitals at St. George's Hall and in the performances by the Constabulary band. Dr. Peace's recitals on Saturdays are attended by thousands, and Mr. Crowley's band is one of the best organisations of its kind extant, and never plays but to huge gatherings. It is felt that, whilst adhering to that which has given so much happiness in the past, the time has come when Liverpool must do something more for music. Therefore this acclaimed suggestion of a 'municipal orchestra.'

The seventh concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 13th ult., when Lady Hallé gave a most distinguished rendering of the solo part in Mozart's Violin concerto No. 6, in E flat. Mr. Lloyd Chandos was the vocalist, and the orchestra, under Dr. Cowen, gave Berlioz's Symphony 'Harold in Italy,' Beethoven's overture 'Leonora' No. 1, and Mackenzie's overture 'The Cricket on the Hearth.' Mr. Simon Speelman distinguished himself by his fine performance of the viola part in the Berlioz Symphony. The chorus, who are hard at work on Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' sang Max Bruch's 'On Jordan's banks.'

Mr. Ernest Schiever's penultimate concert was given on the 17th ult. in the College of Music. The programme included Tchaikovsky's String Quartet No. 2, in F, and Richard Strauss's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 13). The solo violoncellist was Mr. Walter Hatton, and Mr. Isodor Cohn was at the pianoforte.

The programme of the Hallé Concert, under Dr. Richter's direction, on the 20th ult., included Dvorák's Overture 'Mein Heim' (first time here), Tchaikovsky's Symphonic Poem 'Francesca di Rimini,' the Prelude to 'Parsifal,' and Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony (also given for the first time in Liverpool), and made up an exceedingly interesting scheme.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Here as in other British centres music at Christmas time means performances of the 'Messiah' and practically nothing else. At the first of the two recently given by the Hallé Choir and Orchestra there was one unwonted feature, namely, an auditorium no better filled than at one of the ordinary concerts with a not very popular programme. Hitherto a '“Messiah” Night' at the Free Trade Hall has been proverbial for excessive crowding, and it is remarkable that a mere change in days of the week should this year have made so very great a difference to the numbers of the audience. The accustomed days are Thursday and Friday, whereas this year the 'Messiah' was given on Wednesday and Thursday, and it is certain that the comparatively poor audience on Wednesday was due to nothing whatever but the unusual day. The performances were among the best ever heard in this neighbourhood. Misses Agnes Nicholls and Ada Crossley, Messrs. Ben Davies and Charles Santley formed an unsurpassable quartet of soloists; the conductor was Mr. R. H. Wilson, the choir and orchestra were well disposed, and everything went magnificently. The other Manchester choir on the festival scale—namely, the Philharmonic, conducted by Mr. G. Brand Lane—gave the 'Messiah' on the following Saturday, and again on Christmas Day, also with great success.

At the Hallé concert on the 8th ult. the soloist was Lady Hallé, who delighted an enormous audience with her rendering of Mozart's E flat Violin Concerto, and a brilliant performance was given of Glazounow's 'Carnival' Overture. The latter part of the concert consisted of Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, and here as in the Glazounow Overture and in Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody (No. 2 in the orchestral, No. 12 in the pianoforte series), Dr. Richter conducted like a giant refreshed with Christmas holidays. There was again a very large audience when the 'Golden Legend' was given on the 15th ult. The soloists were Misses Agnes Nicholls and Muriel Foster, Messrs. William Green and Andrew Black. The choir sang well, the orchestra played well, and the whole performance was much applauded. The 'Coronation Ode,' given after the interval, afforded a good contrast, with its broad, hearty, and popular ring. Here the same soloists were heard to greater advantage. Between the two longer works, Miss Foster sang 'Che farò' with quite striking success, and Mr. Green gave a highly acceptable rendering of Wagner's 'Preislied.' The Brodsky Concert on the 14th ult. brought together a record audience, the principal attraction being the association of Lady Hallé and Dr. Brodsky in Bach's Concerto for two violins. One can scarcely imagine a finer performance than was given of that noble work, and the Quartet also surpassed itself in Beethoven's Op. 130 and in that wonderfully charming first work in quartet form by Tchaikovsky which is referred to in Mrs. Newmarch's recent article on Tchaikovsky and Tolstoi. It is an interesting fact, that on the occasion in Moscow when the slow movement drew tears from the great romancer, Dr. Brodsky was also among the performers, though not as leader. In those days he still played second violin. At a vocal recital given by Miss Minnie Williams—a blind singer who has studied at the Royal Manchester College of Music—on the 19th ult., the programme was too long and multifarious. The chief singer had fair success in songs by Bach, Schumann, Richard Strauss, and others, and the instrumental part of the concert was extremely fine, the performers being Messrs. Wilhelm Backhaus (pianist), and Paul Grümmer (violoncellist).

The concert at the Manchester Schiller Anstalt on the 10th ult. brought the first opportunity in Manchester of hearing the choir of the celebrated Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society, which has thrice won the hundred-guinea shield at Morecambe. The programme consisted of old English madrigals, two modern choral pieces by Elgar, one part-song for female voices by Schumann, besides other less important pieces for sopranos and altos, and a long series of part-songs by Brahms for mixed-voice choir. The delight and astonishment of the audience, largely Germans, on hearing their own music so perfectly rendered by English singers was agreeable to witness. The choir well sustained their reputation for beauty of tone, correct intonation, and finished execution, and the occasion was a real triumph for the singers and for their conductor, Mr. H. Whittaker. Instrumental music was represented by a Mozart Sonata for two pianofortes, and Saint-Saëns's well-known Variations for the same two instruments, in the performance of which Miss Olga Neruda and Mr. W. H. Dayas were worthily associated.

In regard to the Blackpool choir it ought to be mentioned that they have greatly profited, especially as regards their exceptionally interesting repertory, by the labours of Canon Gorton and Mr. Howson, of Morecambe. The Choral Society conducted by Mr. Howson is no doubt one of the best and most enterprising in the kingdom. I send the programme of the annual 'Open Night,' to be held this year on February 20, as it may well interest readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES, and I hope to discuss other aspects of the same subject in subsequent letters.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There is little to report as to musical doings in the district during the last two months, except that a most successful concert was given by the Great Yarmouth Musical Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Haydon Hare, on December 18, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' and 'Death of Minnehaha' formed the first part of the programme, the second being miscellaneous. The principals engaged were Miss Ethel Lovegrove, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Graham Smart. The chorus showed evidence of the careful training of their conductor, and the Society is to be congratulated on the excellence of the concert.

The organ recitals given by Dr. Bunnett, under the auspices of the Norwich Corporation, continue to meet with encouraging success, and it may be of interest to give some particulars of this municipal enterprise. This movement was commenced in the year 1881, on the opening of the new organ at St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, built by Messrs. Bryceson, and presented to the City by public subscription. In the year 1887 the recitals were reorganised, and the management entrusted by the Corporation to a committee, of which Mr. Frederic Oddin Taylor was elected chairman, a post he has held ever since. Certain changes have been made in the original scheme to ensure variety, and the recitals now take place every Saturday evening in the winter season and consist of vocal and instrumental music, the organ being made a prominent feature. The admission is fixed at the low figure of twopence each person, with a few front seats at sixpence each, and the movement is practically self-supporting. During the fifteen years since the reorganisation, over 226,000 persons have attended these recitals, an average of over 15,000 a year, and the present season promises to be a most successful one.

The Municipality of Norwich, and Dr. Bunnett the Corporation organist, on whom the main burden rests, are to be congratulated on the success of this movement, which has undoubtedly tended to elevate musical taste and encourage local talent in this city.

Mr. Clarence Eddy, the well-known American organist, recently gave two performances on the Cathedral organ. These Recitals gave great pleasure to a numerous audience; the programmes were varied, and well calculated to display the resources of the instrument.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

After the customary Handelian 'boom' at Christmas time there has not been much serious music to chronicle. On the 3rd ult. the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society gave a concert, at which they sang part-songs and the like with admirable neatness and perfection of ensemble under Mr. Ibeson and Mr. Armitage. The sensation of the evening was, however, the remarkable organ-playing of Mr. David Clegg, whose virtuosity is great, though his method and effects are hardly in keeping with the character of the instrument.—On the 7th ult. the Cleckheaton Orchestral Society, under Mr. C. Stott, gave a concert, chiefly of light but not inartistic music, and Miss Ada Crossley gave genuine pleasure by her admirable singing.—On the 12th ult. Mr. Edgar Haddock gave the first of a new series of chamber concerts, at which violin sonatas by Beethoven, Brahms, Dvorák, and Rubinstein were played. Mr. Haddock was, of course, the violinist, the pianist being a clever young artist, Mr. Edward Isaacs, whose prowess was still more strikingly displayed the following evening at one of the same concert-giver's 'Musical Evenings,' when Miss Marie Brema was the vocalist, and Mr. Boris Hambourg the violoncellist.—On the 14th ult. the Morley Choral Society, of which Mr. Alfred Benton is the conductor, gave a most creditable performance of Goring Thomas's 'The Swan and the Skylark,' in which the principal parts were taken by Miss Wormald, Miss Appleyard, Messrs. Fallas and Broadhead.

Miscellaneous.

Mrs. Newmarch has recently issued a volume of poems entitled 'Horae Amoris: songs and sonnets' (Elkin Matthews). Some of the lyrics therein contained might very well attract the fancy of composers. Here is a specimen stanza of Mrs. Newmarch's muse:—

Now April brings a shower
Of song from every tree,
What singer in the garden
Shall sing my love for me?

A 'Henry Gillman Memorial Concert'—in aid of the widow of Mr. Henry Gillman, late manager of the Crystal Palace—is to be given at the Crystal Palace on Saturday the 21st inst. In support of that beneficent object the following eminent artists have already promised their assistance, Madame Ella Russell, Miss Marguerite Macintyre, Madame Alice Esty, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. Charles Santley and the Meister Glee Singers.

The twenty-eighth Workington Musical Festival and Competition was held on the 1st and 2nd ult. The entries for the competition showed widespread interest, and served to exhibit much natural capacity and good teaching. The 'Creation' was performed on the evening of the 1st ult. Mr. Ivander Griffiths, who originated the scheme, still helps to animate the movement as secretary. Dr. McNaught adjudicated and conducted.

The Quintet for pianoforte, violin, viola, violoncello and double bass by Mr. Percy Godfrey, which won the Lesley Alexander prize, has just been published by Mr. E. Donajowski. It consists of a bold Allegro with good thematic material, a short Scherzo of slightly Brahms flavour, a melodious Andante, and a lively Finale. The work throughout is clear in design, and the writing clever and effective.

The following candidates passed the Fellowship examination of the Royal College of Organists held last month:—

A. Adams, Old Catton.
A. G. Claypole, Peterborough.
W. Cooke, Runcorn.
E. T. Davies, Dowlais.
F. A. Dibb, Oxtou.
C. E. Ford, London.
J. O. Jones, Wrexham.

H. J. Langley, Wells.
A. W. Ogilvy, Windsor.
O. Robinson, West Smethwick.
W. E. Rowbottom, Brigg.
A. Toop, London.
E. J. Watkins, Parkstone.

The Musical Directory Annual and Almanack—now a veteran publication fifty-one years old—has again made its welcome appearance. This indispensable publication, issued by the original publishers, Messrs. Rudall, Carte and Co., is of such a nature that it needs no eulogy. Another standard book of reference, by reason of its being 'a cyclopædic record of men and topics of the day,' is Hazell's Annual for 1903. A brief but comprehensive survey of the music in 1902 adds to the usefulness of a compilation that merits commendation.

The lectures announced to be given at the Royal Academy of Music on Wednesday afternoons during the present term are as follow:—Mr. W. W. Starmer, on 'Bells and Bell Tones'; Mr. Walter Macfarren, on 'Musical Forms'; and Mr. J. Mackenzie Rogan, on 'Military Bands and Military Music.' The following awards have recently been made:—The Macfarren Scholarship to Arnold E. T. Bax (London); the George Mence Smith Scholarship to Annie Maud Thornton (Windhill, Yorks); the Sainton-Dolby Scholarship to Mary Evelyn Skinner (Lohaghal, India).

The Amateur Chamber Music Society has issued an attractive programme for the season 1902-3. It includes works by Kaun (Octet), Rängen (Septet), and Führmeister (Sextet), all of which, it is said, have not hitherto been publicly performed in England.

The new Savoy opera, entitled 'A Princess of Kensington,' by Captain Basil Hood, with music by Edward German, was produced on the 22nd ult. with the usual indications of success.

Foreign Notes.

AMSTERDAM.

The distinguished conductor Mengelberg, in spite of Frau Wagner's objection, recently gave a concert-performance of 'Parsifal' in this city. A protest has been drawn up stating that such performance of the sacred play is in direct opposition to the master's will, and moreover that such a course is an offence to his art. This protest is signed by Karl Klindworth, Richter, von Gross, E. Heckel, Mottl, F. Fischer, Glasenapp, von Wolzogen, Humperdinck, and Kniese. The whole of the work was, however, thus given at the Albert Hall, under the direction of the late Sir Joseph Barnby, on November 10 and 15, 1884, and so far as we are aware no such objection was raised by any one of the distinguished disciples and friends of the master now waging pen-warfare against a conductor who certainly produced the music with all due care and reverence.

BERLIN.

At a recent sitting of the committee of the Wagner Memorial it was announced that Professor Dr. Fritz Volbach, of Mayence, had accepted the invitation to compose the hymn for the ceremony of next October, also that the Berlin Sängerbund, at its meeting of January 3, had unanimously resolved to perform the music, and that for the occasion it would be strengthened by a boys' choir. Letters also were read out from Richard Strauss, Arthur Nikisch, Victorin de Joncières, and Anton Dvorák, accepting the invitation to become members of the international honorary committee for the unveiling of the Richard Wagner monument.

BONN.

The Beethoven House Society has arranged a Beethoven Festival to take place May 17-21. The Joachim Quartet will perform all the master's quartets, each programme illustrating the three periods into which Beethoven's work is conveniently though roughly divided.

BRUSSELS.

M. Vincent d'Indy's 'L'Etranger,' of which he wrote both libretto and music, was successfully produced at La Monnaie on Wednesday evening, January 7. The principal dramatis personae—Vita and the Stranger—were impersonated by Mdlle. Friché and M. Albers. The work was given under the able direction of M. Sylvain Dupuy. M. d'Indy's previous opera 'Fervaal' was produced at the same theatre in 1897.

DRESDEN.

Marie Wieck, daughter of Friedrich Wieck, and a half-sister of Clara Schumann, who made her first appearance in public at a Gewandhaus concert sixty years ago, recently gave a 'Schumann' evening at Dresden, where she resides. Despite her seventy years she played, according to the Vienna Neue Musikalische Presse, with astonishing physical and mental freshness. Her programme included the Concerto in A minor, and the Variations for two pianofortes (Op. 46), in which Fraulein Elisa Schwabhäuser took part.

LAUSANNE.

A series of popular concerts are being given under the direction of Herr Hammer. To members of the 'Maison du peuple,' the entrance fee is only 20 centimes.

MANNHEIM.

The Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung states that some compositions by Hugo Wolf, who is now confined in an asylum (and, we regret to say, without hope of recovery), will shortly be published by P. Ferd. Heckel, viz. the opera fragment 'Venegas,' in vocal score by the composer, also songs for voice and orchestra, 'Prometheus,' 'Der Rattenfänger,' 'Anakreons Grab,' and 'Wo ich Trost.'

MILAN.

Le Guide Musicale states that for the £2,000 prize offered by Signor Sonzogno for an opera, the jury is thus composed: P. Serao, U. Giordano and A. Toscanini represent Italy; Massenet, France; Jan Blockx, Belgium; J. Breton, Spain; Humperdinck, Germany; Goldmark, Austria-Hungary; and Asger Hamerik, Denmark and England. That the gifted Danish composer should be elected for his own country is reasonable enough, but Signor Sonzogno ought surely to have secured one of our many eminent composers to represent England—or, we would rather say, Great Britain and Ireland.

PARIS.

M. Bruneau, composer of 'Le Rêve,' has completed the score of a new opera, 'L'Enfant-Roi,' which he intends to offer to M. Carré for the season 1903-4. The libretto bears the signature of Emile Zola who, says La Vie Musicale, 'at his death bequeathed to his collaborator a number of scenarios sufficient to last him for his lifetime,' adding 'A good piece of news for the admirers of the composer of "Messidor" !'

PRESSBURG.

We read in the Neue Musik-Zeitung that Beethoven's 'Missa solemnis' was performed in its entirety on St. Cecilia's day in the cathedral, constituting part of the liturgical service. It was first given here in 1835, and since 1891 has been performed every year. Various Church musical societies took part in it, the conductor being Dr. Eugen Kossow.

SANGERSHAUSEN.

The chief magistrate here proposed to sell the four recently discovered letters written by J. S. Bach, to an archivist at Berlin for the sum of £150. The minister of public worship, however, very properly refused to give his consent to the sale, considering that it would be far better to hand over the letters to the Ephoral library of this city, or to some Bach collection.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARISED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

ALLERTON.—The Choral Society gave a satisfactory performance of Haydn's First Mass in B flat in the Congregational Chapel on the 20th ult. The work was given in memory of the late Mr. Illingworth Robertshaw (formerly conductor of the Society). The choir sang on the whole with excellent expression and attack, and was accompanied by a small but competent orchestra. Mr. G. F. Sewell conducted.

BASINGSTOKE.—The Harmonic Society gave a performance of Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' in the Town Hall on the 12th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Claribel Hyde, Miss Hester Kimbell, Mr. Robert Curtis and Mr. Herbert Simmons. In the absence of the leader of the orchestra (Mr. J. S. Liddle), his place was taken by his daughter Miss M. F. Liddle. Mr. W. H. Liddle conducted an excellent performance.

BATH.—At St. Saviour's Parish Church on the 15th ult. Handel's 'Samson' was creditably sung by the St. Saviour's Choral Class, consisting of about fifty voices, supported by a band of twenty performers led by Mr. Heinrich. The soloists were Mrs. Braddick, Miss Mary Wood, Mr. Bright Jones, Mr. W. Moore and Mr. C. T. Marriner. Mr. J. S. Barker was at the organ and Mr. S. Edwards conducted.

BODMIN.—The Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Haydn's 'Creation' on the 7th ult. The choir sang with spirit, and the solo vocalists were Miss Edith Blight, Mr. Albert Collings, and Dr. Meadows. A contingent of the Royal Marine Band, together with local assistance, supplied the accompaniments. Mr. E. W. Sherbourne was at the pianoforte, and Mr. F. C. Thomas the organ. Mr. W. L. Twinning conducted.

CARLISLE.—The Stanwix Choral Society provided an attractive programme at their concert in the County Hall on the 22nd ult., the chief features being 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' The choir sang with intelligence and were supported by an excellent orchestra. Mr. Henry Brearley sang the solo in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's cantata, and Madame Janet Reed gave some soprano solos. Mr. C. R. Doeg conducted.

COWES.—An excellent performance of Coleridge-Taylor's Leeds Cantata 'The Blind Girl of Castél-Cuillé' was given by the Northwood Choral and Orchestral Society on the 7th ult. The choir sang on the whole with praiseworthy success and was efficiently supported by a small orchestra. The solo parts were satisfactorily undertaken by Mrs. A. E. Shergold, Miss Ethel Lister and Miss Constance Dugard, and in the second part, which was miscellaneous, these vocalists were joined by Mr. Charles Tree. Mr. Frederick Rutland, who conducted with ability, deserves commendation for his care in training both choir and orchestra.

CROYDON.—A concert was given on the 15th ult. at West Croydon Hall, when, besides other violin solos cleverly played by Miss Goldie Baker, a youthful violinist, she played with much ability two movements from Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Gipsy Suite,' in which she had the advantage of the composer's accompaniment. The other artists who appeared were Miss Nannie Tout, a fine, powerful soprano, Miss Kelyn Williams, Mrs. Leonard Snow, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. R. E. Miles. Mr. Ernest Dale was the accompanist.

DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND.—The Dunedin Musical, Literary, and Elocutionary Competitions Society held its first Annual Festival in the Victoria Hall and St. Matthew's School during the first week of November. Over 300 competitors were heard in the pianoforte, violin, and vocal sections, and a number of the local choirs entered for the Choir Contest. Mr. Maughan Barnett, of Wellington, was the judge.

HASLINGDEN.—Miss Mary Spencer gave her Second Annual Chamber Concert at the Public Hall on the 14th ult., the artists being, besides herself, Mr. John Lawson (violinist), and Mr. William Warburton (violinocellist); Miss Ellen Sellars was the vocalist. The programme included Grieg's Sonata in C minor for pianoforte and violin, Beethoven's Trio in C minor, and Chopin's Introduction and Polonaise for pianoforte and violinocello, these being played by Miss Spencer and her colleagues in a very brilliant manner. Mr. George Oldham was an efficient accompanist.

NEWPORT (MON.).—The Musical Society gave a performance of 'Elijah' at the Tredegar Hall on the 15th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Ludlam, Miss Minnie Chamberlain, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Arthur Deane, the part of the Youth being sung by Master Charles Goulding. Mr. E. G. R. Richards conducted.

VENTNOR.—Handel's 'Samson' was performed by the Ventnor Musical Society at the Town Hall on the 21st ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Hilda Howard, Mr. David Riddell Hunter, and Mr. Lawrence Fryer. The band and chorus of one hundred performers, under the conductorship of Mr. Evan Jones, were fully efficient, and the conductor is to be congratulated on the success of the performance.

WELLINGTON, NEW ZEALAND.—Mr. Robert Parker, organist of the Cathedral, and conductor of the Wellington Orchestral Society, gave his Annual Concert on December 4. The programme included Mendelssohn's Overture 'Fingal's Cave,' Weber's 'Concertstück,' in which the solo part was admirably given by Miss Janet Ross (a pupil of the conductor), and Moszkowski's Suite 'From foreign parts,' all admirably rendered by the orchestra. Miss Phoebe Parsons and Mr. Leslie Edwards were the vocalists. The programme was completed by a beautiful romance for horn by R. Strauss, played with much skill and expression by Mr. G. G. Schwartz, a member of the orchestra. Mr. Parker conducted.

Obituary.

With regret we place on record the death of Mr. WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, brother of the late Mr. J. W. Davison, the distinguished music critic of The Times. Mr. Duncan Davison, who had reached the age of eighty-eight, passed away at 49, St. Charles's Square, North Kensington, on the 14th ult. He was for many years in business as a music-publisher. His office, a well-known rendezvous of musicians, was on the first floor of a house in Regent Street, opposite to where the Argyll Rooms of concert fame in the early years of the last century stood. The deceased gentleman, formerly the proprietor of the now defunct Musical World, was a familiar figure in the concert-room, where he always had a cheery word for his friends, especially any who took an interest in old-time music-doings in which his brother, the redoubtable 'J. W. D.,' played so prominent a part. Peace to his memory!

The death on New Year's Day of Mr. ROBERT GRIFFITHS, secretary of the Tonic Sol-fa College from 1875 until 1900, removes a much-respected personality known to tonic sol-faists in all parts of the world. Mr. Griffiths was born in 1824, and was thus in his seventy-ninth year at the time of his decease.

Answers to Correspondents.

PUPIL.—(1) You will find some historical particulars of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' in our issue of December last, p. 805. (2) Verdi was born at Roncole, October 10, 1813, and died at Milan, January 27, 1901. (3) Handel did not conduct the first performance of his 'Messiah' in the present mode with baton in hand, but he sat at the harpsichord, which he played, and directed the performers from that point of vantage, according to the custom of his day.

H. E. J.—You seem to have a valid claim in the case you mention, but the extent of that claim is not clear from the way you state your case. Unless a definite number of pianoforte and organ lessons was agreed upon, you could hardly claim for more than one of each, which would probably not be worth your while. Moreover, there is always difficulty in proving a verbal agreement in the absence of witnesses.

BALLACHRINK.—In regard to the balance of a choir of mixed voices, the late Sir Joseph Barnby advised that the sopranos should be one third of the number, basses one fourth, tenors one fifth, and altos the remainder. At the Sheffield Musical Festival held last year the disposition of the voices was as follows:—

Sopranos.	Altos.	Tenors.	Basses.	Total.
91	78	73	91	333

L. O. T. W.—(1) Naumann's 'History of Music' will doubtless answer your purpose, but for particulars of modern composers you need to obtain special books, e.g., 'Masters of Modern Music' Series, and separate biographies. (2) Yes, Professor Prout's theoretical works naturally have a high reputation. (3) Schubert's Op. 27 and Op. 40 consist of three marches and six marches respectively for pianoforte, four hands.

A TEACHER OF SINGING.—The operas 'Le Perle de Brésil' (David) and 'Lakmé' (Delibes) are published, price 1s each net; the songs from the latter work only can be obtained in separate numbers. The operas of 'Il Seraglio,' 'Cosi fan tutte,' and 'Idomeneo' are published with both Italian and German words at about 2s. or 3s. each; the songs are issued separately.

R. W. P.—(1) As 6-4 time is a duple rhythm, the accents naturally fall on the first and fourth beats of the bar. (2) 'Be not afraid' (Mendelssohn) is arranged for the organ by Dr. Steggall; we do not know of a similar transcription of Beethoven's 'Kreutzer Sonata,' second movement.

C. E. M. J.—We are sorry we cannot give the names of organ-builders or of teachers.

G. B.—(1) The Overture to 'Zampa' and Mendelssohn's Spring Song are not, we are glad to say, arranged for the organ. (2) Very likely a misprint of trifling importance. (3) We cannot express an opinion on the method, but we hear it well spoken of. (4) See 'The Musical Profession,' by Dr. Fisher (Curwen).

J. M. D.—You could not do better than submit the reputed Strad to Messrs. W. Hill and Sons, 140, New Bond Street, the eminent violin experts, who would give you a reliable opinion in regard to the instrument in question and its value.

DOLCE.—You ought to proceed very carefully with so young a pupil. A wrong judgment in training her voice may do serious mischief. Better develop the middle notes; those in the higher register may come later on.

J. B. W.—The article 'Mozart,' in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' gives a critical estimate of that composer's works; consult also Jahn's monumental 'Life of Mozart.'

T.—After the vocalist has sung the last note, with the exception of those in No. 28 (Recitatives in Haydn's 'Creation').

E. G.—Perhaps Baker's 'Dictionary of Musicians' (Woolhouse) will meet your requirements in regard to a 'dictionary of musical notabilities.'

F. L. B.—You will probably find the following book useful: 'What is good music?' by W. J. Henderson, published by John Murray.

THEORIST.—Oxford or Durham would probably suit your circumstances.

ENQUIRER.—You would do well to consult Mrs. Curwen's 'Child Pianist'; it is a good foundation on which to build.

W. P.—We regret to be unable to offer advice on instruments of the Pianola species.

M. L.—See answer to 'Enquirer.'

PRACTICE REGISTER

ARRANGED BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

PREFACE.

This book is intended to meet the convenience of Teachers who wish to record clearly for a pupil's guidance the work to be prepared for each lesson or a series. The column headed "Time" is added for the purpose of indicating the number of minutes to be given to the daily practice of each separate subject. (This column is for the Teacher to fill up.)

A few pages of music paper have been inserted for the purpose of writing out turns, trills, &c., and blank pages have been left at the end on which it is suggested that a list of pieces studied should be kept or other memoranda made. The book will be found suitable for students of any instrument.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Another Organist writes:—"Enclosed I hand you a programme of a performance of 'The Rolling Seasons' given by a Chorus of 225 voices with full Orchestral accompaniment. We had to turn the people away, and various requests have been made for a repetition. My modesty forbids me saying all I might about it, but I can, without any reserve, assure you that the beauty of the whole composition was responsible for the success attending it; and in all my experience this has been the most satisfactory and inspiring work we have ever undertaken."

FROM GRIEG TO BRAHMS

AND THEIR ART

BY

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

In a series of essays on Grieg, Dvorák, Saint-Saëns, Franck, Tschalkowsky, and Brahms, Mr. Mason has undertaken to show how each man has brought to his work his own particular temperament and conception of his art, how each has contributed some special quality of expression or beauty to modern music. While the purpose of the book is thus chiefly biographical, the author has considered in an introductory essay, "The Appreciation of Music," and a concluding essay, "The meaning of Music," points of more general interest, such as the process by which music has developed and the place of the art among men's other activities.

Mr. Mason's method is indicated by a sentence in the preface:—"Music may be hard to understand, but musicians are men." So clearly is the human aspect of the subject presented throughout that the book will interest all 'music-lovers, whether or not they have a technical knowledge of the art. Each essay is accompanied by a portrait of the musician written of and a brief bibliography of those of his works which best illustrate the points touched on in the essay.

A HANDBOOK

OF

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO REVISED EDITION.

With this issue of the new edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music it is desired to direct attention to the additional papers which are printed for the first time in this form.

These are, the University of Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper required of all candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors.

These papers will be found most valuable and useful, and for the kind permission to make use of them the author desires to express his most sincere obligations to Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A.; Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc.; Edward J. Chadfield, Esq.; and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A.

November, 1898. E. A. D.

A further reprint of the Handbook affords the opportunity of adding the papers set forth for the recent Mus. Doc. Examination at Victoria University, for the use of which the Author is indebted to the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles.

A MANUAL OF PLAINSONG

FOR DIVINE SERVICE

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES NOTED THE PSALTER NOTED

TO GREGORIAN TONES

TOGETHER WITH THE LITANY AND RESPONSES

A NEW EDITION

PREPARED BY

H. B. BRIGGS AND W. H. FRERE

UNDER THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCE OF

JOHN STAINER

(Late President of the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society).

PREFACE.

THE first edition of The Psalter Noted was published in 1849 under the supervision of the late Rev. Thomas Helmore, and secured for the Gregorian Tones a general recognition of their appropriateness for Divine worship. Subsequently Mr. Helmore's scheme was enlarged by the issue of The Canticles Noted, of A Brief Directory, and of three Appendixes to the Psalter: and the whole collection was issued in one volume under the title of A Manual of Plainsong. The Manual had also two companion books, one of Words only, containing The Canticles and Psalter Accented, the other a collection of Accompanying Harmonies. Thus complete provision was made for the musical performance of the regular services of the Prayer Book. Practical objections, however, to the monotony of the recitation of several Psalms to one Tone without the relief of Antiphons, added to certain difficulties in the pointing, led to the issue of other Psalters which have competed with The Psalter Noted, but without obtaining, any of them, a marked supremacy; and nothing has been issued which covers the whole field so completely as Mr. Helmore's Manual.

Study of the art of Plainsong during the last half century has, however, undergone something like a revolution: on every branch of the question new light has been thrown, and not least upon the principles of pointing. In consequence of repeated demands for a new edition of the Manual, the work of revision was entrusted to the late Sir John Stainer. He readily undertook the task, and called into collaboration Mr. H. B. Briggs and the Rev. W. H. Frere, with the result that before his death he had passed for the press the greater part of the revised proofs prepared by them for the new edition. He had also devoted much time to the consideration, with Mr. Shebbeare, of the Organ Accompaniments, so that the complete work may be considered as his last contribution to the music of the English Church.

His was not the only loss that this book had to undergo in the course of revision, for on the eve of its completion, Mr. Briggs was suddenly called to his rest. So the foregoing words which he had written about Sir John Stainer have now become his own epitaph. Without competing with Sir John Stainer in the wider domain of Church Music he had, in the narrower department of Plainsong, an influence and a competence which were unrivalled; and whatever merits this book may have are due almost entirely to him.

The Manual thus appears in a New Edition, revised in accordance with modern standards of taste and science; it does not cover quite so large a field as formerly, for it contains no music for the Holy Communion; but it has the same counterparts as before in the shape of The Canticles and Psalter Accented, and The Accompanying Harmonies prepared by Mr. Shebbeare, which include accompaniments for the Responses, Te Deum and Litany, as well as for the Tones.

THE VILLAGE TUNE BOOK

CONTAINING

ONE HUNDRED POPULAR HYMN TUNES.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The one hundred hymn-tunes forming this collection have been selected from various sources, old and new. As the earliest can be traced to the year 1551, and the most recent was composed in 1901, they cover a period of three-and-a-half centuries.

In selecting these tunes, care has been taken to provide for all the metres in general use, and the index of first lines may be found useful as a guide to the selection of suitable tunes for particular hymns.

Clergymen and Organists of most Village Churches will find all they need in this collection, and thus be saved the trouble of searching through overladen volumes; therefore, its practical utility, no less than its varied contents, will, it is hoped, render this book of one hundred hymn-tunes acceptable for use in Divine Service and also in the home circle.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS.)

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

G. F. HANDEL.

THE MUSIC EDITED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the "Calvary" Chorus ("Haste, ye souls"), and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

RECENT PRESS NOTICES.

GRANTHAM.—"HIAWATHA."—"Mr. Ben Johnson undertook the matchless solo, 'Onaway! awake, beloved,' and his rendering was very musicianly and expressive. His voice is remarkably sweet and clear, and he sings with cultured ease and refinement."—Grantham Journal.

EALING, W.—"DVOŘÁK'S 'SPECTRE'S BRIDE.'"—The difficult tenor part was in the capable hands of Mr. Ben Johnson, who achieved a remarkable triumph. The three beautiful duets with the soprano were exquisitely rendered, but the most dramatic scene was towards the end of the first part, where a climax is reached which can only be described as wonderful! Mr. Johnson was equal to the emergency, and the dramatic colouring which he gave to this scene in particular was one of the most brilliant features of the evening."—Ealing Gazette.

Address, Adrivale, 27, Warwick Road, Ealing, W.

MR. TOM CHILD

(THE YORKSHIRE TENOR).

The Poplars, Calverley, Leeds.

MR. HENRY PLEVY

(TENOR)

For Oratorios, Concerts, &c.

Solo Tenor, Christ Church, Lancaster Gate.

BISHOP AUCKLAND.—("CREATION.")—"Mr. Plevy came in for unstinted approbation, his efforts throughout being marked with a style clear and correct."—Northern Echo.

"... His singing was greatly to be admired. ... Aroused considerable enthusiasm."—Auckland Times.

BIRMINGHAM.—("MESSIAH.")—"He has a voice of exceedingly pleasant quality, and gives evidence of highly artistic training; he made a most successful first appearance."—Birmingham Gazette.

SHEFFIELD PROFESSIONAL ORCHESTRA.—"Mr. Henry Plevy was the vocalist. ... His voice is a robust tenor of considerable power and very pleasing quality."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

TO CONDUCTORS, SECRETARIES OF CHORAL SOCIETIES AND CONCERT GIVERS.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR)

Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and of the Royal Albert Hall Concerts, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts (16 appearances, Season 1891-2), Crystal Palace Concerts, Albani Concerts, Queen's Hall Ballad Concerts, St. James's Hall Concerts, Royal Amateur Orchestral Society and Popular Concerts, Gaelic Society and Scottish Clans Concerts, is now booking Engagements for Oratorio, Ballad Concerts, &c.

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY,

FIRST SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT, October 14, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters won favour at once with his fine, pure, bright tone, his declamatory powers and vigorous style. He gave first 'Preislied,' from 'Die Meistersinger,' and showed a mastery and power over Wagner's trying vocal music that was admirable. ... 'Lend me your aid' suited the artist's voice and style to perfection, and he gave a capital rendering of it. ... At the close of the second part Mr. Masters sang 'Onaway, awake, beloved,' with great expression."—The Northern Whig, October 15, 1902.

HANLEY GLEE AND MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

THE "MESSIAH."—"Mr. Samuel Masters was new to Hanley, though he is well known throughout the country as a most conscientious and capable singer. He has a very strong voice of even compass, and takes the trouble to sing the 'Messiah' music as if he was the first to deliver the impressive messages to humanity. His version of the cavatina 'Behold and see' was delightful, as also was his rendering of the air 'But thou didst not leave'; his most signal achievement, however, was in 'Thou shalt break them,' choir and audience joining in giving expression to the admiration felt for the effort."—Stafford Sentinel, December 19, 1902.

DUNDEE CHORAL UNION.

THE "MESSIAH."—"Mr. Samuel Masters created a good impression at the outset. He has a voice stronger than the average tenor, but he is not merely a high-set baritone. He has the true tenor timbre in his voice, and he can make his most flute-like tones ring out with accuracy of pitch and rare power."—Dundee Advertiser, December 17, 1902.

SHEFFIELD CHORAL UNION.

THE "MESSIAH."—"Mr. Samuel Masters, a tenor who has proved very successful in London, also won the decided appreciation of the audience. His strong but well-controlled voice was heard to advantage in 'Comfort ye,' and 'Ev'ry valley,' and he sang very finely in later numbers of the work, particularly in 'Thou shalt break them.'"—Sheffield Independent, December 26, 1902.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE).

(Assistant Lay Clerk, Westminster Abbey)

Mr. HENRY J. Wood (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—"I, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.

"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.

"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public. "HENRY J. WOOD."

"ELIJAH.—BROMLEY.—"The title-part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

"Mr. Montague Borwell was a perfect exponent of the fiery Prophet. He is the nearest approach to Santley I have heard for a long time. The dramatic instinct, the necessary sarcasm, and the devotional spirit of the Prophet were all there. The great air, 'Is not His Word,' being sung with much spirit, the top F rang as resonantly as a bell. The beautiful air, 'It is enough,' was splendidly sung, and Mr. Borwell had to repeatedly bow his acknowledgments."—Tombridge Free Press.

"ELIJAH.—STOURBRIDGE.—"Mr. Montague Borwell sang the part of Elijah with fine dramatic expression. His taunts to the Priests of Baal were marked with bitter sarcasm, his appearances to Ahab with dignity, his lament on the betrayal of the people, and his invocation to God were most expressive. Altogether an individual performance."—County Express.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).

"ELIJAH.—"Miss Winifred Marwood made a great impression by her rendering of 'Hear ye, Israel.' It was sung as it should be—prayerfully, and not shouted to the people."—Tombridge Free Press.

"HIAWATHA.—"Miss Winifred Marwood, a soprano of wide range and pleasing method, and Mr. Montague Borwell, a resonant baritone, took the solos in the second scene, and their treatment of the deeply pathetic picture left little to be desired."—Surrey Advertiser.

Address, 56, Forburg Road, Stoke Newington, N.

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

(BASS).

Licentiate (Artist) of the Royal Academy of Music, of the Gloucester and Cheltenham Festivals, &c.

"ANCIENT MARINER" (LEICESTER).—"The bass solos were admirably interpreted by Mr. Henry Sunman. All through he sang with a polish and refinement that was superb, but in his rendering of the air 'Swiftly, swiftly flew' he fairly brought down the house."—Leicester Daily Post, January 16, 1903.

MR. F. G. H. MOORE (A.R.A.M.)

(Walter Macfarren Gold Medalist, R.A.M.).

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC FOR TEACHERS.

The next Higher Examinations of the College will be held on Tuesday, April 14, and following days. The last day of entry is March 28.

Candidates at the Easter and July Examinations this year may enter under the newly-revised scheme (Pamphlet Ca) or under the regulations issued in 1902 (Pamphlet C) at their option.

Candidates who elect to be examined under the regulations issued in 1902 (Pamphlet C) are permitted to take the paper work in the art of teaching (as included in the new scheme) without further fee.

The recommended text books on teaching are named in the regulations, which may be had, together with forms of entry and other necessary particulars, on application.

The Examination in the Art of Teaching is also open to all present holders of Diplomas and Higher Certificates on payment of an Examination Fee of One Guinea.

The next Local Examinations in MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE will be held throughout the United Kingdom on June 27. Last day of entry, May 27.

The forthcoming Local Examinations in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC take place in March, May, June, and July, at the various Centres throughout the United Kingdom, and include Pianoforte and Organ Playing, Solo Singing, and Violin Playing. These Examinations are conducted in three Divisions; but in Pianoforte and Violin Playing there is also a Preparatory Examination.

TRINITY TERM begins April 27.

Two SCHOLARSHIPS of the respective annual value of £80 and £40 each, tenable for three years, and Two EXHIBITIONS, each tenable for one year, will be open for competition in July next.

Classes Prospectus, including that for the Junior School and the revised regulations for Scholarships, and Examinations Syllabuses, may be had from the undersigned.

HYMN TUNES AND LITANIES

COMPOSED BY

REV. J. B. DYKES, Mus. Doc.

COLLECTED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

INCLUDING

MANY HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

The Rev. J. B. Dykes was well known to most people as a writer of beautiful hymn-tunes, but it will come as a surprise to some to find that he had written such a large number as this volume contains.

On looking through the book one is struck by the many tunes that are known and loved by all religious-minded persons—tunes so successfully wedded to the words, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get on without them. . . . They are "on the lips of thousands," and are associated with the most solemn moments of life. But because Dr. Dykes was happy in expressing emotions in a way that was intelligible to the masses, we must not overlook the real difficulty and merit of discovering a musical way to the hearts of men—for not every great composer has been successful with hymn-tunes.

The world is richer for Dr. Dykes's music, and his memory deserves to be loved and honoured by all those who, like himself, strive to follow in the footsteps of the Divine Master.

W. G. McNAUGHT.

The art of music provides various outlets for the skill of those who practise it. 'One soweth, and another reapeth' is a true saying that finds appropriate application in this particular field. It is impossible to over-estimate the importance of tilling the ground—in other words, educating the children in a love of music. No thoughtful person will belittle the productive furrow of the popularizing of music in factory and workshop, by which lives are brightened and the art gains earnest-minded disciples. These thoughts are suggested in setting forth some incidents in the life of a man who has pre-eminently distinguished himself in his devotion to school music and the educational work of choral training and musical competitions, who deserves well of his fellow men, and who worthily finds a place in this series of Biographical Sketches.

William Gray McNaught was born at Mile End, London, March 30, 1849. His father, Donald McNaught, possessed the racial ardour and energy characteristic of the Highlander born. His taste for the great masters of literature and his early experiences and life of adventure in various parts of the world made him a welcome guest wherever wit, sentiment, anecdote and song were appreciated. He had a voice of fine quality and range. In his younger days he was a gifted exponent of old Jacobite songs, and his mental store of old ballads—some of which had not attained the dignity of print—was unique. Young McNaught received his education at a private school, where he became initiated into the ins-and-outs of the Tonic Sol-fa notation. He sang as an alto in the great choral concerts given by the Tonic Sol-fa Association at the Crystal Palace.

As a youth he was exceedingly fortunate in coming under the influence of such enthusiastic disciples of Bach as the late Miss Elizabeth Stirling and Mr. Andrew Ashcroft, now a veteran lover of music. Mr. Ashcroft kindly sends the following recollections of his young friend and protégé:—

I remember that McNaught as a boy sang the alto part of 'They loathed to drink of the river' (from 'Israel') at first sight. He worked in my choir after his voice had broken, and I subsequently encouraged him to take up music professionally. To this end I gave him such openings as I could for conducting, teaching, &c., and he has been good enough to say in public that he owed everything to me in the success he attained in the early stages of his career. But as anyone can see, this is only very partially true. It was his own industry, thoroughness, ability, and character that carried him through the not inconsiderable difficulties which met him from time to time.

Self-help has been an important factor in the life-work of W. G. McNaught. Who can over-estimate its value? At the age of sixteen he and his friend Alexander B. W. Kennedy—now Dr. Kennedy, F.R.S., and one of the greatest authorities on electrical engineering in this country, but still an active amateur musician—set to work to learn the violin by themselves. Although unaided in their early studies, they so far succeeded that they themselves began to teach the instrument in classes formed in different parts of London—one rendezvous being in a thoroughfare suggestive of Biblical music—King David Lane, Shadwell. They paid four or five shillings a week for the rent of any odd workshop they could hire for their violin-teaching propaganda, and the rough music-stands and paraffin-oil lamps were quite in harmony with their limited means. No charge was made for the lessons given—thus music was disseminated purely for the love and enjoyment of the thing. The eagerness of these two young fellows to impart the knowledge they had so diligently self-acquired is worthy of all emulation.

At this time—etat. 16—there were no indications of a professional career. Upon leaving school young McNaught entered the office of Mr. Tate, the eldest son of the late Sir Henry Tate, Bart., of picture-gallery-munificence fame, in order to learn the intricacies of the coffee trade. But it soon became evident to both employer and employed that the latter had more taste for music than coffee, the art being to him, in the words of Polyphemus, 'sweeter than the berry.' He soon made his mark as a member of the Ashcroft-Evans choir—a flourishing organization meeting at Stepney. He stepped from its ranks into the conductorship of an instrumental band connected therewith, a body of players prone to give 'lively selections of music.' When barely out of his teens he conducted performances of oratorios ('Judas Maccabæus,' &c.) at Finsbury Chapel, the Bow and Bromley Institute, and elsewhere. The conductorship of a concert entirely devoted to Madrigals furnishes proof of the eclecticism of his tastes and capabilities even in those early days. With an economy quite in keeping with his Highland descent he sang the chief baritone part in Lahee's cantata 'The Building of the Ship' in addition to wielding the baton; indeed, at this time he frequently appeared as a solo vocalist at concerts.

In 1868 he obtained a first-class certificate in musical theory given by the Society of Arts, John Hullah being the examiner, and three years later he also gained a small prize given by this Society, and awarded by G. A. Macfarren, for an 'Elementary Musical Composition.' Little did he then think that he would become an examiner himself for the Society of Arts, a post he now holds. At the end of 1871 he bade farewell to Mincing Lane and coffee, and in January, 1872, entered the Royal Academy of Music in order to further qualify himself for the profession of music. Before, however, relating some of his experiences at Tenterden Street, reference must be made to the many hours he spent at the British Museum reading treatises on music, and devouring the philosophical and scientific writings of Herbert Spencer, Charles Darwin, and others. The reading of brainy literature has always had a very strong fascination for him, the philosophical bent of his mind finding a perennial well-spring of refreshment in such literary excursions. He acted as amanuensis to the late John Curwen for a year or two during the period of his writing some of the chief of those educational treatises which are associated with the practical founder of the Tonic Sol-fa system. 'I was deeply impressed,' he says, 'with Curwen's penetration into the core of things, and his sane and luminous literary expression of his ideas. In dictating or criticising an explanation he would say: "It must be made quite clear to the ill-educated and unaided student in the village."' Dr. McNaught was for many years the Professor of Music in Homerton Training College, a post which connected him with the Education Department. His equipment in music, like that of many other men who have made their mark, was influenced by attending the Monday Popular and Crystal Palace Concerts, the audiences of which included no one more interested and observant than W. G. McNaught; and he is not alone in paying a very high tribute to the value of these educational agencies and to the priceless possession of knowledge of the finest music thus acquired.

To return to the Royal Academy of Music. He took up four subjects! 'Too many,' he says, 'master of none.' He studied under Sir G. A. Macfarren (harmony), William Foulkes (violin), F. R. Cox (singing), and Thomas Wingham (pianoforte). His recollections of Macfarren may be told in his own words:—

'After the obfuscations resulting from a gloomy endeavour to reconcile and assimilate counterpoint according to Cherubini, Albrechtsberger and others, the clearness of Macfarren's contrapuntal rules with all their artificiality was a welcome relief. It was so possible to understand and remember what one might and might not do even though the must-nots often sounded better than some of the mights. As no book on Macfarren's counterpoint existed at that time, I tabulated the rules and examples for my own use, and afterwards asked Macfarren whether I might read a paper on his system to a certain society and later on publish it. With characteristic kindness he offered to hear me read my manuscript, and he consented to its publication on condition that I stated that the system was his, in case when he himself issued a book it might not be thought that he plagiarised from me!'

Of his pianoforte professor, he says:—

'Thomas Wingham, a musician of great promise, was my pianoforte teacher. He had a charming personality which endeared him very much to those privileged to enjoy his friendship and confidence. Our intercourse sadly interfered with the pianoforte lessons. But it was well understood that we both preferred to discuss some absorbing topic, rather than that I should play Beethoven's Sonatas (with impromptu revised texts!) which he set me to learn with a fine disregard for my technical capacity. My friendship with him dated from the time before he embraced Roman Catholicism, and while he was organist at Bickley Church and in the throes preceding the momentous decision. His early death was deeply lamented by all who knew him, and by no one more than myself.'

While in this reminiscent mood he recalls his friendship with another distinguished 'old boy' of Tenterden Street in these terms:—

'Among those with whom my work has associated me I gladly reckon Mr. Edward German. When I abandoned teaching the violin I was fortunate in being able to induce so excellent a violinist to take up some suburban pupils. This led to his playing first violin in a private orchestral band which I conducted for many years. I well remember how the otherwise tedious journeys home were enlivened by various discussions. One topic was whether there was a career for him as a composer. In view of what has happened since, I feel that I showed a sad lack of foresight in cold-watering the idea. Other discussions revealed a vein of awesome transcendentalism in his beliefs and experiences that may some day find vent in his music now so far from being morbid or introspective.'

McNaught played among the violins in the Academy orchestra, then conducted by John Hullah, who, by-the-way, observing his predilection for popular musical instruction, wanted him to take up his (Hullah's) system and teach the fixed Doh! At a terminal examination before a Board of Professors he had to play a violin study entirely in the second position. 'It is rather difficult to play in tune in that position,' calmly remarked Sterndale Bennett, an opinion entirely shared by the nervous subject of the remark. His pupilage at the Academy convinced him of one thing—that he was not destined to become a composer. He says: 'Would that going to academies and colleges had the same effect on the many students who think they possess creative gifts.'

His fellow-students at the Academy included Eaton Fanning, Louis Napoleon Parker (now a celebrated dramatist), W. Frye Parker and Frederic Corder. 'Corder,' he says, 'used to bring huge tomes of full scores, and I used to think of him as Full Scorder,' adding, 'my own name has so often inspired profoundly original but withal obvious puns, that I may be allowed to retaliate.' In 1878 he was elected an Associate, and in 1895 a Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music.

To his studentship period (1872-1876) at Tenterden Street—he has been a student all his life—belong some important events in his career. Early in 1873 he formed a large choir at Stepney, which was practically a continuation of the Ashcroft-Evans choir with which he had long been connected. In July of that year he led this choir to victory at the National Music Meetings held at the Crystal Palace. The judges were Barnby, Benedict and Henry Leslie. The winning of this prize (£100) was not only a feather in his cap, but greatly helped to make his name known as a successful trainer of choirs and skilful choral conductor. In the same year (1873) he became Precentor of Stepney Meeting House, an office he held for ten years. In 1874 he accepted the conductorship of the choir and orchestra and became teacher of the music classes connected with the Bow and Bromley Institute. Here for sixteen years he did splendid work. The performances reached a high standard of excellence, and under his auspices many important compositions were made known to East-end audiences. He had the good fortune to be surrounded with an earnest-minded band of workers, true lovers of music, who readily caught his own enthusiasm and masterful thoroughness. Circumstances compelled Dr. McNaught to resign the conductorship of this art-loving institution, and the genuine and widespread regret thus caused found tangible expression in a presentation on December 14, 1900, under auspices which must have been exceedingly gratifying to him. An interesting outcome of the Bow and Bromley period was his marriage, on July 31, 1878, to the accompanist of the Society, Miss Clara Weybret Waller, who will be remembered by former Academy students as an excellent pianoforte player. Their second son, William, who seems to have inherited his parents' musical gifts, has recently obtained an exhibition at Worcester College, Oxford.

Resourcefulness is one of the many useful qualities possessed by Dr. McNaught. An instance of this in regard to making his way in the world is to be found in an article he contributed to the Tonic Sol-fa Reporter of January, 1879, entitled 'How to make a connection. By a professional teacher.' Many a young professional musician starting on his bread-earning career will read the following extracts from this frank piece of autobiography with interest, and doubtless with profit:—

A young man should welcome any opening that gives scope for practice, and he need not be fastidious over remuneration. Before I ventured to make up my mind to make a profession of teaching, I taught a number of small classes in an amateur fashion, and meantime worked hard as a student. Then I started by letting some of my circle know I was willing to teach. After waiting a little time I was offered an engagement in a public elementary school in a suburban district. I found the work would consume six hours, and that after deducting expenses I should net less than five shillings. However, I did not hesitate, but threw my whole strength and knowledge into the work, with the result that I was soon able to suggest a demonstration. The schoolmaster heartily co-operated, and having influence in the district, he was successful in gathering a large number of residents. The demonstration had an excellent effect, and at the close of the meeting I was offered another engagement in a private school for ladies.

He subsequently goes on to relate one of his most amusing experiences of teaching class-singing in schools:—

Several years ago I taught in a young gentlemen's preparatory school. There were only eight pupils, and one and all were determined to thoroughly enjoy my society. These young gentlemen had not long left the comparative restraint of the nursery, and evidently regarded school as a happy hunting ground. I was simply defied, and could get scarcely a note from any of them. One boy had a remarkable faculty of making the most absurd puns, and another by dint of daily practice was able to entertain me with the most horrible and ludicrous contortions in face and body, very much appreciated by his sympathetic companions. Heavens! how those boys roared at 'taa-tai' and became apoplectic at 'tatatefe'! And the disrespectful use they made of the hand-signs! Once I weakly asked their opinions of mental effects, and had no reason to complain of diffidence or reticence, but it was long before I ventured to ask them again. Sometimes I closed the lesson with a severe moral lecture, and on one occasion when I thought I had made a profound impression, in the dead silence that followed a boy said, with great solemnity, 'Let us pray.'

The sequel to this outburst of piety was as unexpected as the solemn call to devotion, certainly no less gratifying. He says:—

Regularly I came away faint with disappointment, with self-respect damaged and a consciousness that if I did not find out some way of reaching these lads I should have to confess want of capacity for the very work I wanted to do. So I persevered, and after trying many plans, the most successful of which was singing little songs to them, I induced one or two to care for the lesson. Just then the class was broken up by withdrawals, and I heard no more of it for some time. But last year I was invited to teach in a first-class private school nearly thirty miles distant from the former school. Arrived at the station on my first visit, I was astonished to find two of my unruly boys sent to welcome me and show me the way. These boys had carried their liking for singing to their new school, and had prevailed upon the management to form a class. The headmaster of this school, a gentleman of refinement and broad culture, quickly saw the merit of our educational plans, and took the greatest interest in the class and insured its success. I was soon asked to teach in another school of the same type in the near neighbourhood, and here again have been compelled to decline to extend my connection.

School music and all that pertains to this important field of popular music instruction has entered very largely into the life work of Dr. McNaught—in fact, he is without doubt the greatest living authority on this important subject. It would be impossible to state the number of children and teachers that have passed through his hands in the many schools and institutions at which he has taught class-singing and the art of teaching. His experience in this respect is unique. For instance, quite 20,000 of the school teachers in this country have been individually examined by him in his capacity as Assistant-Inspector of Music in Training Colleges. Moreover, he has read very widely on the subject, and in 1880 he made a tour of schools in Holland and Belgium in order to see what was being done in those countries. The result of his observations appeared in a pamphlet of great interest and value.

He is a born teacher of children. Let us endeavour to record some impressions received on a recent occasion from personal observation at two of his school classes, both in Baker Street. The first is a flourishing preparatory school for boys, of which Mr. E. T. Bull is the headmaster. Class I. consists of lively young gentlemen whose bodies have an extraordinary capacity for wriggling. Dr. McNaught, however, soon gains their attention and affection with his happy combination of the suaviter in modo and the fortiter in re. He sorts the boys into divisions, A, B, C, &c., according to tune and time ability. Promotion from A to B, from B to C, &c., is the result of attainment, and is keenly sought after. His method of pitching upon individual boys while the others listen for any mistakes is very fruitful in the matter of attention. The singing of a scale omitting a certain note, or the repetition of a certain note, stimulates powers of observation, and it is quite astonishing how quickly he transforms the 'lame ducks,' as he calls them, by his methods. Class II. is formed of older boys, who in due time will be moving on to Eton, Winchester, and other great public schools. The tone produced by these thirty to forty boys is excellent. It is beautifully demonstrated in some three-part voluntaries extemporized by Dr. McNaught on the modulator, in which he himself sings the bass part; syncopations or chromatic notes introduced in his part do not disturb the boys, who sing on with evident delight and keen appreciation of the music. Mr. Bull, the headmaster above referred to, in the course of a conversation upon the influence of music teaching on the general education of the boys, says:—'The singing-lesson as given by Dr. McNaught is a real intellectual training—closeness of attention and alertness of mind are two of the most obvious results. It is scarcely possible for a lesson in any other subject to be given with such skill as to be a better mental discipline.'

The other school, of which Miss Franks is the Principal, is of the Kindergarten species. Here a class of little people, ranging in age from seven to ten, cluster round Dr. McNaught in fearless friendship. One of his methods is to get each child to sing a 'scale scrap' of three notes, he giving the Doh. A girl will be sent out of the room in order to sing a note in a certain progression or the last phrase of a song in the distance, not as a punishment, but as a privileged echoist. A specially interesting feature is a tune-making incident. Four of the little girls stand round Dr. McNaught, who sings a phrase of two bars. Girl No. 1 adds two more bars, and this antiphonal extemporization goes on till quite a pretty tune of sixteen bars is evolved. The teachers hearing these lessons are highly privileged.

Further testimony to his teaching gifts is furnished by Mr. James Gallie, of Glasgow, in these words:—

It is now close upon twenty years since, as a student at the Summer course for teachers at the Tonic Sol-fa College, I first made the personal acquaintance of Dr. (then Mr.) McNaught. He was one of the four professors who in turn conducted the Art of Teaching class for one week. This class met daily from 9 till 11 a.m., and the work consisted of specimen lessons given by the professor, criticism lessons taught by the students, and outlines of lessons as a daily written exercise. Dr. McNaught's week was always looked forward to by the students with the keenest pleasure. In it there was not a dull moment, not an instant wasted; in fact, before we sometimes realised that he had entered the class-room, he had taken up a subject left over from the previous morning, or started something new in a way that at once claimed our attention. Believing that example is better than precept, he taught a great deal himself, and, to young teachers, the advantage of seeing at work a born teacher whose powers had been strengthened by study and practice was incalculable. In all my experience I have never met a teacher who could better sustain the interest of his pupils by the force of his teaching, readiness of illustration, and complete good humour. Dr. McNaught's criticisms of the lessons taught by the students, while perfectly candid and thorough, were never calculated to dishearten, but rather to stimulate to fresh effort, and praise from him was praise indeed.

Dr. McNaught proposed the School Teacher's Music Certificate of the Tonic Sol-fa College. He is joint author with Mr. John Evans of 'The School Music Teacher,' a recognised textbook which has had a very large sale since its issue by Messrs. Curwen in July, 1888. His editorship of Novello's School Music Series, is too well known to need any eulogy. He has edited the School Music Review, the first journal ever issued in this country entirely devoted to school music, since its commencement in 1892.

His reputation for expert knowledge of school music and its requirements led the late Sir John Stainer to appoint him, in 1883, one of his Assistant Inspectors of Music in the Education Department (England and Scotland). For nearly twenty years, until after the lamented death of Sir John Stainer in 1901, Dr. McNaught served the Department with ungrudging devotion. It is an open secret that for many years he did the lion's share of the work. He was continually at the call of the authorities at Whitehall, but when the time came (in 1901) for the appointment of a new Chief Inspector he was offered a position which he did not feel able to accept, and so to the regret of a large circle, musical and scholastic, he severed his long official connection with the work. But he still gives the bulk of his time and thought to school music matters.

He speaks with warmth of his obligations to Stainer, and of the influence on his career of his close intimacy with that remarkable personality. He says: 'I owe a deep debt of gratitude to Stainer for all that he did to encourage and help me professionally. That he trusted me with so much responsibility in work connected with the Department was a great incentive to me to deserve such confidence.'

Before referring to an important sphere of Dr. McNaught's life work—adjudicating at competitions—a few biographical particulars may find a place at this point. In 1896 he received the degree of Doctor of Music from the Archbishop of Canterbury. This honour was absolutely unsought by him, its conferment being due to the influence of Sir John Stainer and Sir George Grove. The latter, by-the-way, said to him, 'I used to know your father when he conducted the Tonic Sol-fa concerts at the Crystal Palace!' The 'father' was the man—which may be taken as an unexpected tribute to the perennial youth of Dr. McNaught. Many articles and lectures have come from his pen. Chief among these are two papers read before the Musical Association, 'The History and Uses of the Sol-fa Syllables' (January 10, 1893), and 'The Psychology of Sight-singing' (December 12, 1899), with Sir John Stainer, the President, in the chair on both occasions; 'Music and Singing: their place in Education,' read at the Friends' Guild of Teachers in 1902; articles on 'Music' in 'Cassell's Popular Educator'; a series of twelve articles on 'Music in the Sunday School,' contributed to the Sunday School Chronicle during 1902; and the chapter on 'Vocal Music' in Mr. P. A. Barnett's 'Manual of Teaching and Organization in Secondary Schools.'

As an adjudicator at choral competitions Dr. McNaught is facile princeps. He has so methodised his methods, so to speak, that adjudicating is in the nature of a science when he is the judge. His thoroughness and consummate mastery of every detail may be gathered from the following specimens of his award, extracted from the printed report of a Morecambe Musical Festival:—

BLACKPOOL GLEE AND MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

Accuracy of Notes and Time.	Intonation, Quality, & Balance of Tone.	Attack Pronunciation, Enunciation.	Expression and Pace.	General Effect.	Total number of Marks.
Max. 10.	Max. 10.	Max. 10.	Max. 10.	Max. 20.	Max. 60.
a 10	10	9	10	19	58
b 10	9	9	9	19	56
c 10	10	10	10	20	60-174

(a) Tone mellow and full of beauty. Engaged the ear at once. Forté on page 4 checked rather soon. Blend rich and smooth. The altos luscious. Fortes magnificent. The whole reading was a combination of the fervour of No. 1, with the dignity and majesty of No. 2. There was breadth and reserve in the expression.

(b) Hard to find fault with a detail. Enunciation was a great virtue. Basses came out particularly well. Rhythm carried one away. It was brilliant. A point that held one spellbound was the alternation of the importance of the parts. It was orchestral in treatment.

(c) The fine, full, sweet tone at once held attention. The fortes were moving, they were very loud, yet free from noise. The resources of this choir as to tone are splendid. The delicacy of the phrasing was charming. The note of anguish was caught in the expression. A memorable performance of a beautiful piece.

No one is better able to testify to Dr. McNaught's remarkable success as an adjudicator than Canon Gorton, founder and chairman of the Morecambe Musical Festival, who, in response to our request, writes as follows:—

It is dangerous to pass a judgment on a judge, but it is not dangerous to state that Dr. McNaught is the prince of judges. For six years he has acted as an adjudicator at the Morecambe Festival. On some occasions he has acted as sole adjudicator, on other occasions he has shared the duties with Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir John Stainer, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie. These notable musicians were among the first to recognise his supreme fitness for the post.

First, he is capable of standing a full day's hard work, his attention never flags—his interest never wearies. Secondly, from the moment he enters his lofty seat he is the centre of attraction. His criticisms are awaited with interest. He never hesitates for a phrase. He can express any shade of praise or blame with the right epithet.

He takes the audience into his confidence—he may amuse, but he never wounds. With children he is inimitable; blest himself with goodly stature, the tinier the tot, the more consideration the little one receives. He is above all an educationalist, and one who has seen him rehearse 200 children in a cantata will not forget his display of how to win attention, and how to make a rehearsal a delight.

The competition under his guidance becomes a school, and the report and remarks which he writes are of such value from an educational point of view, that we yearly publish them complete, and choirmasters are thankful to obtain these annual reports as a guide for future progress.

I well remember meeting the late Sir John Stainer at the railway station, when in his kindness of heart he came to Morecambe to taste of our quality. He spoke of his dear friend McNaught. How he spared him (Sir John) all worry, and made his work a pleasure; how he looked forward to his succeeding him in his work of Chief Inspector; how, but for his aid, he would have years since relinquished the work; and he added, you will find he has many gifts, but his most notable gift is 'he is so upright.'

Mr. Herbert Whittaker, conductor of the famous Blackpool choir, also writes in response to our request:—

There are adjudicators and adjudicators. Dr. McNaught has been well described as the one really expert judge at musical competitions, and members of choirs are not slow to acknowledge such pre-eminence, recognising, as they do, his most intimate acquaintance with the various test-pieces. The genial, breezy manner in which his remarks and awards are delivered, no less than his admirably methodical summing-up of the merits or demerits of a performance, endear him to competitors and audience alike.

Possessed of a nimble wit, he is able at all times to say things necessary to be said—not always of a complimentary nature—in a manner all his own, usually administering his pills of criticism with a taste of jam thereby taking away the bitterness without impairing the efficacy of his remarks.

I have no hesitation in saying that the competitions of Lancashire and Yorkshire are to a large extent the cause of the high standard of choral singing which obtains throughout the two counties among the smaller choirs of thirty-five to fifty voices, and that these results are felt in the larger choruses and choral societies in the general uplifting of choral technique.

In this connection reference must be made to a capital pamphlet entitled, 'Hints on Choir Training for Conductors and Choralists' (Novello), to which Mr. Randegger, in adjudicating at a Welsh Eisteddfod in 1897, paid the following tribute:—

In order that his adjudication that day might be as fair as possible, he would not rely entirely upon his own long personal experience as a choir-trainer and conductor, but he availed himself of many valuable suggestions which he had met with in a small pamphlet written by Dr. W. G. McNaught, whose name and authority they were all, no doubt, familiar with. He would advise every conductor to get that little pamphlet and read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest its contents.

As to the influence—musical and social—of music competitions, Dr. McNaught, from his unique experience and observation, may speak for himself:—

‘The musical festivals of the educational and competitive type which are now spreading all over the country are a healthy, important and pregnant factor in popular musical progress. They provide teachers, conductors, choralists, and others interested with object lessons and ideals of execution not otherwise readily obtainable. They are a great school of music for the people, and especially for choral conductors and choralists. What an inspiration to a village or a country-town choir is the feeling that they are preparing to face many other choirs and the judgment of an expert, and that instead of being an obscure and isolated item they are to be welcomed as contributors to an important social and musical function!’

‘It is not only that the inefficient learn through criticism and listening, but that the highly skilful trainer of the first-rate choir finds an exceptionally responsive and appreciative audience before which to exhibit with legitimate pride the artistic results of diligent endeavour. In many places competitions have created quite a school of scientific training where no idea of such a science previously existed. One of the most valuable results of the movement is that hundreds of choral societies have been given a motive for the practice of beautiful old and new unaccompanied music, in which form many gifted composers have embodied some of their choicest thoughts.’

Judge McNaught's Circuit this year includes the following places: Workington, Northampton, Carlisle, Kendal, Spilsby, Morecambe, York, Pontefract, Manchester and Blackpool, in addition to four adjudications in London.

We ask Dr. McNaught's opinion upon Tonic Sol-fa. In reply he says:—

‘The vitality of Tonic Sol-fa is a measure of its utility. Its first principle—the presentation of tonic relations—is impregnable. No doubt it is inconvenient to have two notations of music. Yet it is plain that the convenience of tonic sol-fa outweighs its inconvenience, for otherwise it would have died a natural death long ago. It has been as cordially cursed as was the thief in “The Jackdaw of Rheims,” and with a similar disproportionate result. School teachers, innumerable educationists, and social and religious workers have caught faint echoes of the malediction, but with serene opacity have gone on as before, conscious that they have a good thing which just suits their purpose.

‘It is sometimes suggested that teachers use tonic sol-fa because they are unacquainted with the staff. This may be true in some cases, but it is quite certain that many of the best teachers and choral conductors in the kingdom use tonic sol-fa because they do know the staff and its difficulties. All the best so-called “tonic sol-faists” are also staff notationists. The system glides into the staff at every stage.

‘The only way to get rid of tonic sol-fa is to supply something better. Whether any new method of dealing with an unreformed staff notation will be that something better is very doubtful.

‘From an ideal standpoint the most vulnerable feature of the tonic sol-fa and all other movable doh systems is the fault of the very virtue which is the secret of their success, namely, dependence upon syllabic association—the welding of name and effect. If notational symbols could be made to conjure up sounds in the ordinary mind (as they do now in the minds of a few comparatively) as freely and as naturally as they are found to do under syllabic association, all sol-fa systems would be redundant. The problem is mainly psychological rather than representational. A method of teaching that will incisively impress sound and sign without the necessity of the thought of an intervening name must be discovered. In the meantime the syllabic association principle holds the field because it is the best discovered adaptation to existing average receptivity. And it will continue to occupy this position until that receptivity is increased, which will be when the leopard changes his spots.

‘The attitude of tonic sol-faists as a body has become passive. There is now no strenuous advocacy, no missionary zeal. Meanwhile, what is happening? Opponents, or one might almost describe them as converts, are sedulously preaching that sight-singing salvation is to be found only by learning systems which reproduce tonic sol-fa methods and require the pupil to translate the staff symbols into sol-fa names. So while tonic sol-faists are bathing in a lethal stream, their clothes are being stolen. But it may perhaps be said that after all these clothes were old garments neatly repaired. The system in the course of its evolution annexed everything it found to be good. The present agreement as to methods of teaching musical facts in connection with either notation is all to the good, inasmuch as it makes for unity and, it may be hoped, for peace. The lion lies down with the lamb—inside—and the lamb enlarges its environment.’

Lastly, the personality of the subject of this sketch. Strenuousness, ceaseless energy, and tremendous capacity for hard work he possesses in a very marked degree. To these must be added his thoroughness, mental grasp of things, his all-round musicianship resulting from natural endowment, and an experience as wide as it is varied. To those who judge character by the handwriting, Dr. McNaught might be classed a peculiar man, but those who know him otherwise than from a caligraphic point of view will bear testimony to his genuine friendship, geniality, and kind-heartedness.

Like not a few successful men, he has the saving grace of humour, and he dearly likes to play his little jokes upon his friends. Here is an instance, which may fitly conclude this inadequate sketch of an exceedingly interesting man. During the tour of inspection of Training Colleges for the Board of Education two years ago, the two Assistant Inspectors were examining the students at a certain College. Confidential notes occasionally passed between the rooms wherein the examiners were pursuing their pleasant avocations, or their torture-tests, as some of the students regarded the business. One day a young lady student smilingly brought a brief missive from Dr. McNaught, the Senior Assistant Inspector, to his colleague, the writer of this biographical sketch. It was couched in these terms:—

Have you ever heard one of the most perfect songs ever written—Schumann's 'Du bist wie eine Blume'—fit for Paradise! I am asking Miss — to sing it to you, in case you never get to Paradise!

THE FITZWILLIAM MUSEUM, CAMBRIDGE.

I.

A period of more than two hundred years separates the two great gifts to the sister Universities of Oxford and Cambridge—the Bodleian Library and the Fitzwilliam Museum. Six months before his death, Richard, Viscount Fitzwilliam, a bachelor, signed the will by which he bequeathed to the University of Cambridge his pictures, engravings, books, and other collections, together with New South Sea Annuities to the value of £100,000. From the proceeds of the last-named item in Lord Fitzwilliam's will a suitable building was to be erected for the preservation of the other precious treasures. The collections arrived at Cambridge shortly after the Viscount's death, which occurred on February 5, 1816, but for the next thirty-two years they were deposited first in the Perse School (until 1842) and then in the University Library until 1848, when the Museum, built at a total cost of £115,000, became available for their reception.

The building, of which we give a photograph, is familiar to every visitor to Cambridge. Erected from the designs of three successive architects,—Basevi, Cockerell and Barry—the first stone was laid November 2, 1837, and the main building was opened in 1848. Its magnificent entrance hall, however, designed by E. M. Barry, R.A., was not completed and decorated till 1875. Various marbles, Siena, Devonshire, and green (Genoa) are used in this imposing vestibule. The doorway into the central gallery is ornamented with two caryatides of white marble bearing a rich alabaster cornice, above which are the arms and supporters of Viscount Fitzwilliam. This portal is an exquisite study in marble.

In an article in which music must perforce predominate, only a limited space can be given to the pictures and other treasures within these walls.

Here one may see twenty-five Turner drawings, presented by John Ruskin; and probably the earliest recorded picture by Murillo. Fine specimens of Rembrandt, Palma Vecchio, Paul Veronese and Titian. The English School is represented by Cooper, Hogarth, Gainsborough, Morland, Linton, Watts, Richmond, Horsley, Herkomer and Millais. There are a number of drawings by Romney, and three important water-colours by William Blake of the story of Joseph. In respect of engravings the Museum is very strong in Rembrandts, the collection being the fourth in order of merit. Albert Durer and the early German masters are also well represented. Busts of Handel, Beethoven and Napoleon—a beautiful early bust of the time of Marengo—find a place. The Museum contains two portraits of the composer of the 'Messiah'—one by Sir James Thornhill, the other by Giuseppe Grisoni, on the authority of Mr. Sidney Colvin, and not by Graffoni, as stated by all the biographers of Handel; the second of these portraits we reproduce. The Leake collection of Greek coins and engraved gems, vases and bronzes is of supreme interest, and the Vase room contains many specimens of exquisite beauty. The large collection of Roman, continental and English coins has lately been added to by the Rev. W. G. Searle in the presentation of his collection numbering 12,000 specimens. The Egyptian collection has grown much of late years. Here the cover of the sarcophagus which contained the mummified remains of Ramesses III. will satisfy the aspirations of the keenest of antiquaries, as this king of Egypt reigned B.C. 1200. A mummy case of a priest named Hor bears upon it the following negative confession: 'I have not committed such and such sins.' The Museum of Classical Archæology, in Little St. Mary's Lane, built out of the Fitzwilliam funds, is under the same management. It contains a large collection of casts of Greek sculpture, and a special illustrative library.

We may now turn to the books. First the illuminated manuscripts, a speciality of the Fitzwilliam Museum, in which the learned Director, Dr. M. R. James, takes a keen interest. From the collection of upwards of 250 volumes of this rich store of Horæ (or Books of Hours), Bibles, Service Books, Antiphoners, &c.,

Missale ad usum Curiae Romanae. Italian manuscript of early 15th century. The pictorial decorations of this book are of the finest sort, and unite the beauty of Italian colouring with the delicacy of finish that characterises a northern hand. This volume, containing nearly 300 folios, was evidently written for a cardinal bishop, whose effigy and arms appear in various parts of it. (30.)

Horæ. 15th century. A MS. written for Isabel Stuart, daughter of James I. of Scotland. The pictorial decorations are more profuse than in any other in the collection; there are no fewer than 528 figured subjects! (62.)

the following specimens may be specially mentioned. (The numbers at the end of each description refer to Dr. James's invaluable catalogue.*)

English Psalter of the 13th century. This beautiful manuscript contains work of the finest kind and of the best period of Anglo-French work. (12.)

Pontifical. Milanese. 15th century. The quality of the illumination is extraordinarily fine; the touch most delicate, the colouring beyond praise. Dr. James classes it as 'probably the most beautiful MS. in the collection.' (28.)

the kingdom. Bach is represented by the autograph score, in a fine state of preservation, of his Church Cantata 'Mache dich, mein Geist, bereit,' presented to the Museum by Mr. Sedley Taylor. This work, written for the twenty-second Sunday after Trinity, is one of the thirty-five cantatas in which, according to Spitta, 'the most beautiful and the best known of Protestant chorales of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries is subjected to elaborate musical treatment.' Here is also to be found an interesting Beethoven sketch, showing the great master's method of working. The leaf gives on one side part of the second subject in the last movement of his pianoforte sonata in C sharp minor (Op. 27, No. 2), known as the 'Moonlight,' and on the reverse a sketch of No. 5 of the 'Seven Bagatelles.' We give, by special permission, a facsimile reproduction, full size, of the Sonata sketch; it forms one of our extra supplements.

Coming to later times, we find an autograph of Haydn's, the manuscript score of his Symphony in F, composed in 1787. It is known as 'Letter W,' and begins:—

This manuscript, signed 'di me Giuseppe Haydn,' with the words 'Fine-Laus Deo' at the end, bears the following interesting information—not stated, by-the-way, in the printed catalogue—'Given to Miss Emily Gregg by J. B. Cramer.' Doubtless Haydn presented the score to the famous pianist during one of the former's visits to London in 1791 and 1794. This symphony does not seem to have been performed by the Philharmonic Society.

Here too is the remarkable volume of Virginal Music, for a long time erroneously known as 'Queen Elizabeth's Virginal Book.' This most valuable collection of English 17th century instrumental music has been so often described that only brief reference thereto is necessary.* To quote from the Catalogue of the Music, compiled by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland and Dr. A. H. Mann: 'The music is contained in a small folio volume consisting of 220 folios of paper ruled by hand for music in six-line staves, 209 of which are filled with music written in a small but distinct handwriting.' The 290 pieces are by various English composers, including such distinguished names as Dr. John Bull, William Byrd, Giles and Richard Farnaby, Orlando Gibbons, Thomas Morley, John Munday, Thomas Tallis and others of the period. Some of the titles are very quaint:—

* See THE MUSICAL TIMES, February, 1900, p. 90, for a review article, with a facsimile page of the manuscript, on the printed edition of the book, edited by Messrs. J. A. Fuller Maitland and W. Barclay Squire and issued by Messrs. Breitkopf and Haertel.

The earnestness of Dr. Boyce in making himself acquainted with the madrigals and motets of Italian composers is evidenced by two volumes of his handwriting. Among the compositions contained therein is a Te Deum (with orchestra) by Buononcini, Handel's rival. These two books were bought at the sale of Boyce's library in April, 1779, by Dr. Bever for fourteen guineas; nineteen years later they became the property of Viscount Fitzwilliam. A particularly attractive collection is a volume of English anthems in the handwriting of Henry Purcell, which in 1728 belonged to Bernard Gates. On the first page is written 'Table of all the anthems contain'd in this book. Sep. ye 13th, Anno Domini, 1673.' No fewer than forty-three anthems by various composers find a place in this interesting possession. Lord Fitzwilliam's love of music is shown in some volumes of exercises written by his Lordship when he was taking lessons from John Keeble, organist of St. George's Church, Hanover Square, at the time when Handel was a worshipper in that sanctuary. Keeble not only instructed Lord Fitzwilliam in music, but did excellent work collecting music for his distinguished pupil. An oblong volume of motets by Steffani—a composer not unknown to Handel, and to whom special reference was made in the article on the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace—next claims attention. These motets are said to be the only known autograph scores of Steffani's in existence. One of them, dated November, 1673, is a Laudate Pueri for nine voices, divided into two choirs, S.S.A.T.B., and S.A.T.B. The part-writing and massive effects are very striking, and a remarkable bass passage may be quoted:—

In a book of harpsichord music is the autograph of a movement in B flat by Joseph Kelway (died 1782), entitled 'St. Martin's Lane.' The title of this piece raises the question: 'Should not a list be compiled of the compositions suggested by and called after streets and places in London?' We make a present of this suggestion to some enthusiastic antiquary. Domenico Paradies and Stradella are well represented—the former by operas, songs, symphonies, concertos, &c., in score (autograph); the latter by a volume of fourteen soprano songs, bound in white vellum and stamped with the arms of a cardinal (a double-headed eagle, crowned) in gold, and other works, including an oratorio 'San Giovanni Battista.' The industry of Dr. Blow is revealed in a portly tome wherein that worthy musician has copied many services and anthems—the former starting at one end of the book and the latter at the reverse. In addition to Dr. Blow, former owners appear to have been Dr. Philip Hayes and Dr. Arnold till it came into Lord Fitzwilliam's possession in 1803. A Sanctus (four parts) is inscribed 'Holy to Dr. Child in E la mi sharp.' A note to Dr. Blow's own anthem, scored for orchestra, 'O give thanks' reads thus: 'This anthem is sung some part in the singing loft and some part below in the quire.' The date 'July 18, 1683,' in the body of the book gives some clue as to the time of Dr. Blow's great task in transcribing all these anthems and services. He lived in leisurely times. Dr. Blow's musical caligraphy is to be found in yet another volume which contains an anthem by William Tucker, a setting of the words 'I will love Thee,' and designated 'Thanksgiving anthem for forcing the lines.' Mr. Fuller Maitland suggests that this composition was intended to commemorate the naval victory of 1665. On that pugnacious occasion the Duke of York defeated the Dutch fleet off Harwich, and Opdam, the Dutch admiral, was blown up and all his crew!

HANDEL.

(From the portrait by Giuseppe Grisoni, in the Fitzwilliam Museum. Reproduced by special permission of the Director, Dr. M. R. James.)

A volume of sacred compositions in score by Leonardo Leo (1694—1746) contains the autograph of his 'Dixit Dominus,' for double chorus, soli, and orchestra. It is signed 'Leo Orig^{le}, suo proprio.' This noble setting of Psalm 110 was performed by the Cambridge University Musical Society in 1879, during the memorable conductorship of the Society by Sir Charles Stanford, who edited the published score of the old Italian composer's manuscript. Those who heard Leo's 'Dixit Dominus' at the Hereford Musical Festival of 1900 will not easily forget the impression made by the performance of that vigorous and melodious work.

The consideration of some remaining features of the Fitzwilliam—including the important collection of Handel manuscripts—must be deferred till next month.

A CHORAL CONCERTO.

In the library of the British Museum is a thin quarto volume of thirty-seven folios, entirely in the handwriting of Handel. This interesting manuscript forms part of the library of King George III., presented to the nation by George IV. In all probability this particular volume (Geo. III. MSS. 317) became detached from the Handel collection of manuscripts in the Royal Music Library of Buckingham Palace.

The book contains the autograph scores of Handel's Organ Concertos Nos. 2, 3, and 4 of the first set. Its most interesting feature, however, is the Fourth Concerto, in which its last movement leads without break into a chorus! This chorus, set entirely to the word Alleluja, bears at the end the following inscription in the composer's dignified characters:—

G F H
March 25
1735.

The chorus, fifty-seven bars long and founded on the preceding movement of the concerto, begins thus:—

In the course of the exposition the octave figure appears—e.g., at the entry of the bass voices:—

So far as we can discover, this concerto has never been published with its original choral ending. John Walsh the younger issued the 'Six Concertos' on October 4, 1738. This original printed edition contained the following note:—

These Six Concertos were Publish'd by Mr. Walsh from my own Copy corrected by my Self, and to Him only I have given my Right therein.

GEORGE FRIDERIC HANDEL.

To return to the MS., Bars 103 and 104 (the third and fourth from the end of the published version) stand thus:—

Handel has crossed through the first bar of the above, and substituted, lower down the page, the three bars which conclude the printed version with which we are familiar, that is, without the choral termination.

It would seem as if former writers on Handel have not bestowed sufficient attention upon this interesting manuscript. Rockstro, in his 'Life of Handel' (p. 336, foot-note), gives the contents of the volume as consisting of four separate compositions, instead of three, by counting the chorus under consideration as an independent work; but it is perfectly clear that this Hallelujah Chorus forms an integral and important part of the Organ Concerto in F, No. 4.

The conducting score of 'Il Trionfo del Tempo, e della Verità' contains, among other annotations, the following note:—

Segue | il Concerto | per l'Organo | & poi
l'Alleluja | Fine dell' Oratorio | G. F. Handel |
London March 14 | 1737.

Therefore we may conclude that Handel made use of the choral ending when he performed the concerto. One such occasion was doubtless the revival of the above early Italian serenata at Covent Garden in the spring of 1737. He subsequently made use of the chorus as the final movement of 'The Triumph of Time and Truth.'

The late Sir George Grove was doubtless unaware of the nature of the above Handel MS., as in his analysis of Beethoven's Choral Fantasia—really a Choral Concerto—he says: 'It is apparently the first composition in this form and may be considered as a kind of attempt or "offer" at the Choral Symphony.' But Handel has anticipated Beethoven, and we venture to think in a very interesting, original and highly ingenious manner.

We are glad to be able to state that this Choral Concerto of Handel will be performed at the approaching Handel Festival—on the Selection Day, June 25—at the Crystal Palace, and that the solo part will be played by Sir Walter Parratt. In a letter we have just received from Mr. August Manns, the veteran conductor says: 'I promise myself a great treat from the performance of this concerto in its original form—a treat which will be enhanced by Sir Walter Parratt taking the immortal master's place as solo organist.'

ONOMATOPŒIA IN MUSIC.

The word onomatopœia has a somewhat gruesome sound; it calls up schooldays when such expressions as 'hendecasyllable,' 'equation to the ellipse,' 'dynamics of a particle,' or even (to leave the polyphony of scientific language) so simple a word as 'surds,' aroused the indignation of the youthful brain and provoked rebellion, with a sort of passionate desire never to enter upon a further acquaintance with matters that must be expressed with so difficult an effort of articulation, with so hateful an appeal to classic origins. And yet to any student who persevered in pursuing to a conclusion the various matters which were involved in such terms as these, the pride of the backward look upon that which now had undergone a transformation into a perfectly simple issue insisted upon retaining the difficult and staggering name which had before come so near to a prohibition. Thus it is that the grand element of—I should dearly like to call it "spoof," but it would perhaps be more dignified to call it—verbal deception, enters largely into the education of youth. One is reminded of all the fairy-tales in the world which culminated in Wagner's 'Siegfried.' Obstacles quite easy to overcome, but apparently bristling with difficulty, from the slaughter of the dragon to the conquest of the fire, are hurled into the way of life; and it is Faintheart who never enters upon the inheritance of the Captains Courageous. Let then the title of this article be explained in all its naked simplicity.

In literature onomatopœia implies a relation in the conventional sound of the words used to the actual sound produced by the thing described. When Homer wrote—I set down the words in English characters—of the 'poluphloisboio thalasses' he attempted surely to indicate the long roll and swell of the sea that finally curves into the waves that swish into foam as the crests break on the curl and hiss with the rebellion of ten thousand creamy water-drops. When Shakespeare wrote 'immortal longings,' he leaned upon the words as though he would have assassinated time. That very word, assassin—which comes to us from that forbidding tribe of murderers which took in the East a name that has awful associations—possesses, if you linger over it with a sense of its grimness, the true onomatopœic quality. Surely Tennyson's 'hush'd seraglios' is almost visionary in the mere pronunciation of the words; and though I have not the remotest, the most distant idea of the meaning of Swinburne's 'Out of the golden, remote wild West where the sea without shore is,' I feel intensely the idea of distance which the dreamy sound of the words conveys. It might almost make an artist's heart break to think that the man who could produce a similar effect out of pure sound from the lines—

Where the sea-egg flames on the coral, and the long-backed breakers croon
Their endless ocean legend to the lazy locked lagoon—should be capable of sending out over his name—I wonder how many readers guess what words I am about to write?—"The Absent-Minded Beggar." Surely one may say, parodying Johnson on Burke, that he 'to the banjo gave up what was meant for the Muse.'

When we come to consider the subject of onomatopœia, as applied to music, it may be said at the outset that—to one who should consider the matter superficially—music, far more than literature, lends itself to the reproduction, through artistic means, of the natural noises of the world. And yet the fact is so obvious that it would appear that for this very reason musicians have, to a large extent, refused to avail themselves of their opportunities, and have secluded themselves from any suspicion of natural imitation. So to do became a point of honour. Grave treatises were written to prove that mimicry of sound was not good musical art. Beethoven's transgressions were by certain contemporaries sorrowfully pointed to as signs of the degeneration of art: and even in quite recent times sound thinkers on the subject have striven to prove the naughtiness of onomatopœia in music—they call it realism. And their theory had this justification for it, that all the lesser men who had nothing to say, and said it very prettily, desired naturally to make a stereotyped thing of their art. For such a reason they raised form to the position of being so exclusive a divinity that the student felt more and more the necessity of retiring from Nature and living entirely by rule. It is amazing to observe how, in the long run, the Kapellmeister has his way. Every now and then some brute convulsion of Nature, in the shape of an original artist, will scatter him and overwhelm him as Vesuvius scattered and overwhelmed the coherence of Pompeii; and yet he will return; he will—one may be pardoned the Latinity of the phrase—resume the labours of the great man that had sought his destruction, and will proceed, out of that very source, to formulate new rules and new definitions for future students—rules and definitions which are destined to become again the prey of some later giant brain.

For reasons such as these there are whole chapters of musicians who have, despite their own rare art, avoided onomatopœia with shuddering horror. Perhaps the greatest of the elder musicians who shamelessly espoused its discipleship was our own Henry Purcell. To him the thing was a source both of inspiration and, let it joyously be written, of extreme amusement. In such a song as 'Ye twice ten thousand Deities' he revels in the idea of repeating the actual and vital sounds of the words rather than of making a sort of backward translation of them into formal and solemn phrases. The Frost passage in 'King Arthur' is another instance of his in point, in which he attempts the same thing by actually instructing the vocalist to sing throughout in persistent tremolo, in order to feint the feeling of cold which he intended to realize. Dear old Haydn, ever young—though it is impossible to resist calling him 'old Haydn'—seems in an extremity of delight when he can secure an onomatopœic effect like that of the serpent in 'The Creation.' You can almost imagine that the winding of the notes as they lay upon his score-paper pleased his simple soul, seduced by the serpentine thought of musical onomatopœia. Handel was not particularly notable for an onomatopœic tendency. The fact was that he had very little of what may be called the objective instinct indeed; and it would be difficult to name any well-known example in which he has directly and deliberately gone to external sound for immediate imitation. The famous 'Hailstone Chorus' is certainly one such instance; and I am not sure that the infinitely pathetic intervals written for the words 'no sun, no moon,' in that most poignant of airs 'Total Eclipse'—which he himself could never hear in the days of his blindness without tears—may not be regarded as an instance of onomatopœia, in which the cry of one agonized has been literally set down upon the staves of the music-paper. Beethoven, however, as has been already suggested, in that majestic manner of his which, when he pleased, brushed aside every convention, every hard and fast rule which interfered with the expression of his personality, took the cuckoo out of the skies and quietly imprisoned him within the bars of the cage of his Pastoral Symphony—bars, it may be explained—but why explain a jest? Mozart, on the other hand, absolute musician as he was, very rarely indulged in realism of that kind; he seemed, in the child's phrase—a phrase expressive, significant, possibly audacious in a mood of serious meditation—to cuddle his art; liberal as it was, he was not in the habit of freeing it to every wind that blew; he was not prepared to call in even Nature as his confidential adviser. His great ancestor in Art, before whom Mozart himself stood astonished as he contemplated the mute scores—mute in appearance, but with full-strung music at their heart—Johann Sebastian Bach, very seldom indulged in the device of which I speak. Bach too was like some prophet who, turning from the hum and the enormous tangle of the actual world, from the little bells, the tinkling cymbals, the common appeal of daily cries, the everyday insistence of the sound of streets, stood with his face toward the summit of Sinai, and won therefrom the Tables of the Law; for in a sense he was a law-giver.

On the other hand, consider the case of Richard Wagner. Magnificent artist as he was, he did not disdain the effectiveness of onomatopœia in music; his face was turned ever towards the heights, the 'Alp upon Alp' of his art; but he never forgot to listen to the sounds of life. He was a fighter, and therefore to a large extent a man of the world. He might write score upon score not understood of the people; but he never ceased to struggle for their production, for their actual realisation. Bach, as he let his scores drop from his hand, allowed them to accumulate and recked not. Wagner was more anxious about the destiny of his offspring. The difference in their character accounts for the difference in their outlook upon life and art, and accordingly you find Wagner rejoicing in actuality. He sends wind and string rushing through chromatics precisely as in the night-time you hear the West wind. I choose the West because its orchestral effects have so strangely musical a character, more musical even than those of the South; for the West always blows with a breadth and an embrace in its flight that, as Shelley has particularly noted, makes it the wind of winds. Moreover, Wagner deals with objective sounds in his operatic work with peculiar persistence because he had a natural passion for the visible as apart from the spiritual world. The insistence of colour, always colour, in his stage-directions, no less than his enduring sense of natural sound, shows how keenly he looked abroad and loved the world as the eye of man views it, as the ear of man hearkens to it, drinks it in, rejoices in it, clings to it, shudders to depart from it, claims the years with passionate entreaty, regrets the flight of time, abhors death, dreams after immortality, and ever, ever prays with the great German for 'light, more light.' This is to speak of the gods, whose wine was the blood of the world, whose sustenance was the heart of humanity. Their divergent views upon onomatopœia in music—the direct translation of sound into musical notation—prove once more the individual greatness of their several choice. They have the right to judge, these glorious and proud creatures, that which they shall do—if they shall steal Nature or refine Nature. These words, however, have been written concerning the magnificent thieves who have flung the sounds of that Nature straight into their work; and they are justified by their own greatness. They sit in the broad halls of the 'Master of every Trade':—

They take their mirth in the joy of the Earth,
They do not grieve for her pain;
They know of toil and the end of toil,
They know God's law is plain:
So they whistle the Devil to make them sport
Who know that Sin is vain.

VERNON BLACKBURN.

A FAMOUS CHOIR SCHOOL.

ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR.

Windsor Castle is steeped in associations as varied as they are interesting. One need not go beyond the confines of the Lower Ward to find proof thereof. On passing through the gateway of Henry VIII., the 'Royal Free Chapel of St. George, within the Castle of Windsor,' is exposed to view. And does not the or at the time of their admission clericali caractere insignitos (i.e., have received first tonsure); to each of whom was allow'd five marks annually. And as the deacon and sub-deacon were plac'd in the College only in addition to the vicars, and design'd to succeed them in their vacancies, so also were there six secular venerable fane furnish themes historical, architectural and musical? Let us consider a section of the last-named interest, and endeavour to discover something about the school in which the choristers of St. George's Chapel are educated.

Nearly six centuries have come and gone since King Edward III. founded the College of Windsor. Ashmole, in his 'History of the Most noble Order of the Garter,' tells us that 'for the service of the choir were appointed six choristers, and they to be clerks, children, endued with clear tuneable voices, to succeed the choristers, when their voices altered.' (Chap. iv., p. 158.) These six choristers were increased by Edward IV. to thirteen, and continued at that number under Henry VIII. Edward VI. reduced them to ten. Queen Elizabeth restored them to thirteen. There are now twenty-four, of whom twelve are choral scholars.

King Edward III.'s statutes ordered that 'the choristers should be duly instructed in grammar and song, when not engaged in the services of the Chapel. In 1550 it was provided further that every chorister of the College, whose voice from henceforth shall change, shall have five marks yearly for his exhibition towards his finding at grammar school for the space of four years, if he be apt and will diligently apply himself to learn.' Also it was enjoined that 'one of the priests or clerks should be chosen yearly to be Grandsire of the choristers and to teach them the catechism and the principles of grammar and to write, and also to see to their manners, and he was bound to teach ten other poor children at the least freely, if they resort unto him. He was to teach the ten choristers every week day in the year from six o'clock in the morning until eight, and from

In the year 1507, the Dean and Chapter made a decree 'to keep in perpetual memorial the name of Master Christopher Urswyke formerly Dean of the same college.' At a chapter held on April 16, 1507, it was decided that 'the wishes of Master Christopher Urswyke should be granted in full':—

First, that the chapel which he had lately repaired in the northern part of the nave of the church should be called the Chapel of the Salutation of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Also as he requested, that one of the choristers should, before the choristers get up, ring a bell daily in the morning—the bell being provided for the purpose—in order that all should be thus waked up from sleep by the sound of it and get up.

twelve o'clock daily until two: which teacher should receive for his labours quarterly twenty-five shillings. The rest of the day the teacher of Music shall instruct the choristers diligently to sing and to play upon instruments.'

An interesting and hitherto unpublished historical sidelight has been kindly placed at our disposal for the purposes of this article. It consists of an extract from the Chapter records relating to Christopher Urswyke, a former Dean of St. George's Chapel of the 15th century. On the still existing screen which used to stand in front of the north-west chapel in the nave, but now stands in the south choir aisle, he is referred to as the 'King's High Almoner.'

Also that immediately after the ringing of the bell the chosen chorister should say in a loud voice, so that all the rest can hear, the following words: 'In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen.' And all the rest should repeat the same words, and at once should all say the following verse: 'Glory be to Thee, O Lord, who wast born of the Virgin, with the Father and the Holy Spirit for ever and ever. Amen.'

Also after supper, when they go to bed, the choristers should be divided into two parts, and should say in turn the following verses of the 51st Psalm (verses 1, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12).

The above decrees were ordered to be 'publicly, openly, and distinctly read over every year, on the Monday after Low Sunday'—

By the Master of the Choristers in the Chapel of the Salutation in the presence of the Dean and his successors, or, in his absence, of his locum tenens, of all the Canons in residence, and also of the Teacher of Singing . . . and that after the reading of the statute by the Precentor, or in his absence, by the Succentor, the following amounts be distributed :—

To the Dean	xx. denarii (pennies)
(or to his locum tenens)	xvi. „ „
To each Canon	xii. „ „
To the Master of the Choristers ..	viii. „ „
To the Teacher in Singing ..	viii. „ „
To the Succentor	iv. „ „

In the present day the last-named amount (four pennies, equivalent to at least five shillings), would pass into the treasury of Sir Walter Parratt!

Likewise it was decreed by the above-mentioned Dean and Chapter that on the same day on which these annual ceremonies were performed the Treasurer of the College should pay to the Master of the Choristers vii. shillings and vii. pence to be distributed in the following manner :—

To each chorister vii. pennies : iii. pennies for ink and iv. pennies for paper.

And at the end of the distribution let the Dean, or his deputy, exhort the choristers to learn in writing to copy the Roman characters after the Italian style.

Coming to the time of Queen Elizabeth, the following warrants show that the fair Monarch exacted other duties from the choristers of Windsor than that of singing at the Chapel Services, but, be it observed, not without fee or reward :—

A warrant to Sir Francis Knolles, Knight, Threasurer of the Chamber, to pay by way of the Quene's Majestie's rewarde to Richard Farraunt, Master of the Children of Windesour, for presentinge a play before her Heighness upon Shrove Tuesday last past, the Somme of vijli xiijs iiijd.

(Actes of the Privy Council, at Westminster, Feb. 17, 1566.)

A warrant to the said Mr. Hennedge (Treasurer of the Quenes Majesties Chamber) to deliver to Richard Ferrant, Master of the Children of Windesour, for presentinge of a play before her Majestie upon St. John[s] Day at night last past, by way of her Majestie's reward, the Somme of vijli xiijs iiijd.

(At Greenwich, 25th and last of Decr. 1571.)

The inimitable Mr. Pepys may next be quoted. In that wonderful diary he records his experiences at Windsor in his usual informing style, under date February 26, 1666 :—

So took coach and to Windsor, to the Garter, and thither sent for Dr. Childe [the organist]; who come to us, and carried us to St. George's Chappell; and then placed us among the Knights' stalls . . . and hither come cushions to us, and a young singing-boy to bring us a copy of the anthem to be sung. And here, for our sakes, had this anthem and the great service sung extraordinary, only to entertain us. It is a noble place indeed, and a good Quire of voices.

If Mr. Pepys had worn spurs when he was 'carried' into St. George's Chapel with such Childelike simplicity, spur money would have been demanded of him by the choristers in accordance with ancient custom. The Privy Purse expenses of Henry VII., under date of October 1, 1495 (on his return to Windsor from Wales), contain this entry :—

To the Children of the Chapel for the King's spoures, 4s.

And in similar outgoings of Henry VIII. there are no fewer than three such disbursements between June, 1530, and September, 1532 :—

To the Coristars of the Collegdge of Wyndsor in rewarde for the Kinges spurres.

In each case the fine was an amount not unknown in legal circles—6s. 8d., or half a mark.

The names of some former choristers who have made their mark in the cathedral realm of music deserve to be recorded. Two of them became organists at St. George's Chapel—the celebrated John Marbeck (or Merbecke), a chorister in the year 1531, and William Sexton, who from 1801 to 1824 occupied the office now held by Sir Walter Parratt. The names of six other Old Boys will be readily recognised :—

Dr. Ben. Rogers, organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, 1664-85.

John Travers, organist of the Chapel Royal, 1737-58.

G. Townsend Smith, organist of Hereford Cathedral, 1843-77.

Haydn Keeton, the present organist of Peterborough Cathedral.

H. Walford Davies, the present organist of the Temple Church.

Hubert Hunt, the present organist of Bristol Cathedral.

We may now pass from the ancient to the modern side of our subject and record some impressions received during a recent visit to St. George's School, Windsor Castle, where the choristers are educated. The building in which these fortunate young gentlemen are domiciled is best approached through the Chapter garden, entering this exceedingly pleasant domain on the Castle slopes through a private door leading off the famous Hundred Steps. The school is located in the old abode of the Naval Knights of Windsor, called Travers College, so named after its founder. This building, one hundred years old, originally consisted of a stone-verandahed row of houses, each of which was occupied by one of the Naval Knights. Now, with its numerous 'holes in the walls,' the old College has been transformed into a most comfortable and admirably equipped establishment for the boys. The airy dormitories and classrooms still retain the names of Naval heroes—Nelson, Anson, Rodney and others; one exception, however, is the spacious school-room named 'Victoria,' built in the Diamond Jubilee year. The view we give of the School and its unique environment will furnish some idea of the charming surroundings in which the boys are placed.

In the course of an interesting conversation with the devoted headmaster—Mr. H. F. W. Deane, M.A., an alumnus of Trinity College, Cambridge—we learn some interesting particulars of St. George's School under his wise regime, now close upon eight years. The education given is that of a good preparatory school. The resident staff consists of three masters, graduates of Cambridge, and the musical studies are under the personal direction of Sir Walter Parratt and his assistant, Mr. Martin Akerman. The boys pass on to Eton, Uppingham (where the musical training under Mr. Paul David is particularly good), and scholarships have been gained at Malvern, Marlborough, Brecon, &c. Old boys are now at Cambridge University, and one has just passed 'third' into Woolwich. At the present time besides the twenty-four boys in the choir, there is accommodation for six supernumeraries.

The outdoor recreation includes football, cricket, athletic sports, &c., in playing fields kindly provided by the King in the Home Park, and these Windsor boys have no difficulty in holding their own at cricket against the choristers of Westminster and the Chapel Royal, and various preparatory schools in the neighbourhood. The indoor pursuits consist of chess—Sir Walter Parratt has played fifteen boys playing as many games at one and the same time and has won them all!—gymnastics, photography, a school magazine, a school library, short impromptu concerts, and a flourishing Philatelic Society. For the past five years an annual musical play has been given with marked success—the last being entirely home-made, libretto, music and costumes!

The musical advantages are obvious. Instrumental music (pianoforte, organ and violin) and harmony are taught by Mr. Martin Akerman, assistant organist of St. George's Chapel, under the constant supervision of Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the King's Musick, who holds terminal examinations. Every morning from 8.30 to 9.0 Sir Walter Parratt gives the boys the inestimable advantage of a personal lesson in singing before he proceeds to his duties at the Royal College of Music in London.

A CHORISTER-ORGANIST (H. G. LEY) AT THE ORGAN OF ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR.

Two services are held daily in St. George's Chapel, but on Tuesday mornings and Wednesday afternoons the boys are off duty. Three boys in turn sing every Sunday in the Private Chapel when the Court is in residence, and the choristers take part in all State services in St. George's Chapel, Coronations, and the Royal Mausoleum Memorial services.

On a recent occasion (January 23) twelve of the choristers were 'commanded' to the Castle in order to sing between the violin solos played before the Royal circle by Lady Hallé. The pieces sung by the boys, under Sir Walter Parratt's direction, were as follows:—

- Trio 'The Lamb' H. Walford Davies.
Two-part Song.. 'Staines Morris' Old English Dance (1650).
Song 'Where the bee sucks' Sullivan.
R. E. Macbean.
Three-part Song, 'The boatman's return.
Martin Akerman.
Song (all the boys) 'Here's a health unto His Majesty' Old English (1667).

The King, the Queen, and the Prince of Wales all showed much interest in the boys, and asked them several questions about their school, work, games, Coronation medals, &c.

In conclusion, the outcome of the educational advantages of this Royal school may be summed up in these words—refined work out of refined material. The Masters are devoted to their work, and Sir Walter Parratt's thoughts are never far from his boys. Here, at Windsor, the utmost attention is given to the training of individual character, and to the cultivation of habits of accuracy and thoroughness in all mental work; and although the time devoted to music and singing is necessarily large, yet that the literary work of the boys does not suffer, but is indirectly improved thereby, is shown conclusively by the results achieved when the Windsor choir boys compete for public school scholarships with other boys of the same age who have given the whole of their time to Latin and Greek. It may in truth be said of the boys of St. George's School, Windsor Castle, that 'the lines have fallen unto them in pleasant places.'

The following information, under the heading 'The Court,' appeared in the London newspapers of the 13th ult.

York House, St. James's Palace, Feb. 12.

This morning the Prince of Wales received a deputation from the Worshipful Company of Musicians, consisting of Mr. Frank Harwood Lescher (the Master), Mr. William Cordy Herring (the Senior Warden), Mr. Charles Thomas Daniel Crews (the Junior Warden), and Mr. Thomas Collingwood Fenwick (Clerk), who presented to his Royal Highness, as President of King Edward's Hospital Fund, a cheque for £866 2s., being a contribution from the company to the Fund, derived from the sale of the Coronation Prize March, by Mr. Percy Godfrey.

We look in vain for the name of any representative musician in this deputation-quartet.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie sails on the 19th inst. in the Allan Liner 'Bavarian' for his Canadian-conducting tour. In our January issue (p. 15) we gave particulars of this important propaganda of 'British Music in the Great North-West' initiated and financed by Mr. Charles Harriss, of Ottawa—of which Cycle of Festivals the Right Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, M.P., has kindly consented to be Honorary Patron. Sir Alexander will conduct no fewer than thirty-three concerts—sometimes two a day, and his time-table shows that he is set down for three rehearsals in one day! If his journey gives him change, he will experience very little rest, and the arduousness of his task is obvious. He may, however, count on the good wishes of all on this side, and the expectation of receiving a warm welcome wherever he goes in that part of Greater Britain favoured by his presence.

The scheme of music to be performed under Sir Alexander Mackenzie's direction in Canada has been augmented by the following productions of native composers:—

Three Bavarian Dances	Elgar
Three Characteristic Pieces	Elgar
Three English Dances in the olden style	Cowen
Overture, The Naiades	Sterndale Bennett
Music to Henry VIII.	German
Eventide (from Orchestral Suite)	G. J. Bennett
Intermezzo (from The Sleeping Beauty)	Cowen
Recit. and Air, 'O peaceful night' (St. John's Eve)	Cowen
Freebooters' Songs	William Wallace
Lords of the Sea	William Wallace
'Spring has come' (Hiawatha)	Coleridge-Taylor
Hiawatha's vision	Coleridge-Taylor
'A Reverie of the East'	Mackenzie

We may take this opportunity of correcting a slight error in the information (derived from Canada) given in our January issue in regard to the Associate-Conductors mentioned therein. It appears that Dr. Fisher, Mr. J. Humphery Anger, Mr. A. S. Vogt and Mr. A. D. Tripp (all of Toronto), serve on the Executive Committee of the Toronto Festival part of the scheme and not as Associate-Conductors. We understand that Sir Alexander Mackenzie expects to return to England on May 25, and we hear that his 'Pibroch' suite for solo violin and orchestra was performed at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (U.S.A.) on January 31 with great success.

The performance of Handel's oratorio, 'Solomon,' announced to be given on the 24th ult.—too late for notice in the present issue—by the Handel Society, furnishes an opportunity of calling attention to that concert-giving institution. The Handel Society was formed in the autumn of 1882 'for the practice of Classical Music, Vocal and Instrumental, by various composers, to be called the Händel Society.' (The German spelling of the master's name will be noticed.) The vocal rehearsals commenced on November 15, 1882, at the residence of Mr. Arthur Balfour, M.P. (now Prime Minister), at 4, Carlton Gardens, and the orchestra met two days later at the same place. Mr. F. A. W. Docker was the first musical director of the Society, in the proceedings of which Mr. Balfour has taken a keen interest since its formation. The first concert, more or less in the nature of a private function, took place in St. Andrew's Hall, Newman Street, on June 14, 1883, when Part I. of the programme consisted of a selection of Handel's 'Belshazzar'—the solo singers including Miss Ellicott, Miss Wakefield, and the Hon. Spencer G. Lyttelton. As showing the eclecticism of the Society, the names of Gluck, Raff and Brahms occurred in Part II. of this initial music-making. A move was made to St. James's Hall in 1885, when, on February 21, Handel's 'Saul' was given to commemorate the 200th anniversary of the birth of the composer. It is not within the scope of these notes to give a detailed history of the Society, but only to refer to some of its most notable achievements. During Mr. Docker's regime, in addition to 'Belshazzar' and 'Saul' already mentioned, we find performances of Cherubini's Requiem Mass in C minor, Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas,' Haydn's Mass in the same key, Goetz's 'By the waters of Babylon,' Mozart's 'King Thamos' and Litany in B flat, Beethoven's Mass in C, Bach's Magnificat, and the following works by Handel: 'Samson,' 'Solomon,' 'Acis and Galatea,' 'Alexander's Feast,' and 'Alcestis,' in addition to several smaller works.

After the resignation of Mr. Docker—who rendered the Society excellent service during the ten years (1882-92) he was its musical director—Mr. August Manns held sway as conductor for two years. In 1895 Mr. J. S. Liddle was appointed to the office, a position which he still holds. During the second decade of the Society's existence the less familiar works have included Mendelssohn's 'Christus,' Haydn's chorus 'Der Sturm,' Goetz's 'Noenia,' Bach's 'Ein feste Burg,' Handel's 'Dixit Dominus' and 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' (the foregoing under Mr. Manns), and, under Mr. Liddle's direction, Handel's 'Nisi Dominus,' Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' Handel's 'As pants the hart,' 'Alcina' (selection) and 'Alexander Balus.' Works by English composers—Parry, Stanford and Coleridge-Taylor, to wit—have been rendered by the Society, which, though Handel in name, has a comprehensive outlook. The last report of the Society shows that the chorus numbers one hundred and ninety-eight voices and that the band contains ninety-two performers. The balance in hand is £68. There should be placed to the further credit of the Society the oratorio concerts which it has given in the poorer parts of London—e.g., at The People's Palace. In this estimable sphere of operations excellent work has been done. The Hon. Secretary of the Handel Society is Mr. P. G. L. Webb, 110, Gloucester Place, Portman Square.

Professor Sir Frederick Bridge, King Edward Professor of Music at the University of London, delivered his inaugural lecture on January 30, the subject of his discourse being 'The place of Music in Education,' a pregnant theme admirably befitting the occasion. At the Royal Institution Sir Frederick has been lecturing with much acceptance on 'Mr. Pepys as a Musician,' in commemoration of the bicentenary of the famous diarist.

The letter headed 'Accidentals galore!' in our Correspondence column treats of a serious matter in more senses than one. Eyesight ranks first in importance, and the multiplicity of signs now considered necessary by modern composers often raises the question 'Where are the notes?' A bar of present-day music often contains as many accidentals as notes! A proof-reader upon seeing a naked note at once thinks that its clothes have been stolen on its way to the engraver, or printer, with the result that he immediately proceeds to insert a query in the margin of the proof in order that the composer may search his wardrobe for a suitable habiliment. Without pursuing the subject further, it is only necessary to draw attention to the awful example given by our correspondent—who, by-the-way, is a very experienced teacher—in order to show the notational difficulties of this overgrowth of signs, and, we may add, these redundant obfuscations of present-day composers.

The question may perchance be asked: 'Why are not some of the streets of London named after composers?' The natural reply would probably be this: 'Borough Councils and speculating builders are not sentimentally inclined.' But a little investigation will show that there are streets in London bearing names well known in the realm of music. Let us see. Starting from Paddington, we there find a Beethoven Street and a Mozart Street. In the neighbourhood of the Foundling Hospital there is, appropriately enough, a Handel Street, with a duplication out Wandsworth way. In the latter neighbourhood we shall come across—or go across, if you will—Schubert Road, which, intentionally or otherwise, is close to Melody Road. To find a Wagner Street we must make our way to the region of the Old Kent Road, but Parsifal Road must be sought in the more salubrious locality of Hampstead. The southern side of London's great water-way will furnish us with the names of two native composers—Parry Place, leading off the Plumstead Road, and Elgar Street, Rotherhithe! The Professor of Music at Cambridge University will find his patronymic in two places—Stanford Street, Vauxhall Bridge Road, and Stanford Road, Kensington. The nearest approach to Bach is Bache's Street, Shoreditch (this street recalls the names of two honoured English musicians); to Haydn, Haydon Square, Minories; and to Weber, Webber Street, New Cut. Mendelssohn is unrepresented in this 'smoky nest,' as he was pleased to call London, and the name of Brahms has doubtless been reserved for the next new 'Avenue' or 'Gardens' in Kensington. One may scour in vain the region of Scotland Yard for a thoroughfare that shall recall the thorough fare meted out to certain young people at Tenterden Street; but a Mackenzie something, like all the Campbells, must surely be coming. Lastly, some such interrogation as this may be put: 'Is there nothing of the kind to call to mind the poet-composer of the pianoforte? Yes, good reader, providing your imagination is sufficiently expansive. Go by the Metropolitan Railway to Wapping Station. Mount the seemingly endless steps of that dreary stopping-place—formerly the entrance to the old Thames Tunnel. Make your way to Old Gravel Lane, and you may gaze upon Chopin's Court!

Miss Eva Hester Keeton, only daughter of Dr. Haydn Keeton, organist of Peterborough Cathedral, was married to Dr. Hugh Hampden Pridie, of Wansford, in Peterborough Cathedral on the 5th ult. The Lord Bishop of the Diocese performed the marriage ceremony, and Sir Frederick Bridge presided at the organ. The Cathedral was crowded, and the large number of guests on the happy occasion included Sir George and Lady Martin. It is hardly necessary to say that the presents were numerous and costly.

Dr. Saint-Saëns contributes to La Vie Musicale of the 5th ult. a short article entitled 'Les Oratorios de Bach et de Haendel.' The distinguished French composer has the courage of his opinions, and at the outset announces that he is about to 'scandaliser bien des gens.' For him the performance of the works of these two masters is a chimera, and he proceeds to point out the practical difficulties which attend any effort to present them. Handel's arias contain 'treasures of melody,' but also 'torrents of roulades, horribly out-of-fashion, and of tiresome length; further, nearly all of them finish up with a formula bombastic, emphatic, applied to pieces and situations of all kinds. He also laments, though in milder terms, the old-world style of Bach's choruses and airs. At Paris, he tells us, the sacred works of these masters have to be materially cut down, mutilated, before the public will accept them. 'Fortunately,' he says, 'the English public is endowed with unalterable patience; it is never bored, or rather it accepts boredom as a necessity. Here [i.e. at Paris] no one would venture to worry the public with fugues and interminable airs for the space of five hours.' Dr. Saint-Saëns though no Wagnerite, is modern in his tastes, but he knows that the old-fashioned phraseology and cadences in the works of the two composers in question affect not the matter but only the manner of the music; to musicians who appreciate its greatness they are not only tolerated on account of the strong inspiration which is felt, but they are either forgotten, or accepted as quaint effects natural to the period in which the works were written. We are therefore sorry to find one of the most eminent of French composers discoursing in this wise about giants of whose strength he himself is well aware. The worthy doctor concludes his tirade thus:—

For these reasons and many others, some persons think that ancient works should be performed, not in view of an immediate and complete artistic success, but in order to train executants, the public and composers. Artists will learn 'le grand style,' the public will acquire the habit of listening to serious things; composers will find in them a starting-point whence will arise strong and beautiful works which will be appreciated according to their merit.

His reasons however argue rather in favour of not performing Handel and Bach, unless it be in England, where boredom as we learn is accepted as a necessity. What does Dr. Saint-Saëns mean?

A competition likely to lead to more useful results than are afforded by puzzle-pictures and other such futile rivalries has been organized in connection with the International Musical Society. Its object was to ascertain the best practical method of indexing popular traditional tunes of the Volkslied type, not according to the words, but according to the melodies. Considering that in the large majority of instances it is the tunes, rather than the words, of popular songs that are of value, and that many songs are often associated with a particular favourite tune, the importance of some means of readily and simply classifying the tunes is obvious to all students of this interesting branch of music. The method suggested by Dr. Oswald Koller, of Vienna, which has been accepted as the best solution of the problem, has great simplicity to recommend it; indeed, it is so readily grasped that one fears many cursory readers of his essay, published in the Society's journal (Sammelband iv., part 1), may think there is little in it, and wonder it has never occurred to anybody before! A perusal of the essay will, however, show that the plan was arrived at only after considerable experiment and the rejection of many alternatives which did not permit of a thorough classification.

The principle on which Dr. Koller has worked has been that the important matter for record is the series of intervals of which the opening phrase of a tune consists, while second to it is the rhythm. He gives an indication of both in this wise. He substitutes figures for notes, taking the keynote (which in traditional music is of course variable) as representing unity, and figuring intervals above it by Arabic numerals, those below it (reckoned downwards) by Roman. In order that none but the essential notes of the melody may be registered, only those are given which are rhythmically important. As an illustration of his method, Dr. Koller gives a thematic index of the first 300 in Boehme's collection of old German songs, adding to each entry the Mode in which the tune is written and the keynote, details which presumably might be dispensed with in indexing ordinary song-tunes. Applying it to some of our own familiar tunes we should have some such results as these:—

IV. 1 2 3, 4 II. 2 1 -	When the King enjoys his own again.
I II. 3 3 2 1 -	God save the King.
1 1 2 3, 1 5 1 -	Rule, Britannia.
1 1 3 2, 5 3 1 -	British Grenadiers.
1 8 6 5 -	Here's to the maiden of bashful fifteen.
3 1 3 1, 5 8 5 -	Bailiff's Daughter.
3 2 1, 3 2 1 -	Here's a health unto his Majesty.
3 3 2 1, 2 2 2 1 -	Once I loved a maiden fair.
3 4 5 2, 5 3 1 -	Drink to me only with thine eyes.
3 5 3 1, 3 8 5 -	Barbara Allen.
5 5 8 6, 6 4 5 3 -	Leather Bottel.
8 5 4 3, 5 4 2 1 -	Vicar of Bray.

It will be noticed that these are ranged in order of the ascending scale, thus forming a numerical index. The merits of the system are obvious. It is extremely simple, for the figures are not arbitrary, but indicate the intervals from the keynote in both directions (accidentals can, of course, be indicated in the usual manner). The method groups similar tunes—or at least tunes similar in their opening phrases—together, and would doubtless reveal many instances of structural similarity. Dr. Koller adds the suggestion that in England, where the Tonic Sol-fa is in use, its notation would furnish a ready method for noting down and classifying melodies in index form.

Two unknown compositions by Purcell constitute an interesting discovery, both historically and musically, made by Mr. T. W. Taphouse with his usual antiquarian zeal in the library of Oriel College, Oxford. To the recent Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-gesellschaft Mr. Barclay Squire contributes an account of these two pieces, from which we learn that they were used at the funeral of Queen Mary in Henry VIII.'s Chapel, Westminster Abbey, on March 5, 1695. We give the music of the first piece, adapted by Purcell from a passage in his music to Shadwell's 'The Libertine,' and arranged by him to be got Notice of at the Exchange Coffee-house.

THE QUEENS FUNERALL MARCH SOUNDED BEFORE HER CHARIOT.

MR. H. PURCELL.

Mr. Morrow is, however, of opinion that the music was played by trombones and not by trumpets. The latter term was used in 'the general or collective way in which many people speak of brass instruments as trumpets.' The other piece is a 'Canzona.' As it was sounded in the Abbey after the Anthem, also to be played on four trumpets 'tremulo.' For the music of this, and Mr. Barclay Squire's instructive notes thereupon, the reader may be referred to the publication mentioned above.

Unconscious humour has a charm all its own. We all know of the innocent student who, when the lecturer announced 'My next lecture will be on Keats,' responded, 'Please, sir, what are Keats?' A companion picture to this delightful misunderstanding has recently been afforded in a West Riding town of manufacturing proclivities. Here a well-known musician proposed to give a lecture on 'Schumann's Pianoforte Works,' and enthusiastic amateurs did their best to beat up an audience. One of them meeting a friend seized the opportunity to urge him to attend the lecture, and was met by the enquiry, "'Schumann's Pianoforte Works'?" And where may they be situated, at Leeds or Bradford?

Last month we gave some curious extracts from old Oxford journals. Here are some specimens from similar sources at Edinburgh, kindly sent by a zealous musical antiquary of Auld Reekie, Mr. Robert A. Marr:—

The Caledonian Mercury, November 14, 1740.

Mr. Borrow being just come to this City designs during the Winter Session to entertain Ladies and Gentlemen with the High-German Musical Instrument called Ganne in the same manner as he has had the Honour to do before the first Nobility of most Courts in Europe. He performs Italian, German or Scots Musick, when sent for to private Families only, on this Instrument; and demands no other Payment than the Company shall think his Performance has deserved. He is to be got Notice of at the Exchange Coffee-house.

The next extract refers to such diversified topics as Adam and Eve, Paradise Lost, David's Harp, temperature and sore throat:—

The Caledonian Mercury, December 12, 1752.

This present Evening the 12th of December at the Assembly Hall the Fourth Concert in the Manner of Oratorios.

Signora Passerini and Miss Meyer will sing the Hymn of Adam and Eve, out of the 5th Book of Milton's Paradise Lost, and other extraordinary Latin, English and Scots Songs and Duets.

Mr. Meyer will play for the first Time on a New Instrument, called David's Harp.

N.B.—Signor and Signora Passerini assure that the Hall will be as warm as any other publick place, and perhaps better.

Each Extraordinary Ticket at 2/6 to be had at Signor Passerini's Lodging and at the Coffee-houses.

Signora Passerini is quite better of her sore Throat, and will sing this Night.

The Red Tickets will not be accepted after this Concert.

The following Handeliana befits the third month of the year. Handel's oratorio of 'Samson' contains a Dead March: his oratorio of 'Joseph and his brethren' contains a Wedding March. The music of both these Marches is practically the same!

A NEW ENGLISH VIOLINIST.

Miss Marie Hall, of whom we give a portrait, is one of the most brilliant young violinists that has appeared in recent years. Her performances at the concert given by her at St. James's Hall on the 16th ult. drew forth a chorus of unqualified praise from the London critics. A fair young damsel of eighteen summers cannot be expected to boast of much biography, but what little she has is to her credit.

Marie Pauline Hall was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne on April 8, 1884. From her earliest childhood she showed the great genius for the violin which is now bringing her such phenomenal success. For several years she was taught by her father, Mr. Edward Felix Hall, an amateur violinist and harpist, and subsequently by Miss Hildegard Werner. She made such extraordinary progress that at the age of ten she could play Bach's Sonatas. As a child Miss Hall and her father used to play violin and harp duets in the streets of Bristol! The peripatetic young fiddler was discovered by Mr. Max Mossel, the well-known violinist of Birmingham, who gave her some lessons. Her remarkable gifts were brought to the notice of several music-loving people living in Bristol. They at once recognized the extraordinary talent the child possessed, and provided means by which she was sent to London to study with Professor Johann Kruse, under whose tuition she made rapid progress. At the age of fifteen and-a-half she gained the first Wessely Exhibition at the Royal Academy of Music—a fact which is duly recorded in The Musical Times of November, 1899 (p. 741). But owing to the circumstances surrounding her she was unable to take advantage of this.

Herr Kubelik chanced to hear her play, and was so greatly struck with her attainments that he strongly advised her to enter the Conservatoire of Prague and study under Professor Sevcik. Accordingly, in the autumn of 1901, Miss Hall went to Prague and became a pupil of Kubelik's old master. After only one year's study with Sevcik, he considered that she was ready to appear before the public. This she has now done at Prague, Vienna and London, with a success that has surpassed all expectations. From the foregoing account of Miss Hall's career it will be seen that she has had the unusual and valuable advantage of studying in two great violin schools—the classical and romantic one of Berlin, represented in her training by Professor Kruse, and the great technical school of Prague, whose world-famed master (Sevcik) has said that he has seldom, if ever, instructed a pupil with a talent equal to that possessed by Miss Hall. The future development of this gifted young lady will be watched with the greatest interest. We may be proud of her nationality, and wish for her a long and brilliant artistic career.

SOME CHOPIN LETTERS.

In 1863 the palace of Count Zamoyski at Warsaw was pillaged by the Russian troops. Chopin's sister, Isabelle Barcinska, lived there with her husband, who was director of the Navigation Company. Chopin's pianoforte was destroyed, and it has always been supposed that letters written by the composer to his sister and her husband then suffered the same fate. At any rate some of them were preserved, and are now in the possession of Mlle. Marie Crechomska, grand-daughter of Madame Iedrzejewicz, another of Chopin's sisters. They have been placed in the hands of M. Karłowicz, who contributed an article to the January number of La Revue Musicale, entitled 'Chopin, souvenirs inédits.' The Polish composer was not, like Mozart or Mendelssohn, a fascinating letter writer, yet even in the communications under notice there are many allusions to music and musicians not without interest.

In a letter written from Nohant in 1845 to his family, Chopin says: 'Madame Viardot arrived with us, and remained three weeks.' This reference to the eminent vocalist is interesting; for though the words were written nearly sixty years ago, Madame Viardot is still living in Paris and, so far as we know, in good health. Of her Chopin also says:—'She sang to me the Spanish songs which she composed last year at Vienna; she has promised to sing them to you. I like them very much, and I doubt whether it would be possible to hear or imagine anything of the kind more perfect.' In a letter dated October 1 of the same year (1845) he writes: 'Madame Viardot has already started for the Rhine, having received an invitation [i.e., to attend the inauguration of the Beethoven monument at Bonn] through Meyerbeer from the King of Prussia, also Liszt, Vieuxtemps, &c. The King and Queen will receive the Queen of England, who has already started for Germany with her husband, Prince Albert. Mendelssohn is also at Coblenz, making musical preparation for his King, for Queen Victoria will be received at Stolzenfels. . . . They are selling cigars "à la Beethoven," who certainly never smoked anything but Vienna pipes; and already so many pieces of furniture, old bureaux and old what-nots which belonged to Beethoven are being sold, that the poor composer of the Pastoral Symphony ought really during his lifetime to have started a wholesale business in furniture. This reminds me of the concierge of Ferney, who sold ever so many walking-sticks of Voltaire's.'

In December Chopin writes from Paris: 'To-day I have given only one lesson, to Madame Rothschild; I have refused two others, for I had other things to look after. . . . Now I want to finish a sonata for violoncello, a barcarolle, and something else for which I have not yet found a name.' M. Karłowicz gives a good reason for thinking that the 'something else' was the Op. 61, published under the title 'Polonaise fantasie.' Chopin heard Balfe's opera, probably 'L'Etoile de Séville,' and does not think much of it. It annoyed him to hear such stuff, 'while Meyerbeer, who, seated quietly in his box listening and studying the libretto, has two operas quite ready: 'Le Prophète' and 'L'Africaine,' both in five acts.' It was in 1838 that Scribe gave the libretto of 'L'Africaine' to Meyerbeer. The opera is generally supposed not to have been finished until 1863, but in 1845 the composer may have thought and said that his work was complete. In the last letter but one, written in 1846, Chopin again refers to the violoncello sonata; 'sometimes I am pleased with it, sometimes displeased.' Then follow some remarks which show that Chopin was somewhat of a philosopher: 'In composing, the music seems good, otherwise one would never write. Then comes reflection, and it is thrown aside or accepted. Time is the best judge, and patience the best master.'

Church and Organ Music.

CHANTING: SOME HISTORICAL NOTES.

Who invented the Pointed Psalter? This is one of those baffling questions not easy to answer. It may be assumed that until less than a century ago the pointing of the Psalms in cathedrals was a matter of tradition, and that no uniformity existed in regard to the division of the syllables; in Parish Churches the canticles were also traditionally sung. These unsatisfactory conditions in regard to the chanting of the Psalms in Parish Churches attracted the attention of Dr. John Christmas Beckwith, organist of Norwich Cathedral for one year only, 1808-9. In his publication entitled 'The First verse of every Psalm of David with an ancient or modern chant in score adapted as much as possible to the sentiment of each Psalm by J. Beckwith, Mus. Doc. Oxon.' (1808), he sets forth the following with the force of a 'strong recommendation':—

Suppose the organist and choir were to meet every morning and afternoon for one month, and agree on the proper place in each verse of the Psalms where the reciting should end in both the first and last parts of the chant, and under that particular word or syllable place a conspicuous red mark: if one book were thus carefully marked, the others might be rendered similar to it. The benefit would be, all the members of the choir might recite as one person, and all come together to that word which they are previously sure is the most proper to end the recital.

In the year 1821, one Jonathan Gray, an amateur residing at York, issued a book entitled 'An enquiry into historical facts relative to Parochial Psalmody.' Mr. Gray therein sets forth the Te Deum 'pointed to be conveniently chanted in Churches.' In his 'Twenty-four chants: to which are prefixed, Remarks on chanting' (1834), he says:—

I consider it only an act of justice, to claim for Dr. Camidge the first contrivance and publication of a method for distinguishing both the words of the chanting note, and the places of each of the syllables which follow.

A specimen of Dr. Camidge's method may be given:

When Thou hadst overcome the—sharpness—of—death;
Thou didst open the kingdom of—heaven—to—all—be-lievers.

the words printed in italics being sung to the rhythmical portions of the chant. Dr. John Camidge (organist of York Minster from 1844 to 1859), in his volume of Cathedral Music, issued about 1828, gives under the heading 'instructions to chaunting':—

Specimens of a work the author is engaged in preparing in which the verses are not merely pointed with colons, for the purpose of being chanted, but are subdivided, for the greater convenience of choirs, and of those congregations in which singing is practised.

These specimens are Psalms 95, 100, 136-8; from the first-named we give the initial verse:—

O come, let us sing un—to . the . Lord :

Let us heartily rejoice in the . strength of . our . sal-vation.

Another gentleman residing at York, a Mr. J. E. Dibb, brought out (in 1831) a 'Key to chanting the Psalter, or Psalms of David . . . with a peculiar arrangement to facilitate the practice.' There is no need to dwell upon this production; but it furnished an interesting sequel. The Harmonicon of February, 1832, contains a long letter freely criticizing Mr. Dibb's book and methods. The communication is signed 'M. H.,' the writer being Miss Maria Hackett, 'the choristers' friend.*' After stating that italic indications of the rhythmical portions of the chant are not 'sufficiently clear for general use,' Miss Hackett goes on to say:—

An edition of the Psalter, with the proper subdivision of the verses, marked throughout with bars, would furnish the most intelligible and certain direction, and might be printed at a very moderate expense.

She then gives the following specimen suggestions:—

Blessed is the man that hath not walked in the counsel of the ungodly, nor stood in the | way of | sinners : and hath not sat in | the seat | of the | scornful.

Or much better thus:—

And hath not sat in the | seat | of the | scornful.

dwelling on the word seat, through the whole of the ante-penultimate bar.

Here we have, apparently for the first time, the familiar bar lines. To further quote from Miss Hackett's letter:—

Various other methods might be suggested for marking the commencement of each bar, and the place of the accent. By figures thus:

The kings of the earth stand up, and the rulers take counsel together: against the Lord and ¹against ²His ³anointed.

By the long and short syllables of the Latins:

Thou shalt not be afraid for any terror by night :
nor for the arrow that flieth by day.

* See THE MUSICAL TIMES, May, 1900, p. 303, for a portrait of this kind-hearted lady.

By the accents of the French :

For the pestilence that walketh in darkness :
nor for the sickness that destroyeth in the noonday.

For Thou, Lord, art my hope : Thou hast set
Thine house of defence very high.

By small black and white notes :

The heavens declare the glory of God : and the firmament sheweth His handy work.

One day telleth an other : and one night cer ti fi eth an other.

From the above extracts Miss Hackett appears to have invented or foreshadowed the signs of pointing now in general use. She evidently took a deep interest in the subject, and a second letter from her appeared in the following issue of the Harmonicon.

One of the earliest, if not the first complete Pointed Psalter—i.e., for use with Anglican chants—is that of Robert Janes, organist of Ely Cathedral from 1831 to 1866. The title of this epoch-making compilation may be given in full :—

Under the patronage of the reverend the Dean and Chapter of Ely.

THE PSALTER ; OR PSALMS OF DAVID, carefully marked and pointed to enable the voices of a choir to keep exactly together, by singing the same syllable to the same note ; and the accents as far as possible made to agree with the accents in the chant ; and also to remove the difficulty which individuals generally find who are not accustomed to the chanting of the psalms.

By ROBERT JANES, Organist of Ely Cathedral, 1837.

On the first page of his Psalter, Mr. Janes gives the words of the Venite, under a double chant of his own composition, as a specimen of his system of pointing. We give the first verse :—

O come, let us sing un- | to · the | Lord : let us heartily rejoice in the | strength · of | our · sal- | vation.

It will be observed that Janes retains the italicised type for the rhythmical portions of the chant, but he shirks the crux of chanting—the bridge which joins the recitation and rhythmical portions of the chant. The foregoing may serve as a small contribution to the history of the subject. We may return to it on a future occasion, more especially with reference to the theory and practice of the imaginary bar.

A STUDENTS' ORGAN RECITAL.

At Queen's Hall, on the 9th ult., some students of the Royal Academy of Music gave an organ recital, when the following pieces were played :—

Fantasia and Fugue in G minor	Bach.
	STANLEY R. MARCHANT.			(Sir John Goss scholar)
Sonata (Psalm xciv.)	Reubke.
	MABEL COLYER.
Prelude and Fugue in B minor	Bach.
	ELSIE F. COCKS.			(Stainer Exhibitioner.)
Fantasia and Toccata in D minor	Stanford.
	MARGARET KENNEDY.
Fugue in D minor...	Charles Steggall.
	IDA PEMBERTON.
Concerto in G minor (No. II)	Handel.
	GODFREY D. GARDNER.

It will be observed that four of the six performers were of the gentler sex !

THE 'DESCRIPTIVE MAN' AT CANTERBURY.

A correspondent, who is on the staff of an important provincial newspaper, sends us the following extract from a London daily journal. It forms part of a descriptive account of the recent enthronement of the Archbishop of Canterbury in Canterbury Cathedral :—

Dr. Perrin, the excellent organist, led off with a full-grown recital on the instrument, which the modern architect, who detests organs, has 'perched up aloft.' Dr. Perrin's organ is skied, but from its elevation it sent down delectable strains. Here is a list of works performed before the service began :—

Schiller March	Meyerbeer.
Legend in C	Dvorák.
March on a Theme of Handel	Guilmant.
Adagio in D	Dienel.
Fantasia in E flat	Saint-Saëns.

This, of course, was not a classical selection. But it contained a lot of melodious and attractive music, for which, as Dr. Perrin seems to know, the public are ready to sacrifice any number of fugues.

Our correspondent, in sending us the foregoing, gives vent to his feelings—which will be shared by not a few—in the following strain :—

The flippancy of the language, and the generally-unsatisfactory remarks upon the musical portion of the enthronement are such, in my opinion, as to induce a rubbing of the eyes. That such rubbishy stuff can be allowed to pass into the columns of a highly-placed paper in these days passes comprehension. The picture of Dr. Perrin as he 'led off with a full-grown recital,' conveys a really distinguished impression ! and the list which 'of course was not a classical selection, but contained a lot of melodious and attractive music' eloquently speaks of the auction-mart rather than of a great ecclesiastical ceremony in which music naturally had an honoured place.

The following programme of a Bach organ recital given by Sir Walter Parratt in New College Chapel, Oxford, on the 17th ult., will be perused with interest :—

1. FANTASIA super Komm, Heil'ger Geist, Herre Gott.
2. CHORAL VORSPIEL. Valet will ich dir geben.
3. PARTITE diverse sopra Christ, der du bist der helle Tag.
4. PRAELUDIUM in A minor.
5. SONATA No. 2 in C minor—Allegro, Largo, Vivace.
6. TOCCATA CONCERTATA in E major—Allegro, Fuge, Piu Mosso, Vivace.

The Festival of the Conversion of St. Paul was celebrated with all due significance at St. Paul's Cathedral on January 26. The music at the choral celebration consisted of Beethoven in C and the Rev. James Baden Powell's hymn 'Hail, Festal Day,' sung in procession. Hopkins in F, and Haynes in G (with orchestra) were the settings of the canticles sung at the morning and afternoon services respectively, and for the anthem at Evensong the usual selection from Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was impressively performed by full orchestra and chorus. Sir George Martin conducted with reverent care, and the organ was in the safe hands of Mr. Charles Macpherson.

The Fifty-first Annual Report of the Choir Benevolent Fund has just been issued. There is every evidence that this excellent Fund is in a satisfactory condition ; at the same time it is matter for regret that many young cathedral singers neglect to avail themselves of the benefits conferred by the Society, the advantages of which cannot be over estimated. There are also many persons who are interested in our beautiful Cathedral Service and its reverent rendering, who by becoming annual subscribers to the Fund might enable the committee to carry out the original aim of its Founders, and give fixed pensions to superannuated members and to widows of former members.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Reviews.

The Oxford History of Music. Volume IV. The Age of Bach and Handel. By J. A. Fuller Maitland.

[Oxford: The Clarendon Press.]

The epoch-making period covered by the lives of Bach and Handel could not have fallen into more able hands than those of Mr. Fuller Maitland. In treating of the lives of these two giants it was of course impossible to add much to the wealth of material already gathered by the industry of Spitta, Chrysander and Rockstro, with which most musicians are already familiar, but of course in a work of this nature such travelling over beaten ground is inevitable.

In reading the volume it is impossible to avoid the impression that the author places Bach on a much higher plane than Handel. In this we think he does not make sufficient allowance for the difference of their surroundings. Handel was a man of varied experience, and of extensive travel, whose works were written to supply the managerial wants of the moment, for a public greedy of novelty. Bach was the tranquil occupier of a post akin to that of a cathedral organist in a quiet city, under no compulsion of rapid production. Such celebrity as he attained in his lifetime may be almost called provincial. His vocal works, no doubt performed with all the excellence possible considering the means at his disposal, attracted but little attention, and were written rather to satisfy his own craving for composition than with any view of attracting public opinion. A composer among such surroundings has no temptation to give anything but his best; the man who has an audience to conciliate is tempted to give work which his critical judgment does not approve. As Dr. Johnson puts it, 'the man who lives to please must please to live.' Mr. Maitland returns to the view, recently expressed elsewhere, that Handel's popularity was actually a hindrance to the progress of music in this country. We have never been able to understand this opinion. No doubt his influence was for a long time paramount, and inevitably so; but that he should have retained that position for so long a period is the natural result of the possession of that genius—and one of the strongest testimonies to its power—the peculiar characteristic of which was that it satisfied alike the trained musician and the uncultured hearer. It is to the honour of the English nation that it at once recognised the supreme excellence of Handel, which has never been cordially accepted in Germany. During the life of Bach, and for many years after, his organ works alone were familiar to a few musicians, mostly his pupils, even in his own country. His vocal works, if they gained for him a certain amount of recognition at Leipzig, remained unpublished and had been entirely forgotten. It was reserved for Mendelssohn to disinter the 'St. Matthew' Passion, and no work of Bach's figured in a Gewandhaus programme before the year 1835—that is eighty-five years after the death of the master. Handel died in 1759; Haydn visited England in 1791, and had no occasion to complain of any want of appreciation from a public which received with enthusiasm music, even of a novel form. What is most to be regretted in the history of music in England is not the influence of Handel, but the untimely death of Purcell, which was the real check to the progress of the art in this country.

After such giants lesser men are dwarfed; but the object of history is to put on record all those who have helped to make it. This Mr. Maitland has done with a completeness worthy of all praise. There is hardly a musician known—or even unknown—to fame whose name will not be found in the excellent index with which the work is furnished. Opinions will of course differ as to the relative prominence given to particular musicians. We ourselves, for example, think that the works of Marcello deserved more extensive treatment, especially in view of the fact, not mentioned, that an attempt was made by Avison to exalt him at the expense of Handel.

In conclusion, there is an excellent chapter on the musical instruments of the period, and the influence which their virtues and defects had upon the music of the time. Concerning the harpsichord Mr. Maitland speaks as an expert, while his explanation of that somewhat perplexing instrument the clavichord, so loved of Bach, is specially clear and adequate.

Four Concerti Grossi for Strings. By G. F. Handel.
Pianoforte transcription by Giuseppe Martucci.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The Twelve Grand Concertos belong to the year 1739, and were all placed on paper within a month, one of the many instances of Handel's rapid mode of working. They were originally written for two solo violins and violoncello accompanied by the full stringed band, and published for the author by Walsh, in separate parts, as Op. 6. Signor Martucci has selected four of the set,—in B minor, E minor, B flat, and A minor—and these he has transcribed in a manner providing excellent food for pianists. This quartet of pieces, while replete with all the melodic jolliness which characterises Handel's quick movements, furnishes excellent studies in pianoforte technique. The slow movements, on the other hand, afford every opportunity for the development of expressive playing and the exercise of the poetic temperament on the part of the player.

Irish Wedding Song. Arranged by Brendan J. Rogers.
The Harvest Rose. O'Sullivan Mór. When through life unblest we rove. Lament. Arranged by T. R. G. Jozé.
The Cottager to her infant. By R. F. Martin Akerman.
The long day closes. By Arthur Sullivan.
The Message bringers. By H. Waldo Warner.
(Novello's Part-Song Book.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

'An Irish Wedding Song' has for its melody the air known as 'Kilkenny,' and Mr. Rogers has made good use of the sprightly tune in allying it to Mr. P. J. McCall's vivacious lines. Dr. Jozé's part-songs are excellent arrangements of old Irish airs, which, it scarcely need be said, impart attractive distinction to the series. The part-writing is flowing and effective. The words of 'The Cottager to her infant' are by Dorothy Wordsworth, sister of the poet, and the music is as unpretentious as the lines which called it forth. No comment is required concerning Sir Arthur Sullivan's beautiful setting of 'The long day closes,' save that the present arrangement is for soprano, alto, tenor, and bass. The words, by Frances Tyrrell-Gill, of 'The Message bringers,' set by Mr. H. Waldo Warner, may be described as moral reflections on hearing Christmas bells, which are illustrated in both the vocal and instrumental portion. The music, however, is by no means conventional, and affords opportunities for good effects.

Three Dances in Canon Throughout for Two Violins and Pianoforte. By Battison Haynes.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The 'Three Dances' by Battison Haynes will prove very acceptable additions to the limited répertoire of original compositions for two violins and pianoforte. No. 1, a gavotte, is a canon in the octave, the first violin following the second half a bar later at the higher octave. No. 2, a minuet, starts with the first violin, followed by the second two bars later at a fourth below, an inversion, however, taking place in the trio, where the second violin leads the melody with the first following at a fifth above. No. 3, a waltz, begins with the first violin, and is followed by the second two bars later at an octave below; so that there is variety of treatment in each of the three pieces. Although originally written for one violin and pianoforte these dances are so admirably adapted for their present form that it is difficult to believe they have been re-set from the initial design. The themes are melodious, especially that of the waltz, and the accompaniments well sustain the strings with appropriate and clever harmonies. The first violin runs through seven positions, but the second does not go beyond the third.

Obituary.

MDLLE. HOLMÈS.

On January 28 there died, at Paris, two distinguished composers—Augusta Mary Anne Holmès and Robert Planquette. The former, though born in Paris—either in 1847 or 1850—was of Irish parentage, but she became a naturalised Frenchwoman in 1879, and added an accent to the final vowel in her patronymic. A pupil of César Franck, she enrolled herself under the banner of the advanced French School. Her dramatic symphony 'Lutèce' gained a prize offered by the city of Paris in 1878, and two years later she composed a symphony entitled 'Les Argonautes.' In 1895 her opera 'La Montagne Noire' was produced at the Grand Opéra. Mdlle. Holmès published some of her songs and pianoforte pieces under the nom de plume of 'Hermann Zenta.' Her music is practically unknown in England.

ROBERT PLANQUETTE.

Robert Jean Planquette, also a native of the French capital, where he first saw the light on July 31, 1850. He began to compose as a boy, and after he had studied for a year at the Conservatoire he had a very hard struggle for existence. It is said that he lived in a garret at Montmartre, where he wrote music for café concerts, and frequently dined on bread and fried potatoes. His furniture consisted of one table and two rickety chairs. Under these pinched conditions he wrote the music of his comic opera 'Les Cloches de Corneville,' which brought him great fame. At first it was not a success, and Planquette thought of committing suicide. But the tide of misfortune turned, and the opera, together with 'Rip van Winkle,' 'Nell Gwynne,' 'Paul Jones' and 'The Old Guard' caused his music to become well known to and appreciated by English audiences.

MEYER LUTZ.

Another well known name connected with comic opera, burlesques, and light music for the theatre in England is that of Wilhelm Meyer Lutz, who died at Edith Road, West Kensington, on January 31. He was born at Männerstadt, Kissingen, in 1822 (or 1830), and in 1848 settled in England. He conducted at the Surrey Theatre from 1851 to 1855, and in 1869 began his long connection with the Gaiety Theatre, whereby he became widely known as the inventor of many sparkling melodies and a chef d'orchestre of remarkable ability. He held the organistship of St. George's Roman Catholic Cathedral for many years, and wrote a good deal of music for its services. He composed a string quartet, and he was a Past Grand Organist in Freemasonry.

JOSEPH PARRY.

Welsh musical folk are mourning the loss of one of their greatly admired sons, Joseph Parry, who, we regret to say, died at Penarth, near Cardiff, on the 17th ult. Born of very poor parents at Merthyr Tydvil, on May 21, 1841, young Parry as a boy of ten was forced to follow the occupation associated with puddling furnaces, and his education suffered accordingly. His family emigrated to America, but a prize awarded to him for a harmonized hymn tune at the Swansea Eisteddfod of 1865 so greatly attracted the attention of the late Brinley Richards, one of the adjudicators, that a fund was raised to enable Parry to return to England and enter the Royal Academy of Music. Accordingly in September, 1868, he became a student of that institution, and studied under Sterndale Bennett, Mr. Garcia, and Dr. Steggall. He became Professor of Music at the University College, Aberystwith, in 1871, and in 1888 was appointed to the Lectureship in Music at the University College of South Wales, Cardiff. He graduated Mus.B. at Cambridge in 1871, and proceeded to the Doctor's degree seven years later. Dr. Parry was a prolific composer, his output including at least two oratorios, three cantatas, six operas, overtures and other instrumental music, and a vast number of songs, anthems, hymn tunes, &c. At the National Eisteddfod of 1896, held at Llandudno, he was presented with a cheque for £600 in recognition of his services to Welsh music.

The score is for five voices and piano. The vocal parts are arranged in five staves, each with a key signature of two sharps (F# and C#) and a common time signature (C). The lyrics are: "Lord, for He hath tri-umph'd glo - rious-ly, sing ye to the Lord." The piano accompaniment is on the bottom staff, featuring a bass line and chords. The score includes dynamic markings such as f (forte) and sf (sforzando). The music is written in a traditional style with various musical notations including notes, rests, and bar lines.

The musical score is arranged in three systems, each with four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is common time (C). The lyrics are: "are a - bove, where Christ sit-teth on the right . . hand of God, where Christ sit - teth on the right hand of God. hand of God." The score includes dynamic markings such as mf (mezzo-forte), p (piano), f (forte), and cres. (crescendo). The piano part features a section labeled "Voices alone." and includes triplet figures in the final system. The lyrics are written below the vocal staves, with some words like "hand" and "of" appearing on multiple staves to indicate overlapping vocal lines.

First system of the musical score. It features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 2/4. The lyrics are: "Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumph'd glo - riously, sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumph'd glo - riously, sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumph'd glo - riously, sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumph'd glo - riously, sing ye to the". The piano part consists of chords and single notes in the right and left hands.

Second system of the musical score. It continues the vocal and piano parts. The lyrics are: "Lord, for He hath triumph'd glo - riously. Lord, for He hath triumph'd glo - riously. The Lord, for He hath triumph'd glo - riously. The". The piano part includes a section labeled "Tuba Solo." which features a more melodic line in the right hand and sustained chords in the left hand.

Third system of the musical score. It continues the vocal and piano parts. The lyrics are: "The Lord is ris'n in - Lord is ris'n in - deed, The Lord is ris'n in - Lord is ris'n in - deed, The". The piano part includes another section labeled "Tuba Solo." with a similar melodic and harmonic structure to the previous one.

ACCIDENTALS GALORE!

DEAR SIR,—In view of the marked disposition shown by modern composers to modulate into keys far removed from the one in which they begin their pieces, would it not be advisable in cases where transitions follow each other too rapidly to admit of the insertion of a fresh key-signature, to entirely omit a key-signature, and to rely on such accidentals only as are absolutely necessary?

As a case in point I give a few bars from a recently-published Nocturne composed for the pianoforte: (a) as the passage occurs in actual print, and (b) as it would appear if the key-signature were omitted. I may add that the extract is part of two lines of nine bars in which 106 notes require no fewer than 83 accidentals! but 43 of these accidentals are necessary solely for the purpose of contradicting the five-flat signature!!

The image contains two musical staves, (a) and (b), each with a treble and bass clef. Staff (a) is the original score, featuring a complex sequence of notes with numerous accidentals (sharps, flats, naturals) and dynamic markings including ten., p, mp, ten., espress., mf, and dolce.. Staff (b) is a revised version of the same passage, where the key signature has been omitted, and the notes are written with accidentals to indicate their pitch relative to the original key.

I feel sure if the plan suggested were adopted many intricate passages would be made much easier to read at sight, and the nature of the involved modulations would, I venture to think, appeal more quickly to the eye.

I enclose my card, but prefer to sign myself

Yours faithfully,

'MEZZO TERMINE.'

THE F SHARP IN HANDEL'S PASTORAL SYMPHONY ('MESSIAH').

DEAR SIR,—Dr. Cummings's article in the January issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES requires correction in one respect. The F sharp in the bass part of the 'Pastoral Symphony' appears in Breitkopf and Härtel's edition of 1803, the first in which Mozart's additions were incorporated; it is, therefore, a mistake to assert that Mozart left it out.

Yours faithfully,

Manchester, January 31, 1903.

W. B.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.

DEAR SIR,—Kindly allow an 'old boy' to thank you for your most interesting article on Salisbury Cathedral. In connection with this subject the following, taken from a 'Register of old Choristers' compiled by Rev. E. E. Dorling, late Master of the Choristers' School, may perhaps interest your readers:—

Extract from a small manuscript book in the handwriting of Walter Kerr Hamilton, Canon and Custos Puerorum, afterwards Bishop of Salisbury, labelled Choristers of Salisbury, 1851.

Rules which used to be pasted up in the Surplice Closet at Church:—

Rule 1.—A Choral Boy coming to Church with dirty hands or face shall forfeit two pence.

Rule 2.—A Choral Boy wearing his hat in Church shall forfeit two pence.

Rule 3.—A Choral Boy laughing, talking, or making a noise shall forfeit two pence.

Rule 4.—Either of the $\text{£}10$ Choral Boys not being at Singing School before bell goes fast shall forfeit three pence.

Rule 5.—The under $\text{£}10$ Choral Boys leaving any parts down in the Choir that are brought from the Organ Loft shall forfeit three pence.

Rule 6.—A Choral Boy coming to Church in a heat shall forfeit three pence.

Rule 7.—A Choral Boy kicking another in Church shall forfeit three pence.

Rule 8.—A Choral Boy banging the door on entering the Church shall forfeit three pence.

Rule 9.—A Choral Boy running into Church shall forfeit two pence.

Rule 10.—A Choral Boy seen throwing a stone shall forfeit three pence.

Rule 11.—A Choral Boy being late to Church, either morning or afternoon, shall forfeit three pence.

Rule 12.—Each forfeit doubled on Sundays.

Mr. Dorling, in commenting on these rules, says:—'By the kindness of Mr. John Harding' (who was Bishop's Boy from 1831 to 1832 and is, I believe, still living), 'a small manuscript relating to the forfeits has come into the possession of the compiler.'

'It runs as follows:—

"To John Harding.

"John Harding, 10d.; Charles Mott, 8d.; Francis Gilmour, 3d.; George Chitty, 3s. 2d.; Henry Richardson, 1s. 2d.; Charles Brown, 1s.; John Henry Bromage, 1s. 8d.; John Hibberd, 2s. 8d. The Forfits. "Charles Brown."

This is of interest as showing that in the Thirties the code of rules which Bishop Hamilton copied was not a dead letter; and as recalling the fact that at that date—indeed, between the years 1580 and 1851—the number of Choristers was eight. It also suggests the question—What small piece of Choristers' ritual is indicated by Charles Brown's signature? Why did the 6th boy make a return of the 'forfits' to the Bishop's Chorister?

Yours faithfully,

45, Alma Square, N.W.

EDMUND ROGERS.

February 7, 1903.

MRS. NEWMARCH ON BORODIN AND CUI.

At the meeting of the Musical Association on the 10th ult., Dr. Charles Maclean in the chair, Mrs. Newmarch read a paper entitled 'Borodin and Cui,' being the third of a series devoted to 'The development of National Opera in Russia.'

Alexander Borodin, born at St. Petersburg in 1834, was the illegitimate son of the Prince of Imeretia, one of the most beautiful of the old kingdoms of the Caucasus. He inherited, therefore, a strong sympathy with the sentiment and the music of the East. As a boy he was as gifted for music as for science, but eventually decided in favour of the latter, and became first an army doctor, and afterwards a distinguished professor of chemistry. He continued to practise music as an amateur until, at the age of twenty-eight, he met the composer Balakirev, who gave a more serious direction to his musical gifts. His first Symphony, in E flat major, displayed all the potential qualities of his genius, as well as his masterly use of the national style. Stassov, the celebrated art critic, urged Borodin to compose an epic opera, and supplied him with a rough plot taken from an early Slavonic rhapsody, 'The epic of the army of Igor.' Mrs. Newmarch gave some account of this remarkable prose-poem, which she thought might be compared for its national interest to the Arthurian Legends. After giving an outline of the libretto, she went on to describe the difficulties under which Borodin worked. The freshness and cohesiveness of 'Prince Igor' were quite remarkable when we remember that it was composed piecemeal, at intervals snatched between his daily round of laboratory work and boards of examination.

César Cui presented a complete contrast to Borodin. Both shared the lyrical tendency; but while Borodin's music was very national in style, Cui's French origin showed itself in all his compositions. Cui was born at Vilna, in Poland, in 1835. His father was a French officer who had dropped out of the retreat from Moscow in 1812. César Cui showed a precocious talent for music, but was sent to the School of Military Engineering, where he made a most successful course of study. He was afterwards appointed professor of fortification, and counted among his pupils the present Tsar, Nicholas II. Cui met Balakirev in 1856 and became his first disciple. His reputation as an operatic composer began with the performance in 1861 of 'William Ratcliff,' an opera founded on an early play by Heine. The subject was too melodramatic to please the realistic tastes of the Russians. The opera, as regards style, is a compromise between the lyrical operas of Glinka and the declamatory and realistic music-drama 'The Stone Guest' by Dargomijsky. Therefore Cui, who had held up the latter as a model in his critical articles, found himself assailed for inconsistency by his adversaries. The grace and tenderness of the music of the heroine Mary, the sincerity and warmth of emotion, which culminates in the passionate love-duet between Mary and Ratcliff, go far to atone for a crude libretto and many shortcomings in style and musical treatment. 'Ratcliff' was followed by a more mature work, 'Angelo,' based on a play by Victor Hugo. In this work, which was completed in 1874, Cui shows far more skill in the use of melodic recitative, and has raised his orchestration to a higher level than in any previous composition. The dramatic movement is treated with greater breadth and is more effective than in 'Ratcliff.' 'Angelo' seems to mark the zenith of Cui's power as an operatic composer. It was followed by a modification of his style. As Cui's military duties made increasing demands on his time, and his energy for great undertakings became less, he turned to the cult of small forms, and inspiration became secondary to elaborate workmanship. His style now loses much of its warmth and sincerity and becomes artificial and finical. Mrs. Newmarch enumerated Cui's operas—eight in all—and sketched their leading characteristics. Summing up his position as a composer, she found it somewhat paradoxical, for the following reasons:—First, although he was a staunch adherent of the Russian national school, the national element was rarely present in his own music. Secondly, while evidently more gifted as a vocal than as an instrumental composer, he reflected the methods, and even the mannerisms, of such composers as Chopin and Schumann. These were not the best models on which to found a broad and effective operatic style.

Mrs. Newmarch then referred to Cui as a critic. Although we owed him a debt of gratitude for calling our attention to the wonderful activity of the New Russian School, we must not accept his views as altogether comprehensive. He had devoted much time to the defence and propagation of this national school; but, paradoxically, it was just where the strongest manifestations of the national spirit had appeared—in Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakov—that his sympathy and judgment were most deficient.

The interest of the paper was much enhanced by the vocal illustrations beautifully rendered by Mrs. Henry J. Wood, accompanied on the pianoforte by her husband. Mrs. Wood sang Vladimir's 'Recitative and Cavatina' from Borodin's 'Prince Igor,' in her native tongue, and afterwards two examples of Cui's style, 'Chanson de Mariam' and 'Chanson Circassienne,' from the French version of his opera 'Le Prisonnier du Caucase.'

MORECAMBE MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

At the annual Open Night of the Morecambe Madrigal Society, which took place on the 20th ult., the general standard of the singing was well worthy of the Society's high reputation. The programme consisted of seventeen madrigals and part-songs, besides a verse of 'God save the King'; and the extraordinary variety of interest that marked the series as a whole challenged attention quite as much as the excellence of the singing in several individual cases. The grace and sweetness of the celebrated 'Cynthia,' by Croce, were rendered with entire success, and the character of Pearsall's nobly harmonised 'Great God of love' was also thoroughly well conveyed in the performance. Another bright modern composition showing the influence of the madrigal style which was exquisitely given was Sullivan's 'When love and beauty,' and in a lighter style Parry's 'Come, pretty wag' was a striking success. In obvious contrast with all the other pieces were the two part-songs by Brahms—the solemn 'Autumn,' and the more simply fanciful 'Vineta' in an earlier manner. These were both rendered with the insight and sympathy to be expected from a Society which has taken a leading part in making such treasures accessible to the British choral singer. 'Now, O now I needs must part,' by Dowland—the lutenist of Shakespeare's sonnet—had the interest of quaintness. This so-called madrigal, which has given rise to a weak modern hymn or metrical psalm tune, is not at all in the madrigal style, being completely homophonic and consisting in the main of a reiterated four-line stanza. The singing was throughout remarkable for good blend and balance, also for intelligent phrasing and rhythmical treatment. The only point to be regretted was that the backing of the stage, consisting of theatrical scenery, had a deadening effect on the voices. Mr. R. G. W. Howson conducted.

CHORAL COMPETITION AT QUEEN'S HALL.

What was described as a Grand Chair Eisteddfod was held at the Queen's Hall on the 18th ult. But no bard was chaired, and the real Hamlet of the play—which turned out to be an exciting one—was the competition by male-voice choirs for a prize of £50. Seven choirs competed, two composed of London Welshmen, and the others coming from Wales. The test-piece was a long and difficult dramatic chorus 'The Destruction of Pompeii,' by Mr. D. C. Williams. In this piece the composer has given ample opportunities for Welsh singers to give vent to their natural ardour and intense feeling. Owing to the complexity of the music several of the choirs had difficulty in keeping in tune.

Rhymney, under Mr. Daniel Owen, contrived to give a remarkably fine performance, technically correct, thrilling in its dramatic energy, and moreover in tune. This choir was awarded the prize, the London Welsh, South London Welsh, Rhondda and Abertillery choirs following close behind. The Gwent Choral Society, under Mr. Tom Stephens, gained the prize in the mixed-voice choirs, the test-piece being 'We never will bow down' (Handel), a chorus that, having done duty in hundreds of Welsh competitions, might very well be placed in an Index Expurgatorius as regards gatherings of this kind. The competition closed shortly before midnight. The hall was crowded by a warmly interested but somewhat uncritical audience. Mr. Daniel Price and Dr. McNaught adjudicated; Mr. David Hughes was the hard-worked and obliging honorary secretary.

London Concerts, Recitals, &c.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

It was satisfactory to see such a large audience at the Albert Hall on January 29, when the Royal Choral Society, under the spirited conductorship of Sir Frederick Bridge, gave a performance of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha'; for the work is one of the most picturesque compositions of modern times, and repetition increases esteem. The trilogy was performed in its entirety, and its interpretation may be said to have been the best secured by the Society. The choristers are now familiar with the score, and the expression infused into the choruses showed that they comprehended the spirit animating the music. The solo portions were effectively sung by Madame Sobrino, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Watkin Mills.

THE BROADWOOD CONCERTS.

The concerts which are surely destined to succeed under the ægis of Messrs. Broadwood have been really notable for the zeal with which they have been undertaken, and the energy with which they have been prosecuted. On the penultimate day of January, for example, Mr. Alberto Randegger's new Sonata for pianoforte and violin in E minor was produced at one of these concerts, and the new work assuredly demonstrated that young composer's very versatile ability. Mr. Randegger knows the value of being modern in his writing; he never of set purpose panders to the past; yet it would seem that in this composition he went to the older masters for his inspiration. In form, the work could not be objected to by the veriest admirer temporis acti. The technique is, however, distinguished by great ingenuity, and by a fine sentiment of instrumental rightness.

At the concert on the 12th ult., Mr. Cyril Scott's Quartet in E minor for pianoforte, violin, viola and violoncello was given for the first time. The work is perhaps a trifle 'long drawn out.' At times you feel that there should be a close, whereas—as in a fit of generosity—the composer presses continuation upon you. Still, the work is certainly both thoughtful and earnest. It has character too, and character always implies promise. It had the advantage also of a splendid interpretation. Herr Kreisler played wonderfully, and his companions, MM. Emil Kreuz and Ludwig Lebell, with Mr. Scott himself, were admirable; the third movement especially (Allegretto amabile) went with peculiar distinction. To sum up, one can hardly confess to an extreme enthusiasm in regard to this quartet. It is youthful in so far as the composer evidently considers that rejection is something of a superfluity. Experience alone teaches the value of selection. Mr. Lawrence Rea sang two Schubert songs and two Elgar songs with refinement, and the concert terminated with César Franck's lovely and meditative Quintet in F minor—a work so full of actual poignancy that it reminded one of Tennyson's 'Tears, idle tears.' The quintet was finely played by MM. Harold Bauer, Kreisler, Charles Jacoby, Emil Kreuz and Ludwig Lebell.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The concerts given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, on January 31 and the 14th ult., at Queen's Hall, only call for passing comment. At the former remarkably fine performances were given of Brahms's second Symphony in D and Tchaikovsky's 'Theme and Variations' from his third Suite, and Mr. Harold Bauer played with great brilliancy the pianoforte part of Schumann's 'Introduction and Allegro Appassionata' (Op. 92) and Liszt's 'Todtentanz.' Madame Felix Kraus was unable to fulfil her engagement, but Dr. Kraus sang two extra songs owing to his wife's absence. The chief feature of the second concert under notice was the performance of Mr. Eugen d'Albert's Violoncello Concerto in C (Op. 20), which had only once previously been performed in London, at the concert given by the Sunday Concert Society (also at Queen's Hall) on January 20, 1901. The work is in four sections, but is played through without break. The most pleasing is the Andante, which possesses melodic and expressive charm and is impressively approached. The solo part was beautifully played by Herr Hugo Becker who, it may be mentioned, was the soloist on its introduction into England by the Hallé Orchestra at Manchester on March 1, 1900. Mention is also due of the dramatic delivery by Miss Tita Brand, the daughter of Madame Marie Brema, of 'Bergliot,' with Grieg's impressive music. Highly-finished performances were secured of Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Mozart's 'Masonic' funeral music, the latter composed in 1785.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

One of the most memorable musical events of the past month was the first performance in England of M. Glazounov's seventh Symphony in F on the 17th ult. at the Royal College, under the conductorship of Sir Charles Stanford. The first and third movements, the latter a Scherzo, are pastoral in character and combine gaiety with idyllic grace and a freshness of diction that are very attractive. The Andante in D minor is built upon a chorale-like melody round which are woven most effective contrapuntal embellishments. The central section at a first hearing seemed somewhat too long, but in its entirety this number is impressive. The Finale is somewhat noisy, but relief is provided by a graceful second subject, and the movement brings the work to a vigorous and emphatic conclusion. The programme also included Herr Humperdinck's Cantata 'Das Glück von Edenhall,' and Brahms's Rhapsody for contralto, male-voice chorus and orchestra, the solo in the latter being excellently sung by Miss Edith B. Hall. Mention is also due of the clever violin playing of Mr. Haydn Wood in Vieuxtemps's Violin Concerto in D minor.

MISS MARIE HALL.

A most remarkable début was made at St. James's Hall on the 16th ult. by Miss Marie Hall. This young artist is manifestly so extraordinarily gifted that her ultimate position in the first rank of violinists would seem to be assured. Her executive ability is of the same kind as that of M. Kubelik, and is also combined with considerable expressive power. She was recalled six times after Tchaikovsky's Concerto in D, and at her conclusion of Wieniawski's 'Faust' Fantasia she had to return no less than nine times to the platform. Miss Hall was most sympathetically supported by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood. We give some biographical particulars and a portrait of this gifted young lady on p. 173.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

The most notable of the concerts given by these societies at Queen's Hall was that which took place on the 11th ult., when the King and the Prince of Wales attended the smoking concert of the Royal Amateurs. Doubtless stimulated by the Royal presence, the band, under the direction of Mr. Ernest Ford, played with remarkable verve, particularly in the Overture to Weber's 'Oberon' and in Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' Suite. Herr Max Wolfstahl, a young violinist not yet twenty years of age, played with taste and brilliancy, but he has yet much to learn. The vocalists were the Misses De Solla and Mr. Kennerley Rumford. The Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Arthur W. Payne (orchestra) and Mr. Munro Davison (choir), gave an excellent concert on the 3rd ult., to which distinction was imparted by the revival of M. Saint-Saëns's second Symphony in A minor (Op. 55), a well-written and pleasing work dating from 1864. The Strolling Players held their concert on the 12th ult., when the most important works performed were Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and the overture to Mozart's 'Magic Flute.' Mr. William Shakespeare ably conducted.

Miss Elise Joran's concert at St. James's Hall on the 4th ult. was chiefly remarkable for her revival of M. Moszkowski's Pianoforte Concerto in E (Op. 59), in which she played with great brilliancy. An excellent orchestra was skilfully conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, who during the evening played the accompaniments to his cycle of 'Four love songs,' sung for the first time in public by Madame Pauline Joran, sister to the concert-giver.

Mr. Landon Ronald was also the conductor of Miss Gladys Naylor-Carne's concert in the same hall on the 2nd ult. This young lady, who comes from Cornwall, and is not yet out of her teens, appeared in the dual capacity of pianist and violinist; as the former in Tchaikovsky's Concerto in B flat minor, and as the latter in Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor. In both these works she exhibited remarkable executive ability for one so young, but there can be little doubt that she would be wiser to devote herself more particularly either to the pianoforte or to the violin.

Miss Ethel Barns and Mr. Charles Phillips gave their third chamber concert on the 10th ult., at Bechstein Hall, at which was played for the first time in London two 'Novelletten,' by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor. These proved to be arrangements of two of his Haytian Dances, written for a string quartet, with triangle and tambourine ad lib. The 'Novelletten' are characteristic and engaging pieces, and may safely be recommended to amateurs. Mr. Charles Phillips sang for the first time Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's vigorous and effective setting of Walt Whitman's stirring lines, 'Beat, beat, drums.' Mention is also due of two clever new songs, respectively entitled 'Renaissance' and 'The wild, red roses of Canada,' from the pen of Mr. R. H. Walthew.

A Catholic Choir Festival was held at Queen's Hall on the 16th ult., when meritorious performances were given of Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' and Gounod's 'Gallia.' In the former, Miss Agnes Nicholls sang the soprano solos with devotional fervour. The other soloists were Miss Florence Power, Mr. Elliston Webb, and Mr. Walter Dolphin. Mr. Arthur Barclay, musical director of the Brompton Oratory, who conducted, secured an excellent rendering of Thomas Wingham's Concert Overture in F.

Handel's Coronation anthem, 'Zadok the Priest,' formed the chief feature of the annual concert given by the London Sunday School Choir at the Royal Albert Hall on the 14th ult. The choir, which numbered 1,000 voices, sang with good effect in the vocal portion of Handel's majestic work, and in the Sanctus chorus from 'Elijah.' The orchestra, conducted by Mr. David M. Davis, played Mendelssohn's Overture in C (Op. 24), originally composed for a military band, and the soloists were Madame Antoinette Sterling and Mr. Andrew Black. The choir sang admirably under the baton of Mr. William Whiteman, and Mrs. Mary Layton and Mr. Horace G. Holmes presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively.

The English Ladies' Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. J. S. Liddle, gave a most successful concert on the 18th ult. at St. James's Hall. The programme was most commendable, for it included Schubert's rarely-heard Overture in D, Gade's Symphony in B flat (Op. 20), and Sir Hubert Parry's attractive Suite for small orchestra in F. The last-named work was in particular excellently rendered under the composer's direction. The vocalists were Mdle. Rose Stelle and Mr. Thomas Meux.

A new cantata entitled 'Once upon a time,' by Madame Liza Lehmann, was produced by the National Sunday League at the Queen's Hall on the 22nd ult. with every indication of popular favour. The librettist, Mr. G. H. Jessop, in telling very quaintly the old story of the Sleeping Beauty, verges as near to operatic treatment as the cantata form will allow. The story is eked out by a narrator, in a speaking part occasionally accompanied. There is no great subtlety in the music; it is thematic in texture, characteristically graceful and imaginative, often naive and sometimes dramatic. A dainty waltz chorus showed the composer at her best. We are not convinced that the pianoforte part, which was much in evidence, is adequate in the circumstances. One longed for more orchestral colour. Miss Lydia Nervil, Miss Marie Brema and Mr. Lloyd Chandos sang the solos, the first-named especially gaining success. Miss Marion Terry read the narrator's part with great charm, and Madame Lehmann presided at the pianoforte. Mr. Allen Gill conducted as usual skilfully.

Unstinted praise is due to Miss Edith Robinson for the excellence of her programmes and their interpretation at her historical violin recitals on the 3rd and 10th ult. at Bechstein Hall. Her renderings showed sympathy with many schools, and her technical ability excited esteem. Mrs. Hutchinson assisted at the first, and Mr. Francis Tovey at the second recital.

Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton gave an interesting historical recital of chamber music on January 27 at the Brinsmead Galleries. The selection included a sonata in A for violin, flute and violoncello, with harpsichord, by Dr. William Boyce.

Other pianoforte recitals worthy of record were those given by Mr. Leonard Borwick on the 6th and 13th ult., at St. James's Hall, which certainly have increased his artistic reputation; Signor Busoni on the 12th ult. at Bechstein Hall; Madame Kleeberg on the 4th and 11th ult. at the Sallé Erard; the advent of Senor José Vianne da Motta, an accomplished Spanish pianist, on the 11th ult. at Bechstein Hall, and his second recital on the 18th ult.; and Mr. Neville G. Swainson on the 17th ult. at the same hall. Herr Kreisler's violin recital at St. James's Hall on the 9th ult., which provided an hour and a-half of continuous pleasure, should also be recorded.

Mr. Edward G. Croager's Musical Society (formerly known as the West Hampstead Choral and Orchestral Society) gave a concert at the Hampstead Conservatoire on the 17th ult. The choir sang with excellent effect Hiller's 'Song of Victory,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Gade's delightful 'Spring's Message,' and Eaton Fanning's choral ballad 'The Miller's Wooing,' and were well supported by an efficient orchestra. Miss Edith Patching (an excellent soprano) sang the solo in the 'Song of Victory,' and the other vocalists were Mr. Gervas Cooper and Mr. Edgar Coyle. Mr. Charles Fry contributed two musical recitations, ably accompanied by Mr. Croager.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' preceded by the same composer's Overture to 'Macbeth,' at the Crystal Palace on the 14th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Eleanor Cleaver, Mr. Whitworth Mitton (who appeared in place of Mr. Henry Beaumont), Mr. Fred. H. Gould and Mr. Charles Knowles. The choruses were admirably sung, and we have again to acknowledge the care exercised by the painstaking conductor of this excellent Society—Mr. Arthur Fagge. The organist was Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock.

The Ealing Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Victor Williams, gave their second concert of the season on January 28. The programme contained some interesting works, the orchestra in particular distinguishing itself. The choral works consisted of the 'Ave Maria,' 'Vintage Song' and 'Finale' from Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' and Schumann's 'Gipsy Life.' The solo vocalist was Miss Mary Lund.

The Finsbury Choral Association gave an excellent performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' music on the 19th ult., in which the chorus greatly distinguished themselves. Mr. Allen Gill conducted.

Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' was successfully performed by the Stephens Memorial Choral Society, North Finchley, on the 12th ult., under the careful direction of Mr. G. H. Powell.

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, February 9.

The interest of music lovers in the American metropolis is chiefly occupied just now with what may be called the operatic problem. Mr. Maurice Grau's health has broken down, and he has been commanded by his physician to quit work. The gentlemen associated with him in the organization known as the Maurice Grau Opera Company are unwilling to renew the lease of the Metropolitan Opera House unless they can have Mr. Grau's services, and we are therefore all at sea touching the future of the opera. The owners of the Opera House do not care to repeat the experiment which they were forced into eighteen years ago at the financial failure of the first season, and undertake to give opera on their own account; nor are they willing to give the enterprise to the highest bidder. They want a guaranty that the entertainments shall remain of the highest order, and for such a guaranty they must rely upon the character, skill and experience of the next manager. There have been numerous applicants, but few have seemed to have the requisite status. As yet speculation alone is possible. The directors are proceeding with the utmost deliberation, feeling that come what may opera is assured for next season at least.

'Ernani' has been revived after a silence of nineteen years, and Madame Sembrich won a pretty triumph in it; but popular interest oozed away with the first representation. The most substantial individual success seems to have been achieved by Madame Sembrich in 'La Fille du Régiment,' and Madame Nordica in the Wagner dramas. There has been one serial representation of the dramas constituting 'The Ring of the Nibelung,' and another is announced outside of the subscription. The performances have been good musically, but poor in nearly every other respect—the same old tale of slipshod stage management.

The operatic situation here also threatens to complicate a movement which has for its purpose the betterment of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society. This venerable institution elected Mr. Walter Damrosch conductor at the close of the last season. Its performances have suffered from the usual defects of bands with organized membership. Players will grow old, and, as President Jackson remarked about the Civil Service, touching men in office, 'few die and none resigns.' Mr. Damrosch thought that a betterment might be brought about by the establishment of a fund to be applied to the engagement of better artists in place of some who had manifestly outlived their best usefulness, and the steady employment of the orchestra—making it permanent in the sense that the Boston and Chicago orchestras are permanent. His appeal received a generous response, about 20,000 dollars per year for four years being subscribed within a few days; but just as the necessary negotiations between the committee representing the subscribers and the directors of the Society are about to begin, comes the intelligence that Mr. Damrosch, who distinguished himself some years ago by directing a very successful season of opera, has been invited to put in a proposition for the lease of the opera house. He cannot simultaneously be director of the opera and conductor of the reorganized Philharmonic Society, and it is not yet known to what extent the offer of help to the concert institution is a personal tribute to him. Neither have the directors of the Society indicated that they are willing to make any changes in their organization. So this, too, remains suspended like the operatic question.

The recent concerts of the Philharmonic have introduced but a single novelty—the first part of César Franck's 'Psyché,' heretofore unknown on this side of the ocean, and, indeed, seldom played in Paris since it was first brought forward. Mr. Sam Franko's Concerts of Old Music, of which there is always something to be said, are meeting with more than their former success, having benefited somewhat from the interest aroused by Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch, whom he introduced with his wife at the first concert. Mr. Dolmetsch's archaic performances won an unexpected degree of popularity in public as well as in private. Since he has taken his departure for home three foreign artists have effected their entrances on the American concert platform effectively. They are Miss Ada Crossley, contralto, Madame Roger-Miclos, French pianist, and Herr Hugo Heermann, German violinist.

H. E. KREHBIEL.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, February 15.

The most important musical event of the last few weeks has been the first performance of Anton Bruckner's ninth Symphony—a most meritorious and, let it be said, highly successful venture on the part of the two societies engaged therein, viz., the Concert Verein and the Wagner Society. Capellmeister Loewe, who some days previously had interpreted the complicated work at the pianoforte to an invited audience, conducted the performance from memory, in a manner which elicited general admiration. The Symphony having been left unfinished by Bruckner, consists of only three movements—a pathetic Allegro in D minor, a highly original Scherzo in the same key, and a blissful Adagio in E major. In accordance with the known desire of the deceased composer, his Te Deum was produced in the place of the projected final movement. I am inclined to consider the first and second sections of the work as forming the very best of all Bruckner's productions. They are entirely free from those eccentric, semi-rhapsodical elements with which he has not unjustly been reproached by critics of his earlier compositions. The performance created an immense enthusiasm. How much of this may have been due to feelings of veneration for the Viennese master and the splendid interpretation given to his work, the future only can show.

Another sensation, though of an entirely different nature, was the first appearance of a young English artist, Miss Marie Hall. Trained at the school of Sevcik, in Prague, where Kubelik and other distinguished violinists of the present day have pursued their studies, the lady has developed powers which should ere long place her in the front rank of living violinists. Coming before her audience with a programme in which figured some of the most exacting pieces written for the instrument, it was difficult to know which to admire most—her stupendous technique, her delicate and perfectly unaffected musical feeling and interpretative insight, or the rhythmic verve of her playing, the latter being indeed a quality rarely exhibited by executants of the gentler sex.

A young Viennese musician, Von Arbter, has recently introduced himself most favourably in musical circles as the composer of a pianoforte sonata, a very pleasing string quartet, and some clever songs. All these compositions are most musician-like productions, displaying a noteworthy talent from which greater things may be looked for in the future.

At one of the recent concerts of the Philharmonic Society, the first performance was given of a symphony by Hermann Graedener, the esteemed professor of composition at our Conservatorium, which, like previous works from his pen, proved to be a serious and ably written composition. Another novelty was the production at a concert of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde of a charming and characteristic chorus for female voices, with orchestra, entitled 'Elfen und Zwerge,' by Robert Fuchs, likewise a professor at the Conservatorium, which was received with great favour.

A new string quartet by Robert Fuchs recently obtained a complete success on its first performance by the Ladies' Quartet Party, led by Frau Roeger-Soldat.

The revival of Weber's 'Euryanthe' at the Imperial Theatre has met with the general interest and grateful recognition of opera-goers. The noble work had not been given here for so long a time that it presented itself practically in the light of a novelty to the great majority of the audience, and its interpretation, under the direction of Herr Mahler, was indeed a magnificent one.

Mesdames Foerster-Lauterer and Mildenburg, and Herren Slezak and Demuth were most excellent representatives of the principal parts, both vocally and histrionically.

A passing allusion may be made to a 'youthful prodigy' of the legitimate order, who has won the hearts of the Viennese public, in the person of Master Florizel von Reuter, of Geneva. This highly gifted and withal most perfectly unassuming boy-violinist of ten, who recently gave some performances here, certainly bids fair, under favourable conditions, to develop into a great artist.

MANDYCZEWSKI.

(The letter from Belfast will be found on p. 194.)

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Halford Concerts Society resumed in the Town Hall on January 27 with Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, the Prelude and Finale from Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius,' and Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, a gloomy programme, but finely performed. On the 10th ult. Herr Fritz Kreisler was the soloist in Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and his playing made a great impression. An overture, 'In Autumn,' by Norman O'Neill, who conducted the performance, was well received. Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony was beautifully played under Mr. Halford's direction.

The Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, gave the second concert of the series organized by Messrs. Stockley and Sabin, on the 16th ult. The programme comprised Elgar's overture, 'Cockaigne,' Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini,' the 'Till Eulenspiegel' of Richard Strauss, and the 'Tannhäuser' overture, none of which were new here. Mr. Max Mossel charmed the audience with his playing of the solo part in Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, and Madame Marie Brema gave a grand rendering of the closing scene from 'Götterdämmerung.'

On the 12th ult. the Festival Choral Society gave a splendid performance of Beethoven's Mass in D, a work not heard here since the Festival of 1861. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. H. Lane Wilson. The programme also included the second symphony of Brahms, and the Prelied and Finale from 'Die Meistersinger.' Dr. Sinclair conducted. On the 19th ult. the City Choral Society brought its season to a close with an excellent performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' and a miscellaneous selection including Tchaikovsky's Overture '1812.' The vocal principals were Madame Sobrino, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Charles Tree. Mr. F. W. Beard conducted, and Mr. C. W. Perkins was organist at both concerts.

Chamber concerts have been numerous. On January 30 Messrs. Holden-White (pianoforte), Percy Sharman (violin), and Bertie Withers (violoncello), gave an excellent programme in the Temperance Hall to a mere handful of auditors—the artists were not known. At the fourth Harrison Concert in the Town Hall on the 2nd ult., the Willy Hess Quartet, with Mr. Ben Davies as vocalist and Miss Sant Angelo pianist, presented a familiar programme of chamber music.

The Chamber Concert Society, on the 3rd ult., produced Sinding's Pianoforte Quintet (Op. 5) and a Violin Sonata by Enrico Bossi. The Max Mossel Quartet, and Signor Consolo (pianist) and Miss Haidée St. George (vocalist), were the artists engaged. Mr. Max Mossel's drawing room concerts were continued on the 5th ult. Madame Clotilde Kleeberg, Herr Hugo Becker, and Herr Gustav Friedrich (vocalist), gave a delightful programme of short pieces, the only concerted number being Beethoven's Violoncello Sonata in G minor. Dr. Rowland Winn was the accompanist. The Historical Chamber Concerts were resumed in the Temperance Hall on the 14th ult.; Mendelssohn, Gade, and Schumann were drawn upon for the programme.

The Saturday Evening Concerts in the Town Hall calling for notice were the Choral Union's performance of the 'Messiah' (January 24), conductor, Mr. Thomas Facer; and the Midland Musical Society's rendering of Cowen's 'The Sleeping Beauty,' on the 7th ult., with Mr. A. J. Cotton, conductor. A new choral society has been formed at Northfield, now practically a suburb of Birmingham, and on the 11th ult. the first concert was held, when Mr. Wymark Stratton conducted a very creditable performance of Cowen's 'St. John's Eve.'

The first meeting of the General Committee of the Birmingham Festival took place in the Council House on the 19th ult., Earl Howe presiding. So far, the only new work announced is Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles,' but Bach's Mass in B minor is to be included in the scheme.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bristol Æolian Male Choir on the 2nd ult. gave a concert at Bedminster Town Hall. There was a large attendance, and the glees, part-songs and choruses rendered were much appreciated. In addition to the pieces sung by the choir, songs were contributed by Miss Evelyn Gerrish and pianoforte solos nicely played by Miss Gertrude Williams. The conductor was Mr. F. H. Simpson.

An interesting scheme was prepared by the City Road Choral Society, which on the 3rd ult. held its annual concert under the direction of Mr. Arthur E. Allis. The first part of the concert consisted of Barnby's 'Rebekah,' a work rarely heard in the city. Miss Evelyn Gerrish, Mr. H. L. Wensley and Mr. J. W. Davey were the soloists. The accompaniments were given on a pianoforte and organ by Mr. W. S. Palmer and Mr. F. Southby respectively.

The first concert of the season of the Clifton Choral Society, of which Mr. F. W. Rootham is conductor, was held at the Victoria Rooms on the 11th ult. In addition to the choir there was an efficient band composed of Bristol and Bath players, Mr. F. S. Gardner holding the principal first violin. Madame Medora Henson was the solo vocalist. Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' and Sir Charles Stanford's 'The Revenge' were the principal works presented, and they were admirably rendered. The performance by the orchestra was deserving of praise, and besides executing the accompaniments to the productions named, they played Grieg's Overture 'In Autumn,' Weber's Overture to 'Oberon,' the Suite 'Casse-Noisette' by Tchaikovsky, Wagner's overture to 'Tannhäuser,' and 'Huldigungsmarsch.'

The second of the Clifton Chamber Concerts was held at the Victoria Rooms on the 12th ult., the players being Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Hubert Hunt and Maurice Alexander (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Adequate performances were afforded of Beethoven's Quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4); Schubert's Fantasia in C major (Op. 159) for pianoforte and violin; and the Pianoforte Quintet in F minor by Brahms (Op. 34). Madame Bertha Wise was the vocalist.

The dramatic concert of the Bristol Choral Society at Colston Hall on the 14th ult. was so largely attended that the building was packed, and many persons had to be refused admission. The attraction was a rendering of Gounod's 'Faust,' including the 'Brocken' scene, with the action that takes place upon the stage. The following artists of the Carl Rosa Company appeared: Madame Lucile Hill (Margaria), Mr. Robert Cunningham (Faust), Mr. Haigh Jackson (Valentine), and Mr. Alexander Bevan (Mephistopheles). Other characters were taken by members of the Society—viz., Miss Amy Perry (Siebel), Miss Edith Evans (Martha), and Mr. F. Beyer (Wagner). The choir and band numbered 600, the instrumentalists being accommodated on the floor of the hall, as the platform space immediately in front of the choir was reserved for the action of the principal vocalists, who appeared in costume. Mr. Riseley conducted a performance which afforded the utmost gratification to the auditors, who were lavish in their applause.

The programme for the Ladies' Night of the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society on the 19th ult. was noticeable for the new compositions given. Mr. George Riseley, as usual, was the general conductor, but two other musicians attended to direct the rendering of their own productions. Mr. C. Lee Williams had composed and dedicated to the choir 'Dormi, Jesu!' a charming slumber song, and 'Tally Ho!' a spirited setting of verses which appeared in the 'Sportsman's Vocal Cabinet,' 1830. He also directed the interpretation of his 'Encouragement to a lover,' words by Sir John Suckling, and 'Lost time,' a favourite with the vocalists, and written by him for them some years ago. Dr. Horatio Parker had been asked to contribute a piece to the Society's scheme, and he sent a beautiful composition, 'The Lamp in the West,' which he dedicated to the members. The other novelty was 'Peace and Crown,' by Mr. C. R. Fothergil, a local organist.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave its second concert for this season on January 23, too late for notice in last month's issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. The programme included Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor, the solo part being finely played by Miss Annie Lord, a talented Dublin young lady and a pupil of Signor Esposito, the conductor of the Society. Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music was also played, and the concert ended with the Vorspiel to 'Lohengrin' and the Overture to 'Die Meistersinger.'

The Orpheus Choral Society, under the baton of Dr. J. C. Culwick, on the 10th ult. gave their second concert, at which Wesley's five-part motet 'Exultate Domine' was the pièce de résistance. The soloists were Mrs. Jerome Cuthbert, soprano, and Mons. H. Verbrugghen, violin.

The Dublin Glee Singers, with Mr. Joseph Seymour as conductor, gave a concert on January 22 of glees and part-songs, including the late Sir Robert Stewart's 'Merry Bells' and some of Dr. Jozé's pleasant arrangements of Irish melodies. Mr. Randal Woodhouse, tenor, and Miss Victoria Delany, violinist, were the soloists.

Great interest has been roused by Mr. Edward Martyn's magnificent gift of £10,000 to endow a choir in Marlborough Street Pro-Cathedral to sing, for the first time in Ireland, church music a capella—to this sum Archbishop Walsh has added another £10,000. The arrangements in connection with this endowment are under the control of a committee of five persons, of whom Mr. Edward Martyn is one. The only condition attached to his gift is that nothing but a capella music is to be sung in the Cathedral. The choir consists of between thirty and forty boys, four tenors, two baritones and two basses, with Mr. Vincent O'Brien as choirmaster.

The prizes in the Composers' Competition in connection with this year's 'Feis Ceoil' have just been adjudicated upon by Sir Walter Parratt. The chief prizes are awarded to W. Harvey Pellissier for his Cantata 'Connla-of-the-Golden-Hair,' and to the Rev. W. Houston Collisson for his orchestral suite 'Rosáleen.'

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the ninth orchestral concert, Edinburgh was given the opportunity of gauging the powers of Mr. Henry J. Wood as a conductor, Dr. Cowen being engaged elsewhere. The 'Egmont' Overture, Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2, and the Prelude and Liebestod from 'Tristan' were the chief items in a fine programme. Conductor and orchestra were thoroughly en rapport, and overwhelming applause greeted their joint efforts. The tenth concert was made specially interesting by the performance of Dr. Cowen's 'Scandinavian' Symphony and the first hearing of Dr. Elgar's two pieces 'Dream Children.' These charming works were beautifully rendered and warmly welcomed. Mdlle. Olitzka was the vocalist, and made a distinguishing appearance. The last concert of the series was devoted almost entirely to Wagner, the exception being Raff's weird 'Leonore' Symphony, which has not been heard here for a number of years, and at the close ovations were accorded to the conductor, soloists, and band. By its work during the past season the Scottish Orchestra has maintained, and even enhanced, its great reputation. Its constituent elements have never been better, and the performances have been characterised by brilliancy, refinement, and abundant emotional feeling.

The Amateur Orchestral Society's second concert proved that under Mr. Collinson's careful guidance the members are steadily improving in their art and gaining in their power of clear exposition.

The popular concerts of Messrs. Paterson, the Sunday Society, and the Central Halls Company have been too numerous for individual mention, but the good work they are doing among the masses is gratefully acknowledged by all music-lovers among us.

(From a Correspondent.)

Mr. Moonie's Choir gave its seventh annual concert in the Music Hall on the evening of the 6th ult. The works performed were the 13th scene of Max Bruch's 'Odysseus' and Verdi's 'Requiem.' This was the first performance of the 'Requiem' in Edinburgh, and makes another on the list of important works which Mr. Moonie has introduced to our city. In their interpretation of the two works the choir fully maintained their reputation for artistic choral-singing—the earnestness, unanimity of sentiment and variety of tone-colour for which this choir are famed produce effects too seldom evidenced in choral performances. The soloists were Madame Alice Esty, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Trevor Evans, and Mr. Robert Burnett, all of whom gave a most sympathetic interpretation of their music. The orchestra,—a splendid band gathered from various parts of the country—under the leadership of Mr. Winram, performed their part of the evening's work in a manner eminently praiseworthy in every respect. Mr. J. A. Moonie conducted with his usual enthusiasm and artistic insight.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In the absence of Dr. Cowen, Mr. Henry J. Wood occupied the conductor's desk at the twelfth concert on January 27, under conditions which made the event a notable one—viz., the band in excellent form and the programme peculiarly congenial to the conductor. The opening number was Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, which was splendidly played, but the effort of the evening was Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor. As an interpreter of the Russian master's music, Mr. Wood rightly holds a very high place, and his reading of the Symphony, although different from what we are accustomed to by reason of the very free use of tempo rubato, was a remarkable one. The remaining items on the programme were Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2, the Prelude and Finale from 'Tristan and Isolde,' and songs artistically sung by Miss Gleeson-White. At the thirteenth concert, on the 3rd ult., Dr. Cowen secured a remarkably fine performance of Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C, and a selection from Glazounov's heavily-scored suite de ballet 'The Seasons,' the latter being a novelty, and Mdlle. Rosa Olitzka made an excellent appearance as vocalist. The last concert of the present series took place on the 10th ult., when Parts 1 and 2 of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' and Richard Strauss's 'Wanderer's Storm Song' (first time of performance here) were given by the Choral Union. In Coleridge-Taylor's delightful music, notably in 'The Death of Minnehaha,' the chorus achieved a great success, but the 'Storm Song' proved a task too great for the Society as at present constituted. The solo music was excellently given by Miss Emily Squire and Messrs. Whitworth Mitton and Daniel Price. Mr. Mitton's fine rendering of 'Onaway, awake,' being received with special favour. Mr. Bradley, whose services as chorusmaster are invaluable, conducted the performance with great ability.

Crowded and enthusiastic audiences have been the rule at the Saturday Popular Orchestral Concerts this season, and the management have been successful in providing interesting and attractive programmes. Among the items we may single out for special mention this month are Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration,' two movements from David Stephen's Trio for oboe, horn, and pianoforte, and Mr. F. Siegl's appearance as solo violinist. Strauss's work gains by repeated hearings, and Dr. Cowen obtained capital response from the band at the concert on January 31. The Trio, which gained the Lesley Alexander Prize in 1901, is the work of a gifted local musician, and is a very clever piece of chamber music. Although losing in effect through being performed in a large concert hall, the work was well received, especially the last movement, which is founded on two well-known Scottish songs. Mr. Siegl, who shares the leader's desk with Mr. Sons, received quite an ovation for his playing of the Adagio and Finale from Wieniawski's Violin Concerto.

At the annual plébiscite concert on the 13th ult. the programme included Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony (which headed the poll), Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture and 'Nut-Cracker' Suite, Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration' (the third performance this season), and the introduction to the third act of 'Lohengrin.' The management announce an extra concert to be given in May, at which the Joachim Quartet will sustain the programme. The season which has just closed must be regarded as one of the most successful for many years, and Dr. Cowen is to be warmly congratulated on the all-round excellence of the Scottish Orchestra's performances.

Associated with the Scottish Orchestra, the Paisley Choral Union gave Parts 1 and 2 of 'Hiawatha' on January 30, but the performance failed to reach the standard attained at previous concerts. Mr. Lloyd Chandos achieved some distinction in the solo music, and Mr. James Barr was at his accustomed post in the conductor's desk.

Under the indefatigable leadership of Mr. John Cullen the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society continues to show steady advance towards artistic excellence. The Society's performance of Part 1 of Haydn's 'Creation,' and Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride,' on the 16th ult., was one of much merit, the choruses being sung with great crispness and verve, and giving evidence of painstaking preparation. The accompaniments were carefully played by a full band, led by Mr. Daly, and Miss Ethel Wood and Messrs. Henry Brearley and Ivor Foster gave a good account of themselves in the solo music. On the 17th ult. the students of Notre Dame Training College gave a public concert, the programme of which, both with respect to selection and execution, was unusually fine. The chief numbers were Wilfred Bendall's cantata for female voices, 'The Lady of Shalott,' Schubert's 'Sérénade' for alto solo and chorus, De Rillé's 'The Martyrs of the Arena,' and Riga's 'La triple devise,' all of which were sung with that beauty of blending, phrasing, and enunciation which so characterises the choral music of this College. Some instrumental items were no less successfully performed, and the accomplished teachers who are charged with the music of the College are to be congratulated on their splendid work.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the concert given at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on the 6th ult., by the Gloucester Instrumental Society, under the direction and conductorship of Mr. E. G. Woodward, the programme included Auber's 'Zanetta' Overture, Wieniawski's Concerto No. 2 in D minor for violin and orchestra, M. Henri Verbrugghen soloist, Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and Elgar's 'Sevanilla.' Herr Verbrugghen also played in faultless style Sarasate's 'Zigeunerweisen,' for which he was enthusiastically recalled. The vocalist was Madame Bertha Wise, the accompaniments being shared by Madame Amy Watson and Mr. A. W. H. Hulbert. Mr. E. G. Woodward has played no small part in the local activity in regard to orchestral music in the city of Gloucester.

The Cheltenham Philharmonic Society gave a successful concert in the Winter Gardens, Cheltenham, on the 18th ult. The orchestra of seventy performers, conducted by Mr. C. J. Phillips, performed the following selections: Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture, Mozart's Symphony in G minor, Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodie No. 1, the Rakoczy March from Berlioz's 'Faust,' Tchaikovsky's Overture 'Solennelle,' 1812, Wagner's 'Träume,' 'Tannhäuser' Overture, and 'Kaiser' March, and Schubert's 'Moments Musicaux' (for strings). Mr. Dalton Baker, a young baritone with a voice of good power and compass, sang the 'Clown's Prologue' from 'I Pagliacci' (Leoncavallo) and 'The Swordsman' (Wallace) with great success.

Two musical societies have been formed in Stroud this season—the Choral, and the Orchestral Society. Their object is to unite all the different musical interests of the district into one body, and already good work has been done in this direction. Two concerts were given on the 19th ult. In the afternoon there were performed part of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite, Mozart's Overture 'Zauberflöte,' and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March. In the evening the 'Messiah' was given by a band and chorus numbering over 150. The soloists were Miss Maggie Davies, Mrs. G. W. Lane, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Robert Radford, and Mr. J. Edis Tidnum conducted the performances. The Societies have met with hearty support from residents to the neighbourhood, and have commenced what we believe will be a career of great usefulness. May all success attend their efforts!

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The eighth programme put forward on January 27 by the Philharmonic Society was of much interest. It contained Brahms's 'Tragic' Overture (Op. 81), for which Dr. Cowen obtained a distinguished rendering; Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor (Op. 16), the solo part being in the able hands of Mr. William Backhaus; Cowen's 'Scandinavian' Symphony and Rubinstein's Dances from 'Bal Costumé' (Suite No. 2). Mr. Ffrangcon Davies sang Rossini's 'Largo al factotum' and Löwe's Ballade 'Edward.' At the concert given on the 10th ult., Cowen's 'Coronation Ode,' Strauss's Tone Poem 'Don Juan,' Rameau's Suite 'Castor and Pollux,' Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien,' Arthur Hervey's bright and pleasing overture 'Youth,' and Weber's 'Oberon' Overture were performed. The solo in the 'Ode' was admirably sung by Miss Perceval Allen.

The Orchestral Society resumed operations on the 7th ult., when Mr. Rodewald presented an attractive programme. Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' Overture, the first movement of Joachim's Hungarian Concerto, in which Mr. Alfred Ross—a local violinist with deservedly far more than a merely local reputation—admirably interpreted the solo part, the love-duet from 'Die Walküre,' in which Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Webster Millar joined, Stanford's First Irish Rhapsody, and Strauss's Tone-Poem 'Death and Transfiguration,' completed the scheme.

On the 12th ult. there was given at the College of Music a rendering of Mendelssohn's 'Athalie,' in which Miss Amy Leedham, Miss Edith Henry, Miss Marion Henshaw, and Miss Lizzie Emsley took part, together with an orchestra under the skilful leadership of Mr. Carl Courvoisier, while Mr. W. I. Argent conducted.

The appearance of the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society at Bootle on January 27 attracted a large gathering of those who are in especial interested in part-singing. Under the direction of Mr. Herbert Whittaker a well-varied programme was worked through. An event of high interest and considerable musical worth occurred on January 26 at the Concert Hall, Liscard, when at Mr. C. Heinecke's concert there appeared the Liverpool Ladies' Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Theodore Lawson. The solo pianists were Miss M. Grierson and Miss M. Beddome, the violinist, Miss Minnie Wise, and Miss Amy Leedham was the vocalist.

Considerable influence is at work in the matter of the 'Liverpool Municipal Orchestra,' the movement towards the organization of which I chronicled in my last letter. The pros and cons are being discussed energetically, but at the time of writing nothing definite has been decided.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the thirteenth Hallé Concert of the present season, held on January 22, the numbers were large, no doubt on account of the 'Symphonie Pathétique'—the only tolerably recent orchestral work that the greater public of Manchester has taken to its bosom. It has not been so terribly hackneyed here as in London, and there was no suggestion of staleness in the performance that Dr. Richter obtained from the orchestra. On the same occasion an excellent first performance was given of Stanford's 'Irish Rhapsody,' the racy themes and zestful rhythms of which found considerable favour. Mr. Stenhammar, a Scandinavian pianist, introduced his own Piano-forte Concerto, which proved to be a work of some fanciful and poetic charm, though without strong originality. His playing was on a par with the composition—fluent and effective enough, but falling short of masterly quality in the tone production. Beethoven's sombre 'Egmont' Overture was the opening piece. On January 29 the concert opened with a faultless rendering of the 'Zauberflöte' Overture, and Max Bruch's 'Sérénade Concerto' for violin was introduced by Mr. Willy Hess who, together with the orchestra, brought out all that is best in the composition. The real success of Mr. Hess's playing at this concert was obtained in the great Chaconne, which he played in masterly style. Sir A. C. Mackenzie's 'Cricket on the Hearth' Overture found no great favour, but Dvorák's D minor Symphony—not heard at these concerts for a long time before—astonished by the splendour of the orchestration and the inexhaustible wealth of the composer's invention. The freedom and finish of the performance were alike remarkable. The fifteenth concert on the 5th ult. brought the annual 'Elijah' performance, in which the choir and orchestra distinguished themselves, and Mr. Webster Millar—a singer trained in Manchester—gave the tenor solos with unquestionable success. Mr. Santley sang the Prophet's part for something like the twenty-fifth time in Manchester, and Miss Helen Jaxon and Miss Edna Thornton were fairly successful with the soprano and contralto solos. On the 12th ult., when Glazounow's Seventh Symphony was to have been given for the first time in England, there was a disappointment, caused by an accident to the harpist, and the 'Eroica' was substituted almost at the last moment—with a highly-favourable effect upon the attendance. The young Viennese pianist, Mr. Gottfried Galston, played fairly well in Brahms's second Concerto.

Mr. Hess appeared with his Cologne Quartet at the Harrison Concert on the 4th ult., at which a splendid performance of Dvorák's 'Negro' Quartet was given, and Miss Pauline St. Angelo played pianoforte solos in a most brilliant manner. On the 6th ult. the Bohemian Quartet appeared at the Schiller Anstalt with much success. At Mr. Brand Lane's fifth concert the choir (on festival scale) sang fairly well in 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night,' and Stanford's 'Phauidrig Crohoore.' The orchestra, usually a weak point at these concerts, was better than usual. On the 13th ult. Mr. Kenneth Carne Ross, a young singer trained for some years at the Royal Manchester College and afterwards in Italy and France, gave a recital of song, exhibiting his agreeable and well-produced baritone voice in modern German and older French and Italian songs, besides a sombre and rather violent air from Verdi's 'Otello,' and a selection from Arthur Somervell's also distinctly sombre 'Maud' cycle. He was best in Carissimi's 'Vittoria.' At the sixth Gentlemen's Concert on the 18th ult. the Brodsky Quartet gave Volkmann's second and Tchaikovsky's first string Quartet in their usual masterly style, and the Manchester Orpheus Glee Society—probably the best male-voice choir in the north of England—gave glees and part-songs by Stainer, Schumann, Horsley, Sullivan, Goss, Pitt, Bishop, Hatton and Bridge. They obtained their opening notes in each case without the help of any instrument, and sang throughout with high technical excellence, doing best in 'The long day closes,' by Sullivan.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Under the auspices of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union an exceptionally interesting orchestral concert was given in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on the 11th ult., by the Hallé Orchestra, under the conductorship of Dr. Hans Richter. The programme, chosen by plébiscite, contained two important novelties so far as Newcastle is concerned—Tchaikovsky's Fantasia after Dante's 'Francesca da Rimini' and Richard Strauss's symphonic poem 'Tod und Verklärung,' both of which were received with unmistakable marks of approval. Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, two popular numbers from Wagner, and a very fine performance of Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony completed the programme.

The most interesting feature of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society's concert on the 3rd ult. was the first performance in Newcastle, in its entirety, of Grieg's String Quartet in G minor, by the Bohemian Quartet, Messrs. Hoffmann, Suk, Nedbal and Wiham, in whose hands the work was remarkably well played. The programme also included Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18), and songs by Schubert, Brahms and other composers were well sung by Mr. Norman Ridley.

Quite a new departure was made at the third Harrison Concert in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 6th ult., in the engagement of the Willy Hess String Quartet, who gave a very fine rendering of Dvorák's Quartet in F, (Op. 96), based largely upon negro melodies. Mr. Willy Hess gave a brilliant performance of Laub's Polonaise in G (Op. 8); Mr. Grutzmacher was equally successful in Volkmann's Romance in E for violoncello, and Miss Pauline St. Angelo delighted her audience by her clever playing of pianoforte pieces by Liszt and Rubinstein. Mr. Ben Davies, as the vocalist of the evening, charmed everyone by his sympathetic rendering of Handel's 'Waft her angels,' and Schubert's 'Sérénade.'

A very creditable performance of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' was given in the New Co-operative Hall, Chester-le-Street, on the 18th ult., by the Chester-le-Street Choral Society, under the direction of the Rev. Canon Hughes. The soloists were Miss Mary Bowmaker, Mr. Edward Kellett and Mr. John Nutton.

(The letter from Norwich will be found on p. 194.)

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The two works performed at the concert given by the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society on the 5th ult. were Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch,' with which the chorus and orchestra are tolerably familiar, and Elgar's 'Coronation Ode.' The soloists were Madame Lulu Gillespie, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Joseph O'Mara and Ivor Foster, and Mr. Wright at the organ and Mr. Allen Gill as conductor contributed largely to the evening's enjoyment. Lovers of chamber music enjoyed a rich treat at Miss Cantelo's second subscription concert on the 12th ult. The artists were Mr. Louis Pécskai, Mr. Herbert Walenn and Miss Cantelo, and the programme was culled from Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann and Brahms.

The members of the Stapleford Choral Society gave a selection from 'Elijah' on the 17th ult., under the direction of Mr. G. Spencer, in connection with an organ recital by Mr. F. Wyatt for the benefit of the Parish Church New Organ Fund. Quite a flutter was created in organ circles by the deviation from ordinary routine in the construction of the new organ at All Souls' Church, Radford. The organ was opened on the 19th ult. by Mr. Liddle, of Southwell Cathedral. It is impossible to go into detail, but it may be stated that the organ is tubular pneumatic in construction, draw-knobs for stops are replaced by a row of keys under the book-ledge, and there is 'one pedal controller to each manual automatically providing a suitable pedal bass to any combination of manual stops and couplers.' The specification was drawn up under the supervision of Mr. F. Wyatt.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

An effort initiated a year ago to establish a musical society which should organise the musical resources of the scattered districts of Mid-Derbyshire bore fruit on the 11th ult., when in the Stephenson Memorial Hall, Chesterfield, the Mid-Derbyshire Choral Union made its first public appearance. A large amount of educational and organising work had been done during the autumn and winter by the founder and trainer of the Society, Dr. S. Bertram Siddall, of Stonebroom, and several 'touring' performances of the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah' had resulted in the discovery of much excellent vocal material. At last an ambitious venture was decided upon, and on the date named Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding' and Stanford's 'The Revenge' were performed in a highly creditable manner. The chorus-singing revealed first-class qualities, both of tone and style. Attack, enunciation and expression were alike excellent. The Sheffield Orchestra had been engaged, and, besides playing in the two works, performed Beethoven's C minor Symphony, the Overture to 'William Tell,' and Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto (solo Mr. J. H. Parkes). Mr. H. Brearley was the vocal soloist. The concert was conducted by Dr. Coward, of Sheffield. Such a venture for a society recruited from an entirely rural district is deserving of this somewhat extended reference. Its future should be still more fruitful unto good works.

To make complete the record of the city's musical doings since Christmas, I must first allude to an excellent concert given by the St. Peter's (Abbeydale) Choral Society on January 27, under Mr. W. Gadsby's direction. Mendelssohn's 'Christus' and 42nd Psalm were admirably sung. On the previous night the Hathersage Choral Society had performed Romberg's 'Lay of the Bell' under Mr. F. W. Hulme's control. February found the musical fixtures coming thick and fast. A performance on the 3rd ult. of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' by the Wincobank and Blackburn Harmonic Society under Mr. A. Swaine proved successful. The Sheffield Sunday School Union Festival held in the Albert Hall on the 9th ult. furnished a 'sign of the times' in the excellent singing of a juvenile choir of 500 voices—our future choralists—under Dr. Coward. Mr. J. W. Phillips was at the organ. Other musical fixtures calling for mention are a performance of 'Elijah' at the Attercliffe Wesleyan Reform Chapel under Mr. George E. Kitching, and the concert of the Brincliffe Musical Society, at which Mr. J. H. Parkes directed an excellent first performance in Sheffield of Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' Suite.

There has been a welcome plenitude of chamber music during the month. At Mr. Harrison's Concert on the 3rd ult. the Willy Hess Quartet appeared, playing Dvorák's Quartet in F (Op. 96), and a week later, under Miss Foxon's auspices, the Bohemian Quartet visited the city and played works by Dvorák (Op. 106, in G), Beethoven (Op. 18, No. 4), Borodin, and Grieg. The vocalists at the two concerts named were: Madame Marie Brema and Madame Blanche Marchesi respectively. Mr. Percy Sharman and Mr. Holden-White also gave an enjoyable chamber concert on the 11th ult., in which they were assisted by Mr. Withers (violin) and Madame Seymour. An interesting item was the Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte (Op. 18) by Richard Strauss. Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Trio in A minor (Op. 50) was also included in the scheme.

The Sheffield Teachers' Operatic Society gave a week's performances of 'The Yeomen of the Guard,' in the Albert Hall, at the end of the month, and the Barnsley Operatic Society similarly performed 'Iolanthe' in the Harvey Institute.

Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons have arranged to provide rooms at 33, Great Pulteney Street, Piccadilly Circus, to be at the disposal of their clients for lessons, practice and rehearsals. These rooms can be engaged at any time, or can be secured in advance by application to Mr. S. H. Walrond, Secretary.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

The most generally interesting event of a somewhat busy month has been the revival of a seldom heard work by Handel—his setting of Dryden's smaller 'St. Cecilia Ode.' This was undertaken by a newly-organized society, the Headingley Choral Society, and took place on the 19th ult. It was the more welcome, since our experience of Handel in the West Riding, where his music is so much cultivated, is after all limited to three or four of his most familiar works, and this one has a freshness and character all its own. The soloists were Mr. James Wilson and Mr. Tom Child, and a creditable performance, especially as regards the orchestral details, was given under Mr. H. Percy Richardson's direction.

A novelty to Leeds was Strauss's music to 'Enoch Arden,' which was heard at a concert given by Mr. C. Wilkinson on the 12th ult. Mrs. Beerbohm Tree recited the poem most artistically, and Mr. Wilkinson was the pianist. At the same concert a most promising contralto was introduced to Leeds in Miss Mary Boyd, who possesses a good voice and exceptional dramatic intelligence. Mr. John Dunn was the violinist. Strauss also took a prominent place in the programme of a very interesting chamber concert given on January 27 by Mr. Sharman (violin) and Mr. Holden-White (pianoforte), when they played that composer's early Sonata in E flat (Op. 18). With Mr. Withers, a very accomplished young violoncellist, they also played Tchaikovsky's 'Elegiac' Trio in A minor (Op. 50).

With these exceptions the concerts have not presented anything of striking interest. The subscription concert on January 28 was, however, a thoroughly enjoyable one. The Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, was chiefly responsible for the programme, which included the 'Pastoral Symphony,' not heard at Leeds for about twelve years! The Philharmonic Society's chorus contributed two pieces, the 'Vätergruft' of Cornelius and the 'Dirge for Two Veterans' by Dr. Charles Wood, produced at the last festival. The chorus-singing reached a very high level of accuracy and refinement, most creditable to their trainer, Mr. Fricker; indeed, we have to go back to the earlier festivals to find anything of equal finish in a Leeds chorus. The soloist in both works was Mr. Frederic Austin. On the 4th ult. the Leeds Choral Union gave a concert, the chief feature of which was Gluck's 'Orpheus,' with Miss Giulia Ravogli in the part she has made her own. Originally the programme included Professor Parker's Norwich work, 'A Star Song,' but on second thoughts the Society decided to repeat Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' which had proved to the taste of their subscribers when given at an earlier concert of the season. Miss Alice Esty, Miss Taggart, Mr. Burrows, and Mr. Herbert Parker were the principals, and Mr. Alfred Benton conducted.

The remaining Leeds events may be passed over briefly. The 'Bohemian' Chamber Concert Society gave one of their enjoyable smoking concerts on the 21st ult., when Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18, No. 1) and Rubinstein's in C minor (Op. 17, No. 2) were played by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Nichols, and Giessing. On the following evening the Leeds Parish Church Choir gave their annual concert, at which Gade's 'Erl-King's Daughter' was performed under the direction of the organist, Mr. Alfred Benton.

BRADFORD.

On the 13th ult. Dr. Richter and the Hallé Orchestra were chiefly responsible for the programme of one of the subscription concerts. Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, which is hardly ever heard in these parts (the last West Riding performance by a professional orchestra of which I can find a record was at these concerts in 1892), Strauss's 'Don Juan,' and Saint-Saëns's Fifth Pianoforte Concerto in F (Op. 103) were the chief things. The pianist was Busoni, who played magnificently. Anything more delightful than his interpretation of a couple of choral preludes by Bach cannot be imagined. Mr. Midgley, who supplies most of the chamber music Bradford has an opportunity of hearing, has given two more of his concerts. On January 21 the Kruse Quartet party appeared, and played D'Albert's fine quartet in E flat, a beautiful, dignified work, together with Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in A (Op. 26), in which Mr. Midgley was pianist, and the second of the Rasoumowsky Quartets. At the second concert, on the 18th ult., a local quartet party appeared. On the 14th ult. the Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave a concert, the peculiarity of which was that ten out of the fourteen pieces were vocal. The result was, however, a marked increase in the attendance, from which it may be concluded that the Bradford people have not even now acquired a taste for orchestral music. On the 20th ult. the Bradford Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Cowen, gave an unusually strong programme, including Parker's 'Hora Novissima,' Dr. Cowen's 'Coronation Ode' (both for the first time in Yorkshire), with 'Walpurgis Night' by way of ballast. The principals were Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Edna Thornton, and Messrs. Collings and Foster, who sang well, while Dr. Cowen secured a generally creditable reading from band and chorus, his Ode being particularly well done.

OTHER TOWNS.

At Huddersfield two of the subscription concerts have taken place. On January 27 the 'London Trio' (Madame Amina Goodwin, Mr. Simonetti, and Mr. Whitehouse) played pianoforte trios by Dvorák (Op. 65) and Arensky (D minor) with a highly-finished ensemble; and on the 10th ult. Mr. Ben Davies, with Mr. Alfred Hollins as pianist and organist, gave pleasure by their artistic performances. On the 7th ult. the Philharmonic Orchestra gave an interesting cycle of overtures from Handel and Mendelssohn. The former was represented by a work of exceptional rarity and interest, the overture to his first opera, 'Almira,' dating from his early Hamburg days, but already characteristic in its vigour and stateliness. Mr. Ibeson conducted.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Brodsky Quartet from Manchester visited Belfast and rejoiced the lovers of chamber music with two admirable concerts on January 30 and 31. Each of the members of the Quartet is a master of his instrument, and their performances show how carefully they have studied the true interpretation of the great works.

The third Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 13th ult., and in many respects the concert was the most interesting of the season. In the first place, Mons. Ysaye appeared for the first time in Belfast and honoured the Society's orchestra by permitting them to accompany him in Beethoven's violin concerto, played as he alone can play it. He also played a Sarabande and Gigue by Bach, and Vieuxtemps' Ballade et Polonaise, accompanied by Herr Willibald Richter. The chorus and orchestra performed, for the first time in Ireland, 'Wanderer's Sturmlied,' an early work of Richard Strauss, a very difficult and exacting composition, full of cleverness and variety.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Norwich Philharmonic Society, which was last year reconstructed on a larger scale, and migrated from Noverre's Rooms to Saint Andrew's Hall, gave a very successful concert on the 5th ult. The Philharmonic was on this occasion joined by the Norwich Choral Society, a body which must not be confounded with the Norwich Festival Chorus, now so ably conducted by Dr. A. H. Mann.

Coleridge-Taylor's 'Meg Blane' (with Miss Muriel Foster as the vocalist) formed the principal item of a very interesting programme. The band, under the careful training of Dr. Bates, shows decided improvement. In the second part of the programme Miss Kathleen Bruckshaw (pianoforte) gave great pleasure by her refined and artistic playing in Beethoven's Choral Fantasia (Op. 80), Chopin's Nocturne in G minor, and an 'Etude' by Liszt, and Handel's 'Largo' was performed by Miss Noverre (solo violin), Miss Miriam Timothy (harp), and Dr. Bunnett (organ) and strings (orchestra). Dr. Bates conducted his forces with watchful care and discretion.

A pleasant concert was given on January 29 by the Norwich Orchestral Union, under the baton of its conductor, Mr. Ernest Harcourt. Miss Edith Patching was the vocalist and Miss Glendenning the solo violinist.

Benedict's 'Saint Cecilia' formed the principal attraction at the North Walsham Society's concert under the conductorship of Mr. A. S. Wilde. The choir showed evidence of good training. The vocalists were Miss Mildred Rix, Miss Cockrill, Mr. Gawthrop and Mr. Frank Perfitt. Mr. Wilde also on the 19th ult. conducted an interesting programme at Sheringham Town Hall, when Macfarren's 'May day,' with Miss Mildred Rix in the principal part, was performed.

At the Corporation Organ Recital on the 21st ult. the Norwich Union Fire Office Orchestral Society made a welcome first appearance under their conductor, Mr. Curtis. Mr. Sawford Dye and Mr. Andrewes were the vocalists, and Dr. Bunnett contributed three organ solos, one being a Fantasia from his own pen.

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Henry King, Secretary of the Coronation Choir and to the Coronation Dinner given to Sir Frederick Bridge, was the gratified recipient of a handsome testimonial presented to him at the Church House on the 19th ult. The token of the esteem in which he is held took the dual form of an address and gold watch and chain, subscribed for by ninety-seven persons including Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Hubert Parry, Sir George Martin, the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton and others. The watch bears the following inscription:—

This Watch, together with a Gold chain and an address, was presented to Mr. Henry King (Secretary to the Coronation Choir) on the 19th February, 1903, in recognition of his valued services as Honorary Secretary in connection with the dinner given by some members of the Coronation Choir to Sir Frederick Bridge, M.V.O., Mus. Doc. (Director of the Music at the Coronation Service) on the 28th November, 1902.

The presentation was made by Mr. James Matthews, chairman of the Committee, in terms of high appreciation of Mr. King's valued services connected with the Coronation, and Sir Frederick Bridge, in his usual genial mood, added some humorous and pungent remarks. Mr. King returned thanks in a few well-chosen words, saying:— 'I feel it quite beyond my power to adequately express my feelings to you for all this kindness. I may say, however, that it is most gratifying to know that anything I may have done towards promoting the success of the dinner in honour of Sir Frederick Bridge has been so highly appreciated; and I am greatly touched by the presence of so many kind friends here to-day.' The company also included Mr. C. Rube, Mr. A. K. Hichens, Dr. Larkin, honorary secretary, and Mr. Joseph Monday, treasurer to the Testimonial Fund.

The Report and Accounts of the Bristol Musical Festival held in October last have been published. It appears that the attendance—13,936—was larger than at any previous Festival, and exceeded the meeting of 1896 by 2,960 persons. The financial result showed a balance on the right side of £67 9s. 7d.

Mr. Stewart Macpherson has resigned the conductorship of the Westminster Orchestral Society, to the great regret of the members.

The London Organ School, directed by Dr. Yorke Trotter, will in future be known as the London Music School.

Mr. W. Arundel Orchard has been appointed conductor of the Sydney Liedertafel.

We are requested to state that Mr. Hugo Görlitz, 119, New Bond Street, is the only official British representative of the 'Richard Wagner festival plays, Munich' referred to in our January issue, p. 41.

Foreign Notes.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.

A monument to Raff, by the Munich sculptor Ludwig Sand, has been completed, and is to be unveiled next May in the Frankfort cemetery. Joachim Raff, the distinguished Swiss composer, was director of the 'Hoch' Conservatorium, a post which he retained up to the time of his death.

MEININGEN.

Herr Wilhem Berger, director of the Musikalische Gesellschaft at Berlin, has been selected as successor to Herr F. Steinbach from amongst more than a hundred competitors.

MILAN.

The second number of the Gazzetta Musicale in its new form under the title Musicale Musicisti gives an interesting article on the Puccini family. Giacomo Puccini was born at Lucca in 1712, where in 1740 he became organist of the cathedral. He was a great friend of the famous Padre Martini. Antonio Puccini succeeded his father, and he is known as the composer of a Requiem Mass and thirteen operas. His son Domenico, organist and pianist, died at the age of forty-four, leaving four children, among whom was Michele, father of Giacomo Puccini, the composer of 'La Tosca.' Of the last named there is a brief account of his early days; also a picture of the house at Lucca in which he was born.

ROUEN.

During the present month, says La Vie Musicale, there will be produced at the Théâtre des Arts a new opera by M. Isidore de Lara, entitled 'Siddharta.' The principal rôles have been assigned to Mlle. Charpentier and MM. Victor Maurel and Sylvain. From the same source we read that the composer's 'Messaline' has been given five times at Nîmes, and with ever-increasing success.

PARIS.

'Titania,' a musical drama in three acts, libretto by MM. Louis Gallet and André Corneau, music by M. Georges Hué, was successfully produced at the Opéra Comique on January 20. Le Ménestrel considers the music incomparably superior to the poem; and though the former sometimes lacks in originality, that precious quality is not always wanting. The writer regrets that the composer slavishly follows the Wagnerian method. Le Guide Musicale describes the book, but passes no criticism on it. In the music it finds inspiration at times at a low ebb. Both papers, however, speak in high terms of the skill and refined taste displayed by the composer.

In Le Ménestrel of the 8th ult. there is an article by M. Raymond Bouyer concerning the manner in which the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Hector Berlioz ought to be celebrated. For some time past announcements have been made of a Festival to be held at Grenoble during the month of August next; there are to be speeches, orpheonist competitions, fêtes, &c., but with exception of a proposal made by a society to give a performance of 'Faust,' the French master's music is conspicuous by its absence. Unless therefore a strong musical scheme is put forward, the above-named writer's dissatisfaction with the Grenoble programme seems fully justified. He 'dreams of something very different to commemorate the birth; something thoroughly Berliozian.' That a celebration of some kind should be held at Grenoble, the chief town in the department of Isère, in which Berlioz was born (Côte St. André), is natural enough, but Paris—where the French master lived, laboured, and died without due recognition of his genius—is the right place in which to pay special honour to his memory.

M. Arthur Pougin, in an article which appeared in Le Ménestrel of the 1st ult., entitled 'La Semaine Noire,' delivers as it were a funeral oration on the two composers, Augusta Holmès and Robert Planquette; on the writer, Edmond Neukomm; and on the vocalist, Numa Auguez. Of the first he says that of all the women in France who, during the past hundred years, devoted themselves to composition, she was the most gifted; and that notwithstanding her almost religious reverence for César Franck and her ardent admiration for Wagner, her artistic personality did not suffer. Of Planquette we read that 'without wishing to do hurt to his memory, it may be said that his fortune was greatly in excess of his artistic merit.' His old camarade Neukomm he describes as a talented writer, but one whose life lacked definite aim. He was, by-the-way, the nephew of Chevalier Neukomm, the pupil and friend of Haydn. Auguez is named a 'chanteur de premier ordre.'

A Festival of British Music is to be held in London, and it is pleasing to hear that Paris—or perhaps we ought to say M. Gailhard—proposes to honour her eminent living composers, Reyer, Saint-Saëns, and Massenet. His idea is to have a Reyer cycle at the Opéra with 'La Statue,' 'Sigurd' and 'Salammbô'; a Saint-Saëns with 'Samson et Dalila,' 'Henry VIII.' and 'Les Barbares'; and a Massenet with 'Thaïs' and 'Le Cid.' And then, as mentioned above, at the close of the year there may be a Berlioz cycle.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARISED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

BARNSTAPLE.—Dr. H. J. Edwards's sacred cantata, 'The Epiphany,' was performed at the Parish Church on the 1st ult., under the direction of Mr. Sydney Harper. The church choir was augmented for the occasion, and the solos were sung by Master Harold Davis, Mr. Sydney Harper, and Mr. J. Northcote. The same work has been also given within a few days at North Petherton Church and at Okehampton Parish Church. The composer presided at the organ at each of the performances.

BASINGSTOKE.—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on the 10th ult., when Gade's 'Spring's Message,' Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants,' and various part-songs were performed. Madame Blanche Powell, Miss May Hayden and Mr. Dalton Baker were the solo vocalists, while the instrumental portion of the programme comprised a Concerto for four violins by Maurer, two movements from Grieg's violin and piano-forte Sonata in G, and Moszkowski's 'Ballade' for violin. Mr. H. E. Powell conducted.

BATH.—The Bath Society of Gleemen gave their first annual concert at the Assembly Rooms on the 5th ult., when the feature of the programme was their excellent rendering of the following part-music: 'Glees, 'Strike the lyre' (Cooke), 'Who comes so dark?' (Callcott), 'The Storm' (Dürner); Madrigals, 'Come, let us join' (Beale), 'Down in a flow'ry vale' (Festa); Part-Song, 'Hymn to Night' (Beethoven). The solo vocalists were Miss Lillian Rea, Mr. William Irving, Mr. E. J. Parker, and Mr. T. A. Gass; Mr. Parker's songs with humming accompaniments by the gleemen attracted special attention. Mr. J. Horsell conducted.

BODMIN.—A very successful rendering of Stanford's 'The Revenge' was given in the Public Rooms on January 28 by the Nonconformist Choirs Association, under the able conductorship of Mr. H. M. Lamerton. The instrumental accompaniments were supplied by the Falmouth Philharmonic Orchestra. The second part of the programme included four pieces by the St. Andrew's Quartet, songs by Madame Minadieu, a violin solo 'Zigeunerweisen' (Sarasate) by Miss Bertha Treveske, and German's 'Nell Gwyn' Dances by the orchestra. Mrs. A. L. Stephens was at the pianoforte.

CANTERBURY.—The King's School Musical Society gave a concert on the 10th ult., when an interesting programme was provided, which included Schubert's 'Rosamunde' ballet music, the march and chorus from 'Tannhäuser,' and the first movement of Haydn's Symphony in C. A special feature was the performance of several pieces composed by local musicians. These included an Intermezzo, Dr. H. C. Perrin; Coronation Waltz, Cecil Gann; Finale of Suite 'Lavengro,' and Coronation Prize March, the last three by Percy Godfrey. Each of the composers named conducted his own work, the remainder of the concert being directed by Mr. Godfrey.—On the 19th ult. the Canterbury Cathedral Musical Society performed Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus,' with orchestral accompaniment, in the Cathedral, under the baton of Dr. Perrin, Cathedral organist, and two movements of Beethoven's second symphony were also finely rendered. The solos were taken by the Cathedral choristers and by Messrs. Louis Godfrey and F. Noakes.

DONCASTER.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' in the Corn Exchange on January 30. The choir sang with great power and excellent attack, notably in the chorus 'Come, with torches' and in the choral epilogue to Sullivan's cantata. There was an efficient orchestra augmented by many professional players, and Mr. T. Brameld conducted. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Charles Tree.

FORFAR (N.B.).—The Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. M. B. Kidd, gave a fine performance of Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride' on the 2nd ult. A small string orchestra (led by Mr. Cole, of Glasgow) with Miss Jean Hill at the pianoforte and Mr. D. W. Neill at the harmonium, supplied the accompaniments. Miss Gordon Pillans, and Messrs. J. W. F. Adams and Robert Burnett were the soloists.

HONITON.—The Honiton Choral Society gave their seventh annual concert on the 19th ult. The works performed were Stainer's 'Crucifixion' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny.' The band and chorus numbered eighty performers, and Mr. R. W. Higgins conducted two very successful performances.

HORSHAM.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' on the 4th ult. at the King's Head Assembly Rooms. The soloists were Miss Alice Holman, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Graham Smart. The choir sang with spirit, and the orchestra, led by Mr. W. M. Quirke, was also efficient. Mr. R. Harris at the organ and Miss Laura Sapey at the pianoforte rendered useful assistance; Mr. A. P. Whitaker conducted.

LEIGHTON BUZZARD.—The Leighton Buzzard and Linsdale Musical Society, recently formed, gave their first concert at the Corn Exchange on the 17th ult., when the programme included Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus,' Thomson's Madrigal, 'The Fairy Queene,' and the part-songs, 'The departure' (Mendelssohn) and 'Song of the Vikings' (Fanning). The band and chorus consisted of seventy performers, and the solo vocalists were Mr. Cyril Harrison, Mr. Seth Hughes, and Mr. John Challis; Mr. G. A. Hardesty was the conductor.

LLANELLY.—A musical service was held at St. Peter's Church on the 10th ult., when Valentine Hemery's sacred cantata 'Soldiers of the Cross' was rendered by the choir, numbering over 100 voices. The solos were taken by Miss Mary Hallam, Miss Gladys Griffiths, Mr. F. A. Coombs, and Mr. J. Marker. Miss Maggie Davies presided at the organ, and the choirmaster, Mr. J. W. Godsell, conducted.

PRIORS LEE, SALOP.—The Choral Society, assisted by the St. George's Orchestral Band, led by Mr. W. C. Watkiss, gave a successful concert on the 16th ult., the chief feature of which was Van Bree's 'St Cecilia's Day.' The solo part was admirably rendered by Miss Maud Hammond Ball. In the second part, which was miscellaneous, Messrs. T. Price and W. Birtles assisted as vocalists, and Messrs. W. H. Hyde and J. Finney as solo violinists. Mr. J. E. Blakemore conducted.

SOUTHEND-ON-SEA.—An excellent performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' was given by the Choral Society on the 17th ult. in the Pier Pavilion. The orchestra (led by Miss Harrington) and chorus numbered about 120, the principal vocalists engaged being Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Marion Icton, Madame Annie Layton, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Arthur Barlow, all of whom acquitted themselves with credit and distinction. Miss Marion Gregory presided at the pianoforte, Mr. A. Bizzey at the organ, and Mr. W. Whiteman conducted.

TIMPERLEY.—The Vocal Society, conducted by Mr. H. Mozart Sheaves, gave a concert in the Stockport Road Schoolroom on the 16th ult., when the choir sang the following part music:—'For the New Year' and 'Hunting Song' (Mendelssohn); Shepherds' Chorus, 'Rosamunde' (Schubert); Market Chorus, 'Masaniello'; 'Liberty' and 'The Miller's Wooing' (Eaton Fanning); 'Spring Song' (Pinsuti); 'O lovely May' and 'The Chase' (Edward German). These were interspersed with vocal and violin solos by Miss Keal, Miss Twyford, Mr. James Lowe, Mr. A. H. Nock, and Miss Burrows.

TORRINGTON.—The Amateur Musical Society gave its first concert in the Town Hall on the 3rd ult., when Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' was the main feature of the programme. The solos were sung by Master Harold Davies, Mr. Sydney Harper, and Mr. B. T. James, the conductor being Mr. F. J. Webber. The miscellaneous second part included the chorus, 'Tis thy wedding morning,' from Cowen's 'Rose Maiden,' by the choir, and 'Der Freischütz' overture by the orchestra.

WEYBRIDGE.—Miss Catherine Low and Mr. Sterling Mackinlay gave a concert in the Village Hall on the 12th ult., assisted by Madame Antoinette Sterling and Miss Ivy Angove (violinist). The programme included Schutt's Suite (Op. 44) for pianoforte and violin, and several pieces by Schubert, Chopin and Bach played by Miss Low.

WORCESTER.—The first Chamber Concert by the Worcester String Quartet (Mr. J. W. Austin first violin, Mr. F. Fielder second violin, Mr. A. Quarterman viola, Mr. E. W. Price violoncello) was given in the Public Hall on the 5th ult. Mozart's Quartet in C and Schubert's in G minor were excellently played, as also was Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet (Op. 44), with the assistance of Mr. G. A. Alder. Miss Amy Kendal was the vocalist. This Quartet Concert is the first ever given in this city by local performers, and the members of the Worcester String Quartet may be congratulated on the good work which they have so successfully started.

Answers to Correspondents.

FAH ME.—'Who was the most eccentric musician?' This is rather a difficult question to answer, but Dragonetti, the celebrated double-bass player, may certainly be placed in the front rank of cranks. He was an inveterate snuff-taker and possessed a large collection of snuff-boxes. At his death his effects included a number of curiously-dressed dolls. With these he used to play with childlike glee. Moreover, he was in the habit of taking to the Musical Festivals at which he performed a selection of these companions, especially a black doll, which he called his wife! It is related that when the coach in which he travelled stopped to change horses at a country inn, 'Old Drag,' as he was called, used to expose to view at the window of the vehicle his dusky doll-wife, much to the amusement of the villagers. His dog Carlo always accompanied him into the orchestra. Dragonetti's speech was a curious linguistic mixture of native Bergamese, bad French, and worse English!

E. J. G.—The history, genuineness, &c., of Tallis's responses as we now know them is an old, old story. You mention Rimbault; but any uncorroborated statement made by him must be regarded with caution. It is to be feared that writers on such matters are too prone to copy from one another without making original research, verifying statements, or giving definite references. The subject is an important one, and we shall keep it in mind with a view to collecting further information, if possible, and setting it before our readers.

E. C.—The standard book on the construction of the organ is that by Hopkins and Rimbault, but it hardly covers the ground of the latest developments of the organ-builder's mechanical skill. We cannot prophesy as to the value of the book you mention until it is published.

YORKIST.—In regard to the proper interpretation of dynamic signs in pianoforte playing you must always be guided by the context. The example you quote (Chopin's Prelude, Op. 28, No. 20) is so phrased that a decrease of tone would naturally attend the beginning of bar 3, in order to get the full effect of the crescendo. The signs \llcorner \gg are, of course, synonymous with cres., and dim.; their duplication in certain passages may be read as underlinings of the composer's intentions. In the Chopin Prelude No. 21, in B flat, the dolce indication implies tranquillity, and, therefore, softness of tone. Natural feeling, rather than interpretative rules, should be the principle which governs expression in music.

PURCELL.—(1) The 'usual remuneration in taking pupils from another teacher' is a matter of arrangement. (2) There is no reason why Gregorian and Anglican chants should not be used at the same service. (3) As to whether electric organs are a success or not, it may be useful in this connection to quote the opinion of an experienced old organ-builder: 'After all, sir,' he said, 'there's nothing like a tracker action, providing it's well made.' (4) We cannot place Local Examinations 'in order of value.' Our space is too valuable for this.

H. J. R.—(1) Of Sullivan's music to 'Macbeth' only the overture is published in (full score, price 10s. net, and the orchestral parts of the complete work are to be had, price three guineas net. Messrs. Chappell & Co. are the publishers. (2) There is a chronological list of Sullivan's compositions at the end of the 'Souvenir of Sir Arthur Sullivan' (George Newnes). The article on Sullivan in the 'Dictionary of National Biography' may be of service to you in this connection.

H. G.—(1) Sir George Grove's 'Beethoven and his nine symphonies' is a book on the lines of your enquiry and suggestion. For the latter we thank you and have already taken some steps to carry it out. (2) See the English version of 'Peer Gynt,' by William and Charles Archer (Walter Scott), and 'Four lectures on Henrik Ibsen,' by Philip H. Wicksteed (Swan Sonnenschein).

L. O. T. W.—(1) Mr. Fuller Maitland's book entitled 'Masters of German Music' is published by Messrs. Osgood McIlvaine & Co. (2) The sonata by Beethoven known as the 'Kreutzer' is that for pianoforte and violin, key A, Op. 47. (3) There is no book entitled 'Criticisms on music of to-day,' nor is there need of such while the daily newspapers are accessible.

L. B. D.—The pianoforte arrangements of Wagner's 'Tristan' (made by Bülow) and 'Die Meistersinger' (made by Tausig) and 'Parsifal' (made by Klindworth) will meet your requirements. An arrangement, by Professor Klindworth, of 'Die Meistersinger' is in course of preparation.

ANXIOUS.—The only approaching Musical Competition in Yorkshire or Lancashire of which we have knowledge at which there is an open class for solo sopranos is that to be held at Morecambe on April 29 to May 2. Apply to the secretary, Mr. Powell, Musical Festival Office, Morecambe.

PRECEPTOR.—If the term 'musical devices' set forth in the examination syllabus means 'Ornamentation,' then you could not study any better book than that by Mr. Dannreuther on that subject. If it refers to 'Form,' Pauer's Primer on that topic may prove useful.

R. J. M. W.—We do not know of the 'charity scholarship of £10 per annum called Harvey's Trust,' available for former choristers who intend to pursue their musical studies. Perhaps some of our readers can furnish the desired information.

R. T.—Mr. Balfour's article on 'Handel' appeared in the Edinburgh Review of January, 1887. It was subsequently privately reprinted by the author, and, in 1893, included in his published 'Essays and Addresses.'

F. J.—An obituary notice, with portrait, of Dr. G. B. Arnold, of Winchester, appeared in our issue of March, 1902, p. 169. We shall be pleased to give a specification of the Winchester Cathedral organ at some future time.

E. J. H.—According to the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' the Duke of Wellington possesses a portrait of Garrett Wellesley, Earl of Mornington, but we cannot trace if it has ever been engraved or otherwise reproduced.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

FROM GRIEG TO BRAHMS STUDIES OF SOME MODERN COMPOSERS AND THEIR ART BY DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

In a series of essays on Grieg, Dvorák, Saint-Saëns, Franck, Tschaiikowsky, and Brahms, Mr. Mason has undertaken to show how each man has brought to his work his own particular temperament and conception of his art, how each has contributed some special quality of expression or beauty to modern music. While the purpose of the book is thus chiefly biographical, the author has considered in an introductory essay, "The Appreciation of Music," and a concluding essay, "The meaning of Music," points of more general interest, such as the process by which music has developed and the place of the art among men's other activities.

Mr. Mason's method is indicated by a sentence in the preface:—"Music may be hard to understand, but musicians are men." So clearly is the human aspect of the subject presented throughout that the book will interest all music-lovers, whether or not they have a technical knowledge of the art. Each essay is accompanied by a portrait of the musician written of and a brief bibliography of those of his works which best illustrate the points touched on in the essay.

OF

BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO REVISED EDITION.

With this issue of the new edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music it is desired to direct attention to the additional papers which are printed for the first time in this form.

These are, the University of Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper required of all candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors.

These papers will be found most valuable and useful, and for the kind permission to make use of them the author desires to express his most sincere obligations to Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A.; Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc.; Edward J. Chadfield, Esq.; and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A.

A further reprint of the Handbook affords the opportunity of adding the papers set forth for the recent Mus. Doc. Examination at Victoria University, for the use of which the Author is indebted to the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles.

ARRANGED BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

PREFACE.

This book is intended to meet the convenience of Teachers who wish to record clearly for a pupil's guidance the work to be prepared for each lesson or a series. The column headed "Time" is added for the purpose of indicating the number of minutes to be given to the daily practice of each separate subject. (This column is for the Teacher to fill up.)

A few pages of music paper have been inserted for the purpose of writing out turns, trills, &c., and blank pages have been left at the end on which it is suggested that a list of pieces studied should be kept or other memoranda made. The book will be found suitable for students of any instrument.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS).

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

THE MUSIC EDITED BY

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the "Calvary" Chorus ("Haste, ye souls"), and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

MY KINGDOM.

Angel of dreams, in hope's glad paradise—
Rose of the roses, star of all the skies,
Love of my life, till life and love are o'er,
Your heart to be my kingdom evermore:

THE GENTLE SHEPHERD.

Shepherd of the flock, with unchanging love,
Seek thy wandering sheep, weary though the way
Lead them safely home, when afar they roam,
Fondly guard their rest at the close of day.

A MANUAL OF PLAINSONG

FOR DIVINE SERVICE

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES NOTED THE PSALTER NOTED

TO GREGORIAN TONES

TOGETHER WITH THE LITANY AND RESPONSES
A NEW EDITION

PREPARED BY

H. B. BRIGGS AND W. H. FRERE

UNDER THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCE OF

JOHN STAINER

(Late President of the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society).

PREFACE.

THE first edition of The Psalter Noted was published in 1849 under the supervision of the late Rev. Thomas Helmore, and secured for the Gregorian Tones a general recognition of their appropriateness for Divine worship. Subsequently Mr. Helmore's scheme was enlarged by the issue of The Canticles Noted, of A Brief Directory, and of three Appendixes to the Psalter; and the whole collection was issued in one volume under the title of A Manual of Plainsong. The Manual had also two companion books, one of Words only, containing The Canticles and Psalter Accented, the other a collection of Accompanying Harmonies. Thus complete provision was made for the musical performance of the regular services of the Prayer Book. Practical objections, however, to the monotony of the recitation of several Psalms to one Tone without the relief of Antiphons, added to certain difficulties in the pointing, led to the issue of other Psalters which have competed with The Psalter Noted, but without obtaining, any of them, a marked supremacy; and nothing has been issued which covers the whole field so completely as Mr. Helmore's Manual.

Study of the art of Plainsong during the last half century has, however, undergone something like a revolution; on every branch of the question new light has been thrown, and not least upon the principles of pointing. In consequence of repeated demands for a new edition of the Manual, the work of revision was entrusted to the late Sir John Stainer. He readily undertook the task, and called into collaboration Mr. H. B. Briggs and the Rev. W. H. Frere, with the result that before his death he had passed for the press the greater part of the revised proofs prepared by them for the new edition. He had also devoted much time to the consideration, with Mr. Shebbeare, of the Organ Accompaniments, so that the complete work may be considered as his last contribution to the music of the English Church.

His was not the only loss that this book had to undergo in the course of revision, for on the eve of its completion, Mr. Briggs was suddenly called to his rest. So the foregoing words which he had written about Sir John Stainer have now become his own epitaph. Without competing with Sir John Stainer in the wider domain of Church Music he had, in the narrower department of Plainsong, an influence and a competence which were unrivalled; and whatever merits this book may have are due almost entirely to him.

The Manual thus appears in a New Edition, revised in accordance with modern standards of taste and science; it does not cover quite so large a field as formerly, for it contains no music for the Holy Communion; but it has the same counterparts as before in the shape of The Canticles and Psalter Accented, and The Accompanying Harmonies prepared by Mr. Shebbeare, which include accompaniments for the Responses, Te Deum and Litany, as well as for the Tones.

THE VILLAGE TUNE BOOK

CONTAINING

ONE HUNDRED POPULAR HYMN TUNES.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The one hundred hymn-tunes forming this collection have been selected from various sources, old and new. As the earliest can be traced to the year 1551, and the most recent was composed in 1901, they cover a period of three-and-a-half centuries.

In selecting these tunes, care has been taken to provide for all the metres in general use, and the index of first lines may be found useful as a guide to the selection of suitable tunes for particular hymns.

Clergymen and Organists of most Village Churches will find all they need in this collection, and thus be saved the trouble of searching through overlaid volumes; therefore, its practical utility, no less than its varied contents, will, it is hoped, render this book of one hundred hymn-tunes acceptable for use in Divine Service and also in the home circle.

JOHN HARRISON (the New English Tenor)

(PUPIL OF MADAME AMY SHERWIN)

At the LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS, Saturday Afternoon,
March 7, 1903.

The Daily Telegraph says: "A remarkably successful first appearance at these concerts was achieved by Mr. John Harrison, a tenor vocalist hailing from Lancashire, who possesses an organ of genuinely agreeable quality and of adequate range. His renderings of Goring Thomas's 'O vision entrancing' and Balfe's 'Come into the garden, Maud,' were notable for fullness of expression and good phrasing, while the excellent style in which the songs were delivered assisted towards establishing the new-comer in high favour. He was warmly and deservedly applauded."

JOHN HARRISON.

The Standard says: "One of the notable successes of the afternoon was won by Mr. John Harrison, the tenor who is steadily making his way to the front rank of vocalists. Mr. Harrison puts a great amount of work into his singing without in the least resorting to undue force or exaggeration. He has attained the art of knowing his limitations, with the result that he never attempts a note beyond the compass of his natural voice."

JOHN HARRISON.

The Star says: "Another feature of interest was the second appearance of Mr. John Harrison, the new tenor, who made such a successful debut recently. His success was again very marked. The sympathetic quality of his voice, his admirable production, his perfect enunciation, and his spontaneous expression seem to point to an exceptionally brilliant future. Songs like 'Come into the garden, Maud' and Adams's 'Nirvana' make no great demands on interpretative ability; it can only be said that his interpretations were quite artistic. He is to be heard in the summer at the Strauss Festival."

JOHN HARRISON.

The Daily Express says: "Mr. John Harrison is the possessor of a beautiful voice, which has changed from baritone into tenor. His success was emphatic. He achieved quite a triumph with his second song, 'Come into the garden, Maud.' His voice is beautifully clear, he sings naturally, and is undoubtedly a great acquisition to our list of tenors."

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY

(FOUNDED 1741).

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY offers TWO PRIZES, being the "Molineux Prize" of TEN POUNDS, with the Society's Medal, and the "Society's Prize" of FIVE POUNDS, for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS, in not less than four, nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two Treble Voices.

The character of the Composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative Part-Writing; not a mere Part-Song or harmonised Melody.

The following conditions must be complied with, viz. :—

1. That the Alto and Tenor parts be written in their respective clefs;
2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least;
3. That the intended "Tempo" be clearly indicated;
4. That the words, to be selected by the Composer, be written out in full on a fly-leaf at the beginning; and
5. That not more than one Composition be submitted by each competitor, which must not be in the Composer's autograph.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey, on or before October 1, 1903, each Composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the Composer's name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark.

The Award of the Judges will be made known at the meeting of the Society in December, 1903.

"Miss Lillie Wormald sang songs by Mozart and various modern composers with that kind of intelligence which stamps her as a genuine artist."

LIVERPOOL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

November 11, 1902.

THIRD SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

Extract from the Liverpool Courier, November 12, 1902.

"The great treat of the miscellaneous portion of the programme was the exquisitely dainty singing by Miss Lillie Wormald of the Couplets Du Mysoli' from David's 'La Perle du Brésil.'"

BIRMINGHAM CHAM ER CONCERT.

Extract from the Birmingham Daily Mail, December 18, 1902.

"Miss Lillie Wormald achieved a genuine triumph, and thanks are due to Mr. Mossel for having introduced so brilliant a vocalist to local notice. . . . Her voice is a soprano of great brilliance. Rarely have we heard such exquisite and easy vocalisation. Miss Wormald's other contributions were Mozart's 'Deh, Vieni,' the Russian folk-song, 'Der rothe Sarafan,' and an old French chansonette, by Monsigny, entitled, 'Il était un oiseau gris,' and for an encore Cowen's 'Birthday.'"

Extract from the Birmingham Post, December 18, 1902.

"The singer's success could only be described as brilliant; no weaker term would be adequate. Miss Wormald is the most brilliant singer we have heard in the Masonic Hall for a very long time. Her shakes, her chromatic scales, and the bell-like purity of her upper notes were altogether remarkable."

For terms and vacant dates apply—

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY,

FIRST SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT, October 14, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters won favour at once with his fine, pure, bright tone, his declamatory powers and vigorous style. He gave first 'Preislied,' from 'Die Meistersinger,' and showed a mastery and power over Wagner's trying vocal music that was admirable. . . . 'Lend me your aid' suited the artist's voice and style to perfection, and he gave a capital rendering of it. . . . At the close of the second part Mr. Masters sang 'Onaway, awake, beloved,' with great expression."—The Northern Whig, October 15, 1902.

HANLEY GLEE AND MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

THE "MESSIAH."—"Mr. Samuel Masters was new to Hanley, though he is well known throughout the country as a most conscientious and capable singer. He has a very strong voice of even compass, and takes the trouble to sing the 'Messiah' music as if he was the first to deliver the impressive messages to humanity. His version of the cavatina 'Behold and see' was delightful, as also was his rendering of the air 'But thou didst not leave'; his most signal achievement, however, was in 'Thou shalt break them,' choir and audience joining in giving expression to the admiration felt for the effort."—Stafford Sentinel December 19, 1902.

DUNDEE CHORAL UNION.

THE "MESSIAH."—"Mr. Samuel Masters created a good impression at the outset. He has a voice stronger than the average tenor, but he is not merely a high-set baritone. He has the true tenor timbre in his voice, and he can make his most flute-like tones ring out with accuracy of pitch and rare power."—Dundee Advertiser, December 17, 1902.

SHEFFIELD CHORAL UNION.

THE "MESSIAH."—"Mr. Samuel Masters, a tenor who has proved very successful in London, also won the decided appreciation of the audience. His strong but well-controlled voice was heard to advantage in 'Comfort ye,' and 'Ev'ry valley,' and he sang very finely in later numbers of the work, particularly in 'Thou shalt break them.'"—Sheffield Independent, December 26, 1902.

Has RETURNED TO TOWN from a successful Oratorio engagement in Constantinople.

"HYMN OF PRAISE" and "CREATION."—"Mr. Henry Plevy, of London, who came specially to sing at the concert, has a most agreeable and sympathetic voice which shows good and careful training. He was heard at his best in the Recit. and Aria, 'The Sorrows of Death' of which he gave a very artistic rendering. Mr. Plevy understands thoroughly the purport of what he sings, and does ample justice to it. In his duet . . . he had another opportunity to display his talent and took full advantage of it."—Levant Herald.

"FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD." MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM OF TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE.

"The most striking discovery of the present generation for practical musicians."—Musical News.

"Wonderful work is being done by Mr. Macdonald Smith in the application of his new system. . . . He is giving hundreds of lessons by mail with the very best results."—Musical Courier (New York).

"It is clear that Mr. Macdonald Smith has studied the subject carefully, and acts upon well-ascertained scientific grounds."—The Daily Telegraph.

"The great, the supreme merit of Mr. Smith's system consists in the fact that it involves the total abolition and disestablishment of all that terrible scale-practising and five-finger exercising."—Westminster Gazette.

"May be distinctly regarded as a boon and a blessing to men."—The Referee.

"Mr. Macdonald Smith's system of training the fingers, hands, &c., for pianoforte playing is most excellent, and in every respect well worth the high fees charged for lessons."—Organist and Choirmaster.

"The excellence of his methods had been abundantly proved."—The Times.

THE SYSTEM EXPLAINED.

The correct translation to the keyboard of the pianoforte of the notes of written or printed music, together with the proper interpretation of the expression, presents an interesting and difficult problem to pianists, viz.:—What is the best means of acquiring that quickness of eye, brain, and muscles, requisite to the perfect rendering of pianoforte music?

In considering this problem, we are forced to a recognition of the fact that very much depends upon physical health and development. Perfection of eye, brain, and muscles are an exceptional occurrence, and, where non-existent, require to be developed by artificial means, since physical perfection and a healthy condition of the organs named are a sine qua non in the proper training of the musician. To achieve this desideratum is the aim of Macdonald Smith's system of Touch and Technique. Many ingenious attempts have been made to develop this perfection of action and control, and thereby to ensure freedom and rapidity of voluntary movement, but hitherto none has been completely successful. The problem remained to be solved by Macdonald Smith's discovery of the principle of "full-contraction," with what remarkable success is shown by the practical experience of hundreds of pianists of all ages and of every degree of proficiency.

The use of the exercises alone results in a most pronounced improvement in delicacy of touch, good loud tone-production, command of independent rhythm in the two hands, general rapidity, confidence, "grip," stretch of the hands, flexibility of the fingers and wrists, besides many other benefits.

There are other difficulties encountered by the pianist, depending upon purely mechanical considerations, which would still exist were the hands and arms formed of wood or iron, instead of bone and muscle. But these have been reduced to a science, and are met by "TECHNICAL RULES." The latter, which, combined with the "full-contraction" exercises, comprise the system of Touch and Technique, are indispensable for the easy and correct rendering of "skips," quickly-repeated movements, trills, and other technical difficulties of the keyboard.

The System affords the player invaluable assistance which is unattainable by any other means by even the most advanced student, and it is indispensable to beginner and proficient alike.

ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Russia has supplied us with composers not a few, of whom Tschaikevsky may be regarded as the chief creative musician in the land of the Czar. Instrumental performers of repute have hailed from the same region, with Anton Rubinstein at their head. Other famous knights of the pianoforte are Godovsky, Pachmann, Rachmaninoff, Sapellnikoff, Siloti, Slivinski, and, of the fair sex, Madame Essipoff. If Russia cannot claim so extensive an output in regard to eminent violinists, she may be proud of her son who forms the subject of this Biographical Sketch.

Adolph Brodsky was born at Taganrog, a port on the north shore of the sea of Azov, March 21, 1851. 'Taganrog is noted for two things,' he laughingly says, 'the deathplace of Alexander I. and the birthplace of Adolph Brodsky.' His grandfather and father were both amateur fiddlers. At the age of three he showed signs of a great fondness for music by singing many of the folk-songs of his native country; at the age of four he taught himself to play some of these native melodies on a toy fiddle, the gift of his father. He received his first lessons at the age of five, his teacher being a soldier, but the brilliant little pupil soon outshone his military master in technical tactics. The next instructor of Master Adolph played dances and drank! 'Once he tried to kill me,' he says, 'and I was taken away from him.' Lancetti, teacher No. 3, was a true artist and a humorist. He had a penchant for playing 'funny tunes' on his famous Strad. 'He would play a farmyard piece—cocks crowing, hens flapping their wings, and introducing the oddest sounds.'

Adolph, at the age of seven, went to a new teacher, in whose house he lived. This professor was wont to leave the little fellow locked in the house without food, so that he sometimes suffered from hunger. On one occasion the providential discovery of a sack of potatoes saved the boy from actual starvation. 'My master gave a public concert,' says Dr. Brodsky, 'at which I played. It cleared 500 roubles, but my teacher ran away with the money and left me as an asset to his creditors.'

As a boy aged nine, Adolph Brodsky gave his first concert at Odessa. His performances on that occasion were of such high merit that they enlisted the practical sympathy of a wealthy citizen, who sent the young violinist to study at Vienna. In the year 1860 he entered the Conservatoire, and became a pupil of the famous Joseph Hellmesberger. This great teacher took a deep interest in his gifted pupil, and allowed the Wunderkind to play at many concerts in Vienna, and finally admitted him into his own celebrated quartet, then in the height of its popularity, the personnel being Hellmesberger, Brodsky, Bachrich, and Popper. At Vienna he first met his friend Hans Richter, then a fair youth of eighteen, like himself a student at the Conservatoire. He was the first horn player in the Imperial Orchestra; 'but,' adds Dr. Brodsky, 'he was an all-round musician, for I remember a performance of the "Tannhäuser" overture when Richter played three instruments at the same time—the horn, the cymbals, and the triangle! At a charity concert given in Vienna, young Brodsky played Ernst's famous Elegy. At the close of the performance a portly gentleman of forty years of age came to the player to express his admiration of the Elegy, with the request to be taken as a pupil. The would-be pupil had never handled a violin, and when Brodsky told him he must spend three weeks in learning to hold the instrument, he replied 'Oh, no; I would like to play the Elegy by Ernst at once.' The end was 'We did not come to terms.' Another pupil could only come for his lessons early in the morning, therefore in the cold winter months it was arranged that the teacher should remain in bed and give the lessons from between the sheets after the pupil had lighted the fire.

During his sojourn in Vienna Dr. Brodsky became a member of the Imperial Orchestra. But before joining this splendid organization, he used very often to play gratuitously at the Burgtheater as a deputy violinist that he might see the plays of Shakespeare. 'My great love of Shakespeare's works,' he says, 'dates from that time, and I am always reading some of them. Moreover, I greatly enlarged my range of interests, and I look back on these experiences in my young days as an important factor in my artistic development.'

After a residence of ten years in Vienna he made a tour in his native land from 1870-74. With two other artists he gave concerts with great success all over Russia, the itinerary extending as far as Tiflis in the Caucasus and Baku on the Caspian. He subsequently settled at Moscow in order to come under the influence of Ferdinand Laub, whom he regarded as one of the greatest of violinists. He was never a pupil of Laub as is stated in some biographical notices, though Dr. Brodsky states that Laub had a greater influence upon the formation of his own individual style than even Hellmesberger himself, and here he remarks on the great value of observation in the equipment of the artist. 'I think it would be better for young violinists nowadays,' he says, 'if they were less critical and more inclined to see the good points in this or that player, and to profit thereby. One artist may phrase a passage in one way, and another in a different manner, and there is much to be learnt in executive attainment from this comparative study.' He accepted the post of a violin professor at the Moscow Conservatorium.

starting at the bottom of the ladder by teaching the very beginners. There he remained four years—1874-78.

Kieff was the next scene of Dr. Brodsky's work. He conducted the Kieff Symphony Society from 1878-80. In the latter year he married Anna Skadovsky, the daughter of a Russian nobleman who owns estates in South Russia. Then he started on his great tour lasting three years, 1880-83, giving recitals and playing as soloist at the great orchestral concerts in Austria, Germany and England. At Vienna he played Tschaikovsky's Violin Concerto, dedicated to him by the composer; he had practised it for a whole year! But he had the greatest difficulty in being allowed to play it, as there was a curious old custom in Vienna which permitted the players in the Orchestra to be the judges of what new compositions were to be performed! Dr. Richter—then conductor of the Vienna Orchestra—told him that he could not arrange to have the concerto performed unless the orchestra agreed. Thereupon Brodsky played the Tschaikovsky concerto to the band, who said: 'Yes, it's all very fine and you play it very well, but—play something else!' He agreed to 'play something else'; but a few days before the concert he went to Richter and said that unless he was allowed to play the Tschaikovsky concerto he would not play at all! This determination made him master of the situation, and he had his own way. It was in this work that Dr. Brodsky made his first appearance in England at the Richter concert, St. James's Hall, London, May 8, 1882.

His performances at one of the famous Gewandhaus Concerts led to his being invited to become chief professor of the violin at the Leipzig Conservatorium—the most classical violin school in Europe. Here he remained for eight years (1883-91). Among his most distinguished pupils at Leipzig may be mentioned Felix Berber, leader of the Gewandhaus Orchestra, Alfred Krasselt, leader of the Weimar Orchestra, Alexander Fiedemann, professor at the Odessa Conservatoire, Miss Edith Robinson, and others. It was during the Leipzig period that the celebrated Brodsky Quartet was formed—the original players being Brodsky, Becker, Nováček, and Klengel.

In 1891, to the great regret of Leipzig, Dr. Brodsky accepted a very remunerative offer made by Mr. Damrosch to play in concerts all over the United States. This engagement, with New York as headquarters, covered the period 1891-94. He then returned to Europe with the determination not to accept any further permanent post. But the late Sir Charles Hallé had his eye upon the gifted Russian violinist, with the result that Brodsky settled at Manchester in 1895 as chief professor of the violin at the Royal Manchester College of Music and leader of the Hallé Orchestra. Three weeks after he had entered upon his duties at Cottonopolis, Sir Charles Hallé, Principal of the Royal Manchester College of Music, died (October 25, 1895), and Adolph Brodsky reigned in his stead.

The Royal Manchester College of Music was opened October 3, 1893, in a building situated in Ducie Street, London Road, the gift of Mr. Charles E. Lees, of Oldham, the first Treasurer of the College. The students then numbered seventy-eight, drawn from six different counties; at the present time there are between 160 and 170, from a large district in and around Manchester, who are studying the art. Dr. Brodsky makes an ideal Principal. Resourceful, free from fads, broad-minded, a thorough musician who can appreciate all that is good, and an executive artist of the highest rank, he is the right man in the right place. He is the chief teacher of the violin, and conducts the orchestral class. For the last four years the students have given concert performances of the following operas: 'Figaro,' 'Fidelio,' 'Don Juan,' and the 'Merry Wives of Windsor.'

Dr. Brodsky is a very kind-hearted man. In 1896 he inaugurated the Brodsky Quartet Concerts in Manchester, his colleagues being Messrs. Rawdon Briggs, Simon Speelman, and Carl Fuchs. The proceeds of these interesting concerts of chamber music are devoted to the Students' Sustentation Fund of the Royal Manchester College of Music, whereby students of limited means are considerably helped in the payment of fees. The receipts have been as follow:—

The music performed at these chamber concerts consists of three instrumental concerted pieces—vocal and instrumental soloists, however eminent, would be regarded as trespassers. The subscription for the season of six concerts is only twelve shillings; single tickets for each performance cost half-a-crown and one shilling respectively. Crowded audiences assemble to listen to the 'real good music' set before them. This was especially the case on the last occasion of the season just concluded, when a Brahms programme occupied the entire evening. At the close of this concert Dr. Brodsky made an amusing little speech in which he referred to his Quartet being international—a Russian, an Englishman, a Dutchman and a German forming the harmonious combination. He suggested that the European powers should form a quartet on similar lines—United Russia, Germany and England, with a little touch of Dutch (a happy reference to the Hague Conference). 'Such a quartet,' he continued, 'could give a splendid performance at the Concert of Europe; and the money saved on armies and navies could go to old age pensions and educational funds for the good of the nations.'

At the jubilee celebration of Owens College, Manchester, held last year, the honorary degree of Doctor of Music, Victoria University, was worthily conferred upon Adolph Brodsky. He possesses the Olaf Order of Norway. This distinction, which, though given by the King, has to be promoted and approved by the Norwegian Parliament, was bestowed upon the distinguished violinist in recognition of his efforts in furthering the cause of Norwegian music—the compositions of Sinding and others—at Leipzig. He greatly treasures a handsome ring presented to him by the King of Saxony.

Dr. Brodsky's reminiscences are as interesting as they are varied. He has pleasant recollections of Hans von Bülow, of whose generous nature he speaks in terms of warm appreciation. When Bülow conducted some orchestral concerts in Hamburg he was in want of good players, so Brodsky offered to come over from Leipzig to play in the capacity of a first or second violinist, or viola player. In this he showed his gratitude to Bülow, who repeatedly went to Leipzig to play (gratuitously) with Brodsky at his quartet concerts. On one of those Hamburg occasions Principal Brodsky appeared in a three-fold capacity—solo violinist, conductor of a pianoforte concerto (the solo part played by Bülow), and as a player in the ranks of the first or second fiddles—quite 'the odd man about the place.'

Tschaikovsky, Brahms, and Grieg he can claim as having been his personal friends. We have already referred to the fathering and the saving by him of Tschaikovsky's violin concerto, therefore it is no wonder that the composer of the 'Pathetic' Symphony had a special regard for his gifted fellow-countryman and brother artist. The compositions of Brahms were repeatedly played at the Brodsky quartet concerts in Leipzig, and they have largely entered into the repertoire of this artistic combination.

Among Dr. Brodsky's pleasantest recollections is a meeting, under his own roof, of Tschaikovsky, Brahms, and Grieg. The incident must be related in his own words.

'During Tschaikovsky's visit to Leipzig he was repeatedly our guest, and I recall especially one most delightful occasion. Tschaikovsky had accepted our invitation to dinner on Christmas Day. I had not told him that I was expecting Brahms for a rehearsal of his (Brahms's) Pianoforte Trio in C minor, Op. 101. When Tschaikovsky entered the room we were in the midst of it, and he was greatly astonished to find Brahms there. They had never before met. I introduced them to each other. It would be difficult to find two men more different. Though Tschaikovsky never recognised his own noble descent and, indeed, made fun of it, yet his whole appearance, his carriage and bearing, had in them something distinguished. His voice was gentle, his manners of the most perfect politeness; from the first word and glance you knew you had to do with a man of the world who had moved in society. Brahms was exactly the opposite.

With his square, somewhat stout figure, hoarse voice and slightly sarcastic smile, he seemed to be an especial enemy of so-called fine manners.

"Do I disturb you?" was Tschaikovsky's first question, the minute my introduction was over. "Not at all," said Brahms with his curiously rough voice. "But why are you coming to hear this? It is not in the least interesting." Tschaikovsky sat down and listened till the Trio was finished. The personality of Brahms seemed to please him, but the music left him quite cold, and he was too conscientious a man to say anything pleasant to Brahms which he really did not feel about the Trio. A certain unpleasantness, or at least a want of harmony, might have been caused by this circumstance, but at that moment the door opened and Grieg and his wife entered! These two had the art of always spreading around them a pleasant and sunny atmosphere, and this was the case now. Tschaikovsky had never seen them before, but he loved Grieg's music, and he was immediately attracted to him. In most cheerful mood we all sat down to dinner, Madame Grieg being placed between Brahms and Tschaikovsky. It was not long, however, before she rose and said that it made her much too nervous to sit between them. Grieg sprang to his feet and changed places with his wife, and said: "But I have the courage." So the three composers sat together and there was a great deal of fun. I seem to see Brahms now as he drew towards him the dish of strawberry jam and said that no one else should have any, and how Tschaikovsky laughed. It was more like a children's party than a group of great musicians.

'I personally had this impression to such an extent that when the table was cleared and we still remained in our places, I brought out a conjurer's chest which I had bought as a present for my little nephew and showed them the tricks. It gave them great pleasure, especially Brahms, who made me explain each trick as soon as I had performed it.

'When our other guests had taken their departure, Tschaikovsky remained behind, and as we were going out into the street I asked him: "Were you pleased with Brahms's Trio?" "Don't be vexed with me, my friend," he said, "but I don't like it."

'What is your hobby?' we ask Dr. Brodsky. 'Chess,' he replies, and we have reason to know that, like the Knight of Windsor, he is a remarkably good player of the game. One of the most genial of men, Principal Brodsky is held in the highest respect by his colleagues at the College and is greatly esteemed by all who know him.

The King has been graciously pleased to give his patronage to the Handel Triennial Festival to be held at the Crystal Palace, in June. The dates of the Festival are: Tuesday, June 23 (the 'Messiah'), Thursday, 25th (Selection), and Saturday, 27th ('Israel in Egypt'). The public rehearsal is fixed for Saturday, June 20.

DR. ELGAR'S NEW ORATORIO 'THE APOSTLES.'

A new work by so distinguished a composer as Dr. Edward Elgar is a prospective and important event which naturally arouses considerable interest, curiosity, and great expectations. Dr. Elgar has therefore very kindly furnished, in the course of a pleasant conversation, some particulars of his oratorio 'The Apostles' specially for the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES.

'I have been thrilled with the subject of the Apostles ever since I was a boy,' he says, 'regarding them from their human side, as men, not as theological figures.' And here it may be remarked that Dr. Elgar is fully alive to the importance of the book—or libretto, to adopt the usual designation—of an oratorio if it is to have any chance of living. Without so firm a foundation the superstructure of the music, however good it may be, will be like a house built upon the sand. Following the example of Charles Jennens, the compiler of the words of Handel's 'Messiah'—that is my ideal oratorio,' says Dr. Elgar—the text of 'The Apostles' consists, with one exception, of the words of Scripture.

Coming to some of the details of the new oratorio, the composer has not attempted to individualise all the twelve Apostles. Peter, John, and Judas only are 'speaking' characters. He has had before him (1) the Christ, (2) that the Christian Gospel has to be preached, and (3) that there is need of assistance in proclaiming its message. Let us see in what manner he has worked out his idea.

The Prologue begins, after a few bars of orchestral prelude, with the prophecy contained in Isaiah lxi. (the Authorised and Revised Versions are both used throughout the work), assigned to the chorus. To this succeeds the first section, or scene, 'The Calling of the Apostles.' The 'lonely Christ' continues 'all night in prayer to God' when the angel Gabriel sings 'The voice of thy watchman' (Isaiah lii. 8), and 'Behold, my Servant' (Matthew xii. 18—22, quoted from Isaiah xlii. 1—3). 'The Dawn' brings with it the opening of the Temple. The authentic notes of the Shofar are heard in the distance, and the watchers (chorus, altos and tenors) on the Temple roof sing (the words from the Talmud) 'It shines! The face of all the East is now ablaze with light, the Dawn reacheth even unto Hebron,' and the choir within the Temple pour out their hearts in the familiar words of Psalm xcii. 1—4, 9 & 12. After an imposing interlude for the orchestra, a tenor recitative announces what may be termed the germ of the oratorio:—

And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples, and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named Apostles, that they might be with him; and that he might send them forth to preach.

The chorus then proclaim that: 'The Lord hath chosen them to stand before Him to serve Him,' and so on, while John, Peter and Judas, who now first appear on the scene, give utterance to their responsibilities, e.g., 'Thou wilt show us the path of life,' and this initial section is brought to a masterful conclusion in a concerted number of great power and beauty, intensified with the voice of the angel Gabriel floating above the chorus.

Our Saviour's teaching of the Apostles affords ample scope for a composer of poetic temperament in that the Beatitudes form its subject-matter. The scene, 'By the Wayside,' opens with the utterance of Christ, 'Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven.' The next Beatitude may serve as an example of Dr. Elgar's treatment of these sayings of our Lord, and the choice of appropriate texts:—

JESUS.

Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted.

JOHN.

The Lord shall give them rest from their sorrow,

PETER.

And will turn their mourning into joy,

MARY and JOHN.

And will comfort them.

CHORUS.

Weeping may endure for a night (Women).
But joy cometh in the morning (Men).

The lesson of 'Forgiveness of Sins'—the spirit of the Christian faith—is next portrayed; Mary Magdalen is the type chosen. This section includes the scene on the Lake with its familiar incidents of the storm and Christ walking upon the water. Here again the subject matter is one of entrancing interest, and one that calls forth the highest aspirations of the composer, and here comes also Peter's great declaration 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.'

The defection of Judas follows, the betrayal, and Golgotha.

The reappearance of Christ, and His Ascension, brings Part I. to a close with a mystic chorus in heaven, a setting of the words—

I have done Thy commandment,
I laid down My life for the sheep.

sung ppp. in strains ethereal, while the Apostles on earth utter their own prayer, 'Give us one heart and one way.'

Part II. opens with the first gathering of the Apostles, the descent of the Holy Ghost, and the exhortation of Peter. The troubles and trials go on till we arrive at Antioch. This is the culminating point, as the new name, Christians, was here given to the followers of Jesus for the first time. The Gospel had now been started on its great mission, the life of the Apostles, with its wider influence, ceases to be concrete and personal, and belongs to the history of the world.

Here the libretto ends, save for the Epilogue. This embodies the message as stated in the Epistles of Jude (17-25), and I. John (v., 3, 4, and 5) Authorised and Revised Versions, and the work is brought to a conclusion—not by a fugal Amen beloved by the majority of oratorio composers—but with these words, terminating with a setting of the Benediction:—

Beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the Apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

Building up yourselves in your most holy faith, &c.

Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy,

To the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

The foregoing is but a very brief outline of what may be regarded as an epoch-making work, full of suggestiveness and reverential artistry. Some aspects of the music, now in course of completion, will be referred to in these columns at an early opportunity.

THE FITZWILLIAM MUSEUM, CAMBRIDGE.

Continuing the description of some of the volumes of manuscript music in the library of the Fitzwilliam, reference may be made to a Dixit Dominus, in ten parts (two choirs) and orchestra, by Pergolesi. It would seem that this work was performed at the concert given by the Academy of Ancient Music on April 19, 1787; but for this occasion Dr. Callcott considered it necessary to write an Introduction to Pergolesi's strains. There is a fine collection (fourteen volumes) of madrigals and other vocal works by Marenzio. Dr. Bever (c. 1780), to whom the collection formerly belonged, has written in the first volume these words: 'This, with 13 other volumes, contains as many of the works of Luca Marenzio as I have hitherto been able to meet with.' It is more than probable that the MS. music preserved in this library could furnish material for further developments in Handel plagiarisms. Two specimens (referred to by Mr. J. S. Shedlock in his articles in THE MUSICAL TIMES, July to September, 1901, on 'Handel's Borrowings') may be instanced. Against a duet by Clari ('Quando col mio s' incontra') there has been placed a MS. copy of part of the overture to Handel's 'Theodora,' endorsed as follows: 'Dr. Aldrich is desir'd to place this Fugue in Page 3rd in the 2nd madrigal Book the first.' Above the music is written: 'Fugue in the Overture of Theodora the two subjects taken note for note from the second movement in the second madrigal in the first vol. of Sig. Clari 1740'; and above, possibly in Lord Fitzwilliam's hand: 'N.B. The Oratorio of Theodora was perform'd the first Time in the year 1749.'

Everyone knows that Bononcini was hounded out of England for palming off a madrigal as his own which he had copied from Lotti. But Handel appears to have been familiar with the compositions of his rival, the said culprit Bononcini. The following, from the vivace movement of 'Peno, peno, e l'alma fedele,' is uncommonly like the solo and chorus 'Zion now her head shall raise' in 'Judas Maccabæus.'

Honourable mention must here be made of the labours of Vincent Novello, who, with enthusiastic zeal and untiring industry, copied many volumes of the music contained in the Fitzwilliam Museum. By special permission of the University authorities he published the following pieces in a collection known as 'The Fitzwilliam Music':—

The foregoing list by no means exhausts the catalogue of Vincent Novello's transcripts, as the private library of Messrs. Novello contains ten volumes of unpublished extracts. It may be interesting to recall the fact that it was in the Fitzwilliam Museum that Vincent Novello projected his edition of Purcell. He and Samuel Wesley met at Cambridge in 1826, when the latter suggested the printing of the sacred works of the great English composer. Lack of means prevented him from carrying out the project, but Novello, the pioneer, at once took up the idea, and carried it out in the four Purcell volumes he published between 1828 and 1832.

Before making mention of the Handel collection of manuscripts, reference may be made to the Fitzwilliam.

THE BOOKPLATE OF VISCOUNT FITZWILLIAM.

splendid collection of music presented by the late Richard Pendlebury, a Fellow of St. John's, and Senior Wrangler in 1870. This section of the Library consists of about 2,000 volumes of music of all kinds—from full scores to single songs and pianoforte pieces, chiefly modern publications—purchased by the donor during a period of nine years. The value of the Pendlebury collection is increased by the fact that each volume may be borrowed for a limited time and taken away from the building by authorised persons. This, of course, is a great boon to any student of music permanently or temporarily residing at Cambridge, and one that is greatly valued and appreciated by serious lovers of the art.

It is impossible within the limits of this article to do full justice to the priceless volumes of Handel manuscripts in the Fitzwilliam. The entire collection has been most carefully and thoroughly described in minute detail by Dr. A. H. Mann—a Handelian par excellence—in the catalogue already mentioned. Only a few of the most striking features—out-of-the-way features, perhaps—of the Fitzwilliam Handeliana will therefore be set forth. It is evident that this collection has become detached from that in the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace. It ultimately came into the hands of Lord Fitzwilliam, who was a devoted admirer of Handel and one of the principal organisers of the famous Handel Commemoration held in Westminster Abbey in the year 1784.

A volume of Italian duets supplies us with the signature of the great master during his residence in Italy (1706-1710): it appears thus—'G. F. Hendel.' Various pieces, not printed, written for 'Acis and Galatea' are interesting. Dr. Mann is of opinion that they may have been alterations and additions for the London performance of 1732, or that at Oxford in 1733. Handel's well-known adaptiveness is shown in a complete sonata for two violins and violoncello on which he ultimately based the overture to 'Saul'; and 'Let the bright seraphim' ('Samson') is here found originally written as a chorus (S.A.T.B.) with string and oboe accompaniment. A more amusing instance of his economy in using up existing material is shown in the Dead March in 'Samson' and the Wedding March in 'Joseph and his Brethren,' the music in both instances being practically the same! There is a reference to the use of the Serpent in the oratorios of 'Samson' and 'Solomon'; but as no parts for this instrument exist in the scores, the inference is that Handel directed the Serpentist to play, when necessary, from an ordinary vocal bass part. Is there not a good deal of suggestiveness in this theory of the doubling of the voices by certain instruments?

Of a more domestic nature is a memorandum in the great man's handwriting, in pencil, which reads thus:—

12 Gallons Port.
12 Bottles French Duke Street
Meels.

The last word may be either the name of the wine merchant who supplied the beverages, or, on the other hand, Handel's phonetic way of spelling his rations. Here is another note having a financial reference:—

James
Banker in Lombard Street, pour M. Wesselow en France.

It would seem as if Handel and Charles Wesley, the hymn writer, must have met, but all investigation on the part of Wesleyan experts has hitherto proved futile, there being no reference to Handel in the Wesley literature. The Museum contains the autograph of three hymn-tunes by Handel, entitled:—

- I.—The Invitation. Sinners obey the Gospel word.
- II.—Desiring to Love. O Love divine, how sweet thou art.
- III.—On the Resurrection. Rejoice, the Lord is King.

The last of these tunes appears in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' and other collections, all three being in the 'Church of England Hymnal,' edited by Dr. Mann. The manuscript is endorsed as follows:—

The words of these Hymns are by my father, the late Rev. Charles Wesley.

S. WESLEY.

Of supreme interest are the studies for the 'Messiah,' e.g., 'He was despised,' which shows

A page which has the appearance of having been doubled up and (probably) carried in the pocket contains a copy of one of the London cries of Handel's time. At the top is written:—

John Shaw, near a brandy shop St. Giles's in Tyburn Road, sells matches about—

HANDEL.

From the portrait by Sir James Thornhill in the Fitzwilliam Museum.

Said to have been painted for the Duke of Chandos in 1720, when Handel was thirty-five years of age.

that Handel originally intended the word 'was' to bear a secondary accent. In the same volume is a page of fragments connected with some oratorios, headed thus:—

The Book of Kings, Ahab, Jezabel Naboth, the Profet Elija.

May not this be taken as evidence that the composer of the 'Messiah' once thought of writing an oratorio on the subject of 'Elijah'?

Another memorandum reads:—

Mr. Duval medecin in Poland Street.

This is doubtless the address of a doctor, as Handel was very ill at the time (1737).

The concertino parts complete (for two clarinets and corno di caccia) of an unpublished Overture in D and in five movements, is the only known instance in existence of the use of the clarinet by Handel. Dr. Mann says:

'The string parts of this work are not at present forthcoming; it is to be hoped that they will be found in some of the libraries containing Handel's MSS., so as to enable the performance and publication of this important composition to be undertaken. It was probably written in 1740.' A portion of a soprano solo, in the handwriting of Smith Junior, Handel's amanuensis, is a setting of the following words:—

Future times record thy story
And with wonder sing thy name;
Great in wisdom, great in glory,
Thee all nations shall proclaim.

How prophetic these words are in regard to the fame of Handel!

A recent and most valuable addition to the treasures in the Fitzwilliam Museum is the gift by Mr. Francis Barrett Lennard of sixty-seven volumes of Handel's works, transcribed by John Christopher Smith, most of which were collected by the donor's father, the late Mr. Barrett Lennard. Dr. Mann is making a thorough examination of each volume, and the result of his careful researches has already revealed fresh information of interest and importance.

For valued assistance in the preparation of this article full acknowledgment is due to Dr. James, Director of the Fitzwilliam Museum; to Mr. H. A. Chapman, Principal Assistant, and to Dr. Mann, organist of King's College.

BUTTERFLY MUSIC.

I mean no sort of contempt to be involved in the phrase "Butterfly Music," though at first sight it would seem to imply frivolity and, perchance, even triviality. I use it not so much as an explanation of a certain problem, as a description of a certain musical fact—a fact that is always puzzling and, to worshippers at certain shrines, singularly disheartening. It is a sort of commonplace, believed among great artists and great critics, that every more-or-less artistic achievement, even if the achievement lies only on the side of sheer beauty, will some time or another, in spite of contemporary disdain, come into its ultimate kingdom, and mount the throne of its natural sovereignty. Artists in their dying words have professed their confidence in the final appreciation of their works on the part of the multitude; and so often has this splendid assurance been realised in fact that we have inclined to spell out a law from such death-bed self-confidences, forgetting many a case in which superb egotism is not justified by the events of the future. Such a case was that of the painter, Benjamin Haydon, who, though he committed suicide during a momentary eclipse of his vanity, nevertheless believed most devoutly in the golden immortality of his artistic productiveness which was really quite fruitless. Now the fact which I wish to emphasise in this paper is that there is a great quantity of really admirable and really beautiful music, which deserves the warmest praise and the deepest appreciation, but which, often exquisite as it is, has a career all too brief, like the loveliest butterfly that lingers on a summer's day—when the air is heavy with heat and the sun burns as in a brazier, over the flowers of the fields, the buttercups, the poppies and the wild hyacinths. In other words, the devout belief of the artist in the immortality of his work because it is beautiful, is not a necessary guarantee of immortality, even though he cherish it to the last moment of his career.

Immortality in music—what precisely does the phrase mean? Or, in other words, what would you say were the constituent parts of the music which is destined to linger and last in the ears of succeeding generations? Not sheer beauty, is the somewhat startling reply; for, as I have said and as I intend to fortify by example, much music distinguished by sheer beauty, and by that alone, has become dumb before the Corridors of Silence—those dim, nether passages a-down which the eloquent orator, the divine singer, the Orpheus of his time, have wandered mutely, finger on lip, utterly, unrescuably speechless and songless. But the constituent facts which saved some music from those Corridors of Silence were the folded flowers not yet set before the sun of future musical thought and of future musical development. For such music there was no death, no ferrying across the Styx to the land of the hereafter. Usually misunderstood during the life of its audacious creator, the unfolding of the flowers, their bringing to life, the fulfilment of the past, the realisation by a master dead with the dreams that he had fashioned for posterity, remained. Yet where a musician realises the pure beauty of his own work—pure beauty as apart from any other quality—he may, as I say, die in the confidence of the greater artist, where the flowers of immortality are not really among his sheaves. It is of such music, which for reasons that will now be sufficiently understood I call Butterfly Music, that I would write.

I will begin with the most familiar name of Arthur Sullivan. I have grave and serious doubts if the music of that 'beloved musician' has not had its sting of immortality drawn from it. I consider, to be frank indeed, that by far the greater bulk of it is not likely to live. And yet there is page upon page of it which possesses a vital beauty, a fineness of conception, a refinement of melody that mark it out as the work of a most genuinely inspired musician. But there is nothing whatever in Sullivan's writing which points to futurity. A beautiful butterfly it sped out in the morning, and by its rare colours and engrossing humour of flight it glowed in the sunshine and attracted the enthusiastic admiration of all that saw it; but this was as beautiful butterfly music as one might chance to encounter, and its remembrance will linger in the ears of those among us who have it among our young memories; it is for posterity that it may come colourless and dead after its briefly brilliant contemporary career. To such a point has the music of Offenbach now come with the present generation—Offenbach, over whom our fathers raved and delighted, dead now as any butterfly that has flown into the frost of the night. Indeed, nearly all the opera buffa or comic opera of the last century belongs to the province of Butterfly Music. Its revival is dismal; you feel that the actors are wearing the 'garb and not the clothes' of the ancients.

Leaving these lighter cases, I may approach cases based on even a colossal scale. I come to Meyerbeer. Can you find in one single operatic score by Meyerbeer the genius of a great future school, 'the ancestral voices prophesying war,' which whisper through every score-page of Richard Wagner once he had drawn his sails past the score of 'Der Fliegende Holländer?' I trow not. Meyerbeer's industry was amazing; his constructive powers never slackened; call him an Eagle-Moth—his music was still Butterfly Music. 'Song for a day shall fill a day'; it had no message for the future; its fundamental basis was the chrysalis, a thing not destined for endurance but only to evolve the butterfly, itself unfated to immortality.

There have been cases, sad and sorrowful, when of two contemporaries, one, the weaver of butterfly music, has stolen the glory from the other crowned—but all invisibly to those whose eyes were veiled—with Daphne's laurels of immortality. Such was the fate of Mozart as opposed to Salieri. Salieri the triumphant, the composer of butterfly music, was raised aloft for worship, and was carried to the Corridors of Silence, while Mozart too late was gathered into the Fields of Elysium. I have not attempted—indeed, I began by disclaiming any such attempt—to treat with contempt Butterfly Music which, as I have said, is often beautiful with the beauty of one summer's day; but when, as in such a case as this, the Music of Immortality brings to the artist in consequence of Butterfly Music suffering, and heart-burning, and poverty, and the tragedy of a young death, then one feels that the beautiful music that lives but for a day can even have its poisonous effect upon the music over which have brooded the Wings of the Angel of Immortality. Was Sterndale Bennett then among the fashioners of such butterfly music? The facility and elegant beauty of his phrasing, the nice appropriateness of his orchestration, the charming poetry of his ideals—all these, alas! seem to have gone their way to the Corridors of Silence. And consider the case of Emmanuel Bach, whom the worthy Dr. Burney considered superior to the great Johann Sebastian because the son was more 'elegant and less crabbed.' How sturdily through the weight of years did the great old man work his posthumous way back to the ears of those who recognised in his music the 'thoughts that wander through eternity'—he not 'to perish rather, swallowed up and lost, In the vast womb of uncreated night.'

As you look back along the steps that the passing musicians have taken in the darkness—musicians of this or that degree, I mean, not the commonplace ballad-monger—you note the division of their steps, some drifting to the 'golden, remote wild West' of Immortality, 'where the sea without shore is,' the others wandering as by a guiding fate to the Corridors of Silence. It is with this latter band that I have dealt. I have tried to solve in some way the mystery of the oblivion which has bound their footsteps, as if those who came after had, in their regard, drunk of Lethe. It seems to me that though much of their music is beautiful, it has no tendrils that can outstretch to the future; it is of its time; it says naught in prophecy; and we who, like others of the past, have lived in its time, do not understand why it makes so small an appeal to the generation that is treading on our heels. The great men who perhaps were only partially known in their time grew like strong trees that slowly lifted their branches to the sun. But these others were the beautiful wastrels of art; their music flew abroad in eddying and graceful flight; all who were alive on the day of that flight stayed to admire and to applaud; but with the set of sun they were gone. It would be cheap to deny these musicians qualities of great beauty; but it is not of their song that you can write:—

The voice I hear this passing night was heard
In ancient days by emperor and clown;
Perhaps the self-same song that found a path
Through the sad heart of Ruth when, sick for home,
She stood in tears amid the alien corn.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie sailed in the Allan line steamer 'Bavarian' on the 19th ult. for his Canadian tour. We have already given full particulars of the scheme of Festival concerts of British music, organized by Mr. Charles A. E. Harriss, of Ottawa, which the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music will conduct in various places in the Dominion (vide THE MUSICAL TIMES of January and March, pp. 15 and 170). One correction has, however, to be made. The orchestra placed at Sir Alexander's disposal is 'The Chicago Symphony Orchestra,' of fifty performers, and of which Mr. Rudolph Rosenbecker is the conductor, and not the orchestra with which the name of Mr. Theodore Thomas is so worthily associated. We are authorized to state that Sir Alexander Mackenzie has in no way been deceived in this matter, and that Mr. Harriss has never advertised the orchestra in any other form than by its right name.

The programmes of the Canadian Festivals will be varied in the different towns visited by Sir Alexander and his colleagues. At Toronto he will have the additional and valued co-operation of Madame Blauvelt, Miss Millicent Brennan, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Watkin Mills. Lord Minto has consented to become President of the Musical Festivals, and Lord Strathcona, Vice-President. On the 11th inst. Sir Alexander Mackenzie will be entertained by the Toronto Clef Club, the function to consist of a reception and supper. Other expressions of goodwill and appreciation of the genial Principal will doubtless be forthcoming wherever he goes. Our readers may be interested to learn that Sir Alexander has kindly consented to write a series of letters to THE MUSICAL TIMES recording his Canadian journeys and experiences.

Mr. Algernon Ashton, in a letter printed in our Correspondence column, calls attention to the centenary of the birth of Franz Lachner, though some of the older dictionaries give the year 1804 as that in which this forgotten composer first saw the light. It is evident that Lachner has suffered neglect in England. His name first appears at the Philharmonic Society's concerts on April 9, 1836, when the programme of that evening included:—

Sinfonia in E flat (first time of performance) Lachner.

What one of the critics thought of the work may be gathered from the Musical World of April 29, 1836, in a notice of the concert in words that are not lacking in outspokenness:—

A prize was offered a year or two since by Haslinger, of Vienna, for the best new symphony; and M. Lachner gained it against fifty competitors. It were worth while to obtain a sight of, and compare that composition with the one produced on Monday evening. Either Lachner had a worthless squad to contend against, or his effort on that occasion has exhausted him, for this is positively an unworthy affair for any concert. It is wholly void of originality, and is too long, even for a composition possessing ten times its merit. The best features in it are the instrumentation, and the Andante, which nevertheless is but an imitation of Beethoven. The Scherzo, too, has a pretty point, which is repeated over and over again. The audience testified in decided terms their disapprobation of the piece.

Four years later Lachner's name appeared for the second and, so far as we can discover, the last time in a Philharmonic programme, that of March 9, 1840, when Miss Masson sang a song by him entitled 'The sea hath pearly treasures,' with a horn obbligato played by Mr. Jarrett.

We turn to the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts for further information concerning Lachner's music in England. On December 12, 1863, and November 5, 1864, his Suite in D was performed, and on October 7, 1865, the Intermezzo and Gigue from the Suite in E minor. The Suite in C, No. 6 (Op. 150)—really a symphony—was played at Sydenham, under Mr. Manns, for the first time in England on February 13, 1875. The fugue—probably one of those to which Mr. Algernon Ashton refers—was repeated on February 5, 1876. Here is its frisky subject, given out by bassoons, 'cellos and basses, and answered first by violas and clarinets, then by first violins and flutes, and lastly by second violins and oboes:—

As Mr. Ashton says, Lachner was a friend of Schubert's. He orchestrated the 'Song of Miriam'; and he told Mr. C. A. Barry that in the last year of Schubert's life he took half-a-dozen of his friend's 'Winterreise' songs to Haslinger, the Vienna publisher, at Schubert's request, and brought back tenpence a-piece for them!

The committee of the Westmorland Musical Festival is to be credited with the happy invention of a new feature for such functions—a Folk-Song Competition. While perfectly recognising the classic style of composition, the committee is the first to take official cognisance of an undercurrent of national song fast running dry. Last year's competition resulted in the bringing forth of many an interesting old song hoarded purely in memory in the Dales, and the prizes (silver-gilt and silver medals) were awarded to two ladies for the singing of a couple of quaint traditional songs, 'Sledburn Fair'—really Slaidburn, near Clitheroe, in Lancashire—and a local hunting song. Other lyrics ran these very close and gained slight consolation prizes. The points on which the songs will be judged are that they must be genuine old folk-songs which have been traditionally current in one or more of the six northern counties and hitherto unpublished. Variants of recently-collected and published songs will not be debarred, and the words may have appeared on ballad sheets. What the committee really wish to rescue are the country songs so fast dying out, and not traditional survivals of the theatre or concert song of fifty or a hundred years ago. Mr. Frank Kidson, of Leeds, a well-known authority on such matters, has again been called upon to decide in this competition, which takes place on the 23rd inst.

The distinguished violinist, M. Jacques Thibaud, was engaged for a Colonne concert in February, but finding from the programme that he was set down to play a Mozart concerto and some Bach solos between the second and third parts of Schumann's 'Faust,' he wrote to M. Colonne saying that while he would be ready to fulfil his engagement to play, respect for his art would not allow him thus to be sandwiched between two parts of so colossal a work as Schumann's 'Faust.' No change was made. M. Thibaud did not appear, and a notice was distributed with the programme merely to the effect that he had failed to keep his engagement! His letters to M. Colonne, explaining his action, have been published in Le Monde Musical. We will not discuss as to whether M. Thibaud was legally justified in refusing to appear, but by the stand he has taken he has certainly shown respect for his art, and thereby deserves the sympathy of all right-minded musicians.

Mr. Harry Evans of Dowlais spoke some home-truths regarding Welsh choirs and conductors in an address he delivered, on the 17th ult., before the Liverpool Welsh National Society. He made no effort to explain away the recent defeats of Welsh choirs, and would not allow that the idiosyncrasies of English adjudicators, except so far as in previous years they had over-flattered Welsh singing, were a factor worth considering. The downright plain truth of the matter is that Welsh choralists had cultivated mainly only the massive Handelian style and had neglected refinement, delicacy, and restraint. Moreover, they fed themselves upon a limited repertory which stunted musical growth, and they formed choirs simply and solely for competitive purposes. Mr. Evans contended, as we have done on repeated occasions, that the Welsh have all the necessary voice and musical ability, and have but to face resolutely the discipline and scientific study indispensable to the attainment of the highest results to again come out at the top.

The Daily News of the 23rd ult. contained a suggestive leading article entitled 'Our Musical Apathy.' The writer, while saying much that is perfectly true in regard to the foreign element in our musical life, is much too circumscribed in his outlook. It is true that he refers to the announced visit of Dr. Richter with his choir and orchestra from Manchester to perform 'The Dream of Gerontius' in London during the autumn of this year; but, with that exception, he ignores the spread and the love of music in those parts of Great Britain not within the bounds of Regent Street, Covent Garden, and South Kensington. Splendid work, deserving of full recognition, is being done in the Provinces which is totally ignored by the musical critics of the London newspapers.

Dr. Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' received another performance in Germany on the 11th ult., this time at Danzig, by the Sing-Akademie, under the skilful direction of Herr Fritz Binder. The following are some extracts from the Danzig journals relating to the performance:—

Danziger Zeitung: In the history of the Society, and of the art of music in Danzig, this day and this achievement will for all time remain memorable both in consequence of the peculiar importance of the work performed, and the very gratifying manner in which its extraordinary difficulties were surmounted. . . . 'The Dream of Gerontius' gives Elgar the rank of one of the first, if not the first English composer of importance in the history of music.

Danziger Allgemeine Zeitung: The Island Kingdom has suddenly produced a tone-poet 'by the grace of God' whose name must be placed by the side of our most important contemporary composers. Elgar's music belongs to the most grandiose, most impressive, and most characteristic that has for a long time been produced in the realm of oratorio. His mastery lies in the unparalleled power of his creative impulse; in the boldness of the thematic architecture; the brilliant, often bizarre, but never trivial rhythms and harmonies; and in the wealth of magnificent sound-effects and minutest nuances.

Westpreussische Volksblatt: A brilliant novelty amongst oratorios . . . We heard last night choruses which can hardly be surpassed for impressive power, but also others of truly heavenly splendour of melody . . . Double fugues and eight- or nine-part movements of overwhelming effect . . . Endless applause rewarded the conductor Herr Binder and the executants for the rare and elevating evening. With resounding Tusch, Herr Binder was presented with laurel wreaths at the conclusion.

Herr Fritz Binder, who so ably conducted the performance of Dr. Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' at Danzig, referred to above, was born, of German parents, at Baltimore, thirty years ago. At the age of five he was taken to the Fatherland, where he has since resided. As a child he gave many indications of remarkable musicianship, and between the ages of seven and eleven he played as a prodigy at numerous concerts in Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Holland, and Belgium. His earliest teachers were Professors C. Reinthaler and Bromberger. He subsequently studied for three years under Leschetitzky, at Vienna.

HERR FRITZ BINDER,
DIRECTOR OF THE SING-AKADEMIE, DANZIG.

On the recommendation of Rubinstein he became a student of the Cologne Conservatorium, his teachers there being Professors Wüllner, Seiss, Franke, and Jensen. In 1896 he left the Conservatorium with distinction, and received an appointment at Solingen as conductor of a choral society there. He appeared as a solo-pianist in many towns, and in July, 1901, he was appointed Director of the Sing-Akademie at Danzig, a post he still holds. Herr Fritz Binder, who, in addition to being a very able exponent of pianoforte music, is an excellent conductor, hopes to visit England 'one of these days.'

In a letter to Messrs. Novello he writes in regard to the performance:—

The concert is over; the enthusiasm was great. . . . Unfortunately I do not know Dr. Elgar personally. Please write to him and tell him that we all lay our thanks for his glorious art-work (herrliches Kunstwerk) at his feet, and that I hope to have an opportunity of making his acquaintance in the course of time . . . And when, in years to come, Elgar's name is mentioned with the very best, I shall be proud to have been one of the first to introduce him to the German public.

M. Emile Sauret, having accepted an engagement offered him by the Conservatoire of Chicago, will relinquish his position at the Royal Academy of Music at the end of July next. The study of the violin, for which the Academy has been famous since the days of Prosper Sainton, will now be represented chiefly by Messrs. Wessely and Bláha, and the most recent addition to the Professoriate, Mr. Willy Hess, who is severing his connection with the Conservatoire at Cologne in order to join the staff at Tenterden Street.

Tablets are erected over houses in which great men were born or in which they lived, but at length both fall a prey to time, the all-devourer. The Schwarzschanerhaus, Vienna, in which Beethoven died on March 26, 1827, is already or is about to be pulled down. The same fate awaits another house connected with the master, one at Oberdöbling, in which he composed part of the 'Eroica' symphony. To this house, by-the-way, other memories are attached: it was here that Körner wrote his 'Zriny,' and that the poet Bauernfeld died in 1890.

In a certain Cathedral city in the—— of England (after all its exact location mattereth little) is an Ancient Guildhall. Under the portico thereof a correspondent recently took refuge during a heavy storm of rain. In order to lighten the weary moments of waiting he read the Police notices there posted up, one of which ran thus:—

Found in High Street on Friday, the 23rd inst., a choral necklace, with gold clasp. Apply to the Police Station.

Perchance the fair owner of this 'choral necklace' wore a brass band round her waist, thus forming a combination of vocal and instrumental adornment.

A MUSIC-MAKING IN THE POTTERIES.

'No smoke, no money,' is a saying in the Potteries. Therefore it is of no use to anathematize the atmospheric environment of North Staffordshire. Similar conditions characterize Sheffield, Manchester, and Newcastle-on-Tyne; but in all these places, the Potteries included, it is quite certain that any effort in the direction of fine choral achievement does not end in smoke. In visiting these grime-environed industrial centres, one cannot fail to be impressed with the strong contrasts produced by the dulness of such surroundings and the magnificence of the voices of the dwellers therein and round about. But may not the musical enthusiasm of these people be attributed, in some measure, to the delightful change which music affords them after their weary hours of toil? The following account of a music-making in the Potteries, with some historical notes, may furnish the answer to this question.

The seed-sowing of the fruitful yield of choral music in the Potteries took place about forty-five years ago. All honour to the man who initiated so splendid a movement for the uplifting of his fellows! His name—Josiah Wolsincroft Powell—should be held in grateful memory. Mr. Powell (1820-1891) was an enthusiastic amateur in music. His occupations were successively Registrar of births and deaths, and Town Clerk of Burslem. He found that the people could not read music. He therefore tried first the Hullah system and afterwards that of Waite (the use of figures), but without success. Then he adopted the Tonic Sol-fa method, with results that far exceeded his expectations. In 1860 and 1861 he brought his choir to the Crystal Palace in competition with others at the Tonic Sol-fa Festivals, and won prizes—the judges on the second occasion including Goss and Turle. These successes made choral singing a very popular subject, and gave a great impetus to the spread and cultivation of music in the Potteries. Mr. Powell—who, by-the-way, first translated Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' into tonic sol-fa notation—had a worthy colleague in Mr. George Howson; and Mr. H. Goodfellow, with the experience of more than forty years as a choralist, and now chairman of the committee of the North Staffordshire District Choral Society, is alive to tell the tale of those early days of something attempted, something done.

All this pioneer work paved the way for the North Staffordshire Musical Festivals, conducted by the late Dr. Swinnerton Heap, and held in the Victoria Hall, Hanley. The first took place in 1888 (on this occasion Edward Elgar played among the violins in the orchestra), the second in 1890, and the third in 1893. At the fourth (in 1896) Elgar's 'King Olaf' was first performed, and the last (in 1899) witnessed the production of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha.' Not a little of the success of these meetings was due to the labours of the chorus-master, Mr. F. Mountford, an enthusiastic local amateur.

Before passing on to the event which has prompted this article, it is only fair to mention the good work of others in the district. For instance the Burslem Tonic Sol-fa Choir, conducted for many years by the late Mr. J. W. Powell, and subsequently by Mr. W. Docksey (now of Bradford); the North Staffordshire Philharmonic Society, conducted by the late Dr. Swinnerton Heap until his death; and the Hanley Philharmonic Society, Mr. Fred Mountford conductor. These Societies all did excellent work in the district for a number of years, as did also the Newcastle-under-Lyne Philharmonic Society. But they have all ceased to exist, and for a season or two—in fact, until the initiation of the North Staffordshire District Choral Society—the Potteries district was practically served by the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society, an organization which has done and is doing excellent work under the able conductorship of Mr. James Garner, who also conducted the premier choir at the Liverpool Eisteddfod in 1900.

The North Staffordshire District Choral Society was founded in the month of June, 1901, when the Society was organized for the particular purpose of taking part in the Royal National Eisteddfod held at Merthyr Tydvil. It owes its origin to a prize-choir hailing from Talke, a small village in the district, conducted by Mr. J. Whewall. Its members (about 200 in number) are all working folk in the Potteries—the tenors and basses being artisans following the various avocations of the district. The sopranos and altos have also to earn their own living in various occupations. The ladies pay a subscription of one shilling for the season, the gentlemen put down one shilling and sixpence, and all have to find their own music. Two-thirds of the choir sing from the tonic sol-fa notation. The rehearsals are held at Tunstall, as a convenient centre in a group of towns which includes Burslem, Hanley, and Stoke-on-Trent, and the members come from within a radius of five miles. Attendance at rehearsals is regarded as a duty of a very enjoyable nature, and any man who has to work on a 'night shift' experiences a sense of keen disappointment at his compulsory absence.

These Potteries singers appear to be an ambitious folk. In the year 1901 they essayed to beard a certain lion in his den—the lion being Taffy, his den the Principality. In other words, they competed at the National Welsh Eisteddfod, held at Merthyr, and carried off the first prize (£200 and gold-mounted baton), actually beating all the nine native choirs that competed! A similar victory was gained at the Bangor Eisteddfod in September last, when Mr. Whewall and his forces vanquished all the Welsh choirs in the fray and also the celebrated Blackpool Choir conducted by Mr. Whitaker. With such achievements it is no wonder that the Committee of the Society—a body of hard-working men not lacking in forceful energy, and a zealous Secretary—should desire to add to the laurels already won, by organizing a performance of Dr. Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' with the co-operation of the composer as conductor.

This great event took place in the Victoria Hall (Town Hall), Hanley, on the 13th ult. with most gratifying success. The pitiless rain by no means damped the enthusiasm of the performers and the attentive audience that filled the large building. The soloists were Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, the mere mention of whose names is a sufficient guarantee of excellence in their important participation. The orchestra (led enthusiasm. They sang with heart and voice. No flabbiness, no make believe, but a genuine outpouring of song. Some chorals fail to open their mouths as they ought to do, and too often regard the conductor as beyond their range of vision; but these Potteries people would tell you 'That's not business.' And then the ease with which they sang music that cannot but be regarded as difficult to the ordinary run of choral societies who are content to go on in the rut of a jog-trot four-in-a-bar unemotionalism! Not a point was missed, and the various entries seemed as though the themes gently floated in upon a sea of music. Intonation, perfect; and the absolute refinement of the whole choir was magnified in the delicate singing of the semi-chorus. This is high praise, but it is fully deserved by these good chorals of the North Staffordshire District Choral Society and their most able conductor, Mr. James Whewall.

by Mr. Speelman) consisted of forty-five players from the Hallé Band at Manchester, with a good infusion of local players—twenty-six in number, an efficient complement which included six lady violinists, Mr. W. Sherratt, who has held the post of organist of Stoke Parish Church for nearly a quarter of a century, efficiently presided at the organ. The programme, entirely selected from the compositions of Dr. Elgar, consisted of the 'Froissart' Overture, songs from the 'Sea Pictures' Cycle (admirably sung by Miss Muriel Foster and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies), and the choruses 'As torrents in summer' ('King Olaf') and 'It comes from the misty ages' ('The Banner of St. George'). With the exception of the last two—excellently sung under the baton of Mr. James Whewall (at the request of Dr. Elgar), the above-named works were conducted by the composer, who also directed the splendid performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius.'

The honours of the evening were carried off by the chorus, a youthful and exceedingly intelligent body of singers. One could not fail to be struck by their

CHORAL SOCIETY.

In conclusion, we may quote from a letter written by Dr. Elgar, after the performance above noticed, to the Secretary of the Society:—

Will you be good enough to let the members know that I was delighted and, I will add, deeply impressed by their performance. I have rarely heard such finished, musicianly singing, and have never had less trouble to get my exact reading—often a difficulty with one rehearsal; this was made easy for me by the splendid training of Mr. Whewall, and by the alert, attentive, and friendly attitude of the chorus.

The tone was magnificent,—silvery yet solid,—well balanced and sonorous, and the 'attack' fine: the infinitesimal trifles—not shortcomings—which did occur were caused merely by the want of more time in rehearsing with the orchestra. I place the chorus in the highest rank, and I thank the members for giving me the opportunity of hearing a performance of my work almost flawless.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

THE MEMORIAL TO ARTHUR SULLIVAN IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

In the east aisle of the north transept of St. Paul's Cathedral has been erected the memorial to the late Sir Arthur Sullivan, who is buried in the crypt of the church. We give a photograph of the bas relief. Mr. Goscombe John, A.R.A., the artist who designed and executed it, has kindly furnished us with the following description:—

'The chief idea in the design is the figure of Orpheus with his lute, or rather lyre, suggested by Sullivan's beautiful song. I have endeavoured to convey the idea of the wandering minstrel, the inspired singer, and to suggest by the youthful Orpheus the spirit of lyrical music, as this seemed to me to be characteristic of so much that is finest in the work of Sullivan.

'The lower portion of the memorial, containing the portrait, is treated more in an ornamental way so that the figure of Orpheus shall be the most prominent feature. The wreath about the portrait is one of oak and laurel. The memorial is of bronze.'

The proposed memorial to the late Sir John Stainer in the Cathedral he served so well will appropriately find its place near that of his friend Arthur Sullivan.

WILLIAM REA.

WITH much regret do we place on record the loss of an excellent musician and a good friend to music in Newcastle-on-Tyne, in the person of William Rea, whose death took place at his residence, 7, Summerhill Grove, in that city, on the 8th ult. The deceased musician was born in the East End of London on March 25, 1827. He began to play the organ as a child eight years old. At the age of ten he became an articulated pupil of Josiah Pittman, organist of Christ Church, Spitalfields. During the absence of his master in Germany, young Rea deputised for him for several months. At that time Vincent Novello, who had shown much interest in the boy, visited the church Sunday after Sunday for the pleasure of seeing and hearing him play the organ. Among Dr. Rea's treasures were two gifts of music inscribed thus:—

Presented by Vincent Novello to Master William Rea as a mark of approbation, and as an encouragement to persevere steadily in his endeavours to become an accomplished musician. September 6, 1839.

From Vincent Novello to his friend Mr. Pittman's clever little deputy, Master William Rea, with kind wishes for his improvement in his musical studies. Christmas, 1840.

Master Rea competed for more than one organ appointment—on one occasion playing the great G minor fugue of Bach—but he was always rejected on account of his youth; at last, aged sixteen, he obtained his first post, Christ Church, Watney Street, in the East End of London. While there he subscribed to the first edition (1845) of Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas, then published at one guinea net! In a letter to the present writer—dated August 29, 1894—he said: 'I believe I was one of the first to play these Sonatas in public. I remember playing the third (in A major) at St. Olave's, Southwark, on a Sunday evening early in 1847, and before this I played some of the movements to Dr. Gauntlett privately (he registering for me) on the same instrument.'

Rea took some pianoforte lessons of Sterndale Bennett. It was a great event in the youth's life when, in 1846, he journeyed with his master (Bennett) to Birmingham in order to be present at the first performance of 'Elijah.' On the occasion of that visit he, Mendelssohn and Bennett formed a trio who took a walk after breakfast on the morning following the production of the oratorio. At Birmingham Mendelssohn invited Rea to study under him at Leipzig. After having held his second organist appointment in London—St. Andrew's Undershaft—he proceeded first to Leipzig in order to study under Moscheles (pianoforte) and Richter (counterpoint), and he subsequently proceeded to Prague that he might gain further knowledge in pianoforte technique from Dreyschock.

After an absence of three years on the continent Rea returned to London and entered upon the busy life of a professional musician of attainment. He brought with him a large quantity of Schumann's pianoforte music. By lending the 'Novelletten' to various people, he helped to make that master known, one of the borrowers being Cipriani Potter, the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music. He gave chamber concerts, played much in public, founded and conducted the Polyhymnian Choir (100 male voices), conducted the Amateur Orchestral Society, saw Berlioz and Spohr conduct their own works, gave many lessons, and continued his church work, his last organ appointment in London being at St. Michael's, Stockwell. At the Great Exhibition of 1851 his masterly playing of Bach's Organ Fugues attracted the attention of an old gentleman who, like Oliver Twist, asked for more. The veteran listener then handed the young organist his card, which bore upon it the name 'J. B. Cramer.' Rea was present at the opening ceremony on May Day, 1851. His ticket of admission stated that the holder thereof was 'Mr. Hill's organ blower.' Upon presenting the document at the entrance, the door-keeper said 'It's a very strange thing, but you are the third organ blower of Mr. Hill's that has gone up!'

The great and eventful change in his life came in 1860. The Corporation of Newcastle-on-Tyne advertised for a Borough Organist at a salary of £150 a year. Nine candidates competed before the judges, W. T. Best and Henry Smart, and William Rea obtained this important post. The second and third candidates in the order of merit—both highly commended by the adjudicators—were William Spark and Walter Parratt, the latter then a youth of eighteen. For upwards of forty years he rendered most valuable aid in the furtherance of music in Newcastle. Rea may be regarded as the pioneer of orchestral music in the great city on the Tyne. In 1867 he started an annual series of orchestral concerts, conducting every evening for a month at a time, the series extending over a period of nine years. He engaged a first-rate band consisting of London players (led by Carrodus, with Alfred Gibson among the first violins), and he played Wagner long before the Master became fashionable in London. In one season (October, 1869) Rea performed eleven complete Symphonies and twenty-four Overtures, in addition to many smaller works. A man by no means narrow in his sympathies, Dr. Rea took infinite pains to foster choral music in the city of his adoption, and the high rank to which Newcastle has now attained in this respect is not a little due to the good seed sown and nurtured by the remarkably able musician who has recently passed away.

The church organ appointments held by him in Newcastle and district include St. Thomas's; St. Andrew's; St. Mary's, North Shields; and St. Hilda's, South Shields. He was an honorary fellow of the Royal College of Organists, and in 1886 the University of Durham worthily conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Music. His compositions include a Jubilee Ode for the Newcastle Exhibition of 1887, several anthems, songs, some pianoforte transcriptions, &c., in addition to three organ pieces of great charm.

The remains of Dr. Rea were laid to rest in Jesmond Old Cemetery. The large and very representative company present at the interment was indicative of the great respect in which he had so long been held in the place where he had worked so unceasingly for the promotion of the divine art.

AN OLD-AGE PENSION FUND.

*Come, come, we are friends,
Let's have a dance.*

SHAKESPEARE.

Such is the terpsichorean invitation which headed the announcement of the concert in aid of the Pension and Benevolent Fund of the Hallé Orchestra, given on the 19th ult. at Manchester, under Dr. Richter's conductorship. Here is the programme of that light fantastic toe music-making:—

Ballet Suite	Jean Philippe Rameau.
(Arranged for Concert use by F. Mottl).
(a) Menuette.	(b) Musette.
(c) Tambourin.
Six German Dances	Mozart.
Invitation to the Valse	Weber-Berlioz.
Tarantelle	Auber.
Dance Indienne	Rimsky-Korsakoff.
Dance Cosaque	Seroff.
Csárdás
Slavonic Dances	A. Dvorák.
'Die Romantiker' Walzer	J. Lanner.
Künstlerleben Walzer	Johann Strauss.

This selection is in pleasant and strong contrast to the gloomy nature of many orchestral programmes. Why should not the Philharmonic Directors give us a Strauss waltz—'not Richard himself again'—once in the season, if only as an antidote to the morbid strains of immature compositions. That, however, by the way.

The Pension and Benevolent Fund of the Hallé Orchestra referred to above is so excellent an institution that we have much pleasure in furnishing some information in regard to its history and aims. The inception of the scheme is due to Dr. Richter, once an orchestral player himself, who wrote to the Manchester Guardian of March 6, 1901, the following letter:—

In a few days the second season since I became conductor of the Hallé Orchestra will come to an end. I must gratefully acknowledge that my endeavours in the cause of musical art have been zealously supported on all hands, and most of all by the gentlemen of the Executive Committee. I therefore look hopefully to the future, and am resolved to stay in Manchester for the remaining years during which I may be able to work effectively and fruitfully in the service of my art.

There is a fine motto, 'Musica lux in tenebris.' I am not sure where I read or heard that motto, but it is here that I have learned to appreciate its full significance. I shall scarcely be accused of ingratitude or hostility to Manchester if I venture to say that we are not exactly spoilt by sunshine. But as a makeweight for that, the genius of the city has given to the inhabitants a certain warm sensibility to the eloquence of tone. Living in a climate rather unfavourable to the delight of the eye, they seem to be all the more keenly alive to the delight of the ear. Fortunately we have in our midst the resources necessary for the satisfaction of that musical sense—an excellent choir with a most able choirmaster, and an Orchestra of the highest ability and devotion to duty. There is zealous work at our rehearsals, and no loss of time. So much is certain, the results being recognized on all hands. The maintenance and improvement of this Orchestra is the object that I now have most at heart, and the first condition of success in that object is stability. There must be a nucleus of experienced musicians about which such new-comers as may from time to time have to be admitted will be grouped till they can combine with the rest on an equal footing.

To bring about that stability we require an old-age pension fund. Orchestral players are not, as a rule, in a position to make a fortune or to lay by any considerable savings for the support of their old age. They are therefore easily enticed away from one appointment by the offer of another with slightly better remuneration. I require complete devotion to the matter in hand, and I recognise with pride and pleasure that our Orchestra, almost without exception, give the very best of their power and ability for the sake of the works performed and for the honour of the Hallé Concerts. It is my firm intention to promote the formation of a fund from which, in case it prospers as I hope it may, members of the Orchestra disabled by old age or illness would draw a pension. Such a fund would greatly strengthen the bond which unites the musicians of the Hallé Orchestra, and would make it easier both to obtain and keep talent of the highest quality.

For this good and charitable purpose it is my intention once a year to give a concert, the entire proceeds of which will be devoted to the fund in question. I venture to hope, too, that the amount of the fund may be increased by free-will offerings, and that it may thus in no long time begin to serve its purpose. I propose that the names of charitable contributors should be printed in the programme-books as 'Promoters of the Pension Fund.'

In the firm belief that my appeal to the friends of music in Manchester will not be in vain, I sign myself,

Yours, &c.,

HANS RICHTER.

This genial letter brought a 'free-will offering' of £500 from two anonymous friends. At the general meeting of the Hallé Concerts Society held in the spring of 1902, the chairman of the executive committee, Mr. E. J. Broadfield, stated that the Hallé Executive would welcome any attempt on the part of the orchestra to formulate a Pension scheme for the band, to be managed by a committee elected by the members of the band. Encouraged by this expression of approval on behalf of the powers-that-be, negotiations took place between Dr. Richter and a member of the Orchestra, with the ultimate result that the Pension Fund became an actual reality. It is not necessary to trace its history in detail, suffice it to say that the idea of the scheme is to entitle any member of the orchestra to a pension at the age of sixty, or before that time if incapacitated by illness; and that the pensions, &c., are paid from a. Interest of existing capital (£1,120).

b. Annual subscriptions of members of the Orchestra.

c. Donations by friends and well-wishers.

d. Proceeds of annual benefit concerts on behalf of the Fund, of which three have been given (in the Spring of 1901, 1902, and 1903), and at which the players give their services.

Such, then, is the broad outline of a scheme that will have many sympathisers far beyond Manchester. The splendid and not over-remunerative work done by our orchestral players deserves full acknowledgment. If a distinguished musician happens to fall on evil days, or leaves those dependent upon him in a penniless condition, the hat is passed round and more or less successful appeals are made to the charitably disposed; but the poor bandsman whose hands at last fail to respond to the calls of his bow, or whose lungs are not what they used to be, may starve, being without influence and having had no opportunity of saving. We cannot do better than summarise the foregoing reference to so good a cause and print in extenso the following letter which appeared in a recent issue of the Manchester Guardian by Mr. E. J. Broadfield:—

THE HALLÉ ORCHESTRA PENSION FUND.

To the Editor of the Manchester Guardian.

SIR,—Will you allow me, as chairman of the Executive of the Hallé Concerts Society, to call the attention of your readers to a few facts in connection with the extra concert to be given next Thursday?

The programme itself will doubtless excite considerable interest and curiosity, not only on the part of the general public, but amongst musical amateurs. The other day, in fact, I heard a distinguished musician say that he would at any time gladly travel four or five hours to hear Dr. Richter conduct waltzes by Strauss and Lanner. It will be noticed, moreover, that the concert, like that of last year, will be distinctly historic, as the programme will illustrate the development of dance music; and in addition to such familiar pieces as Weber's 'Invitation à la Valse,' with Berlioz's orchestration, and Auber's 'Tarantelle,' it will include some of Rameau's daintiest music and a series of charming dances by Mozart.

The programme, however, speaks for itself, and it is rather to the pension fund I wish specially to refer now. At the last annual meeting of the Hallé guarantors I said that it would be advisable to secure the co-operation of the band in settling the pension fund scheme, and I am glad to be able to say that the fund is now no longer an institution merely to be hoped for, but that, as the result of friendly negotiations between the Executive and a committee of the Orchestra, a scheme has been adopted which will shortly come into operation. Its details have still to be completed, but the broad outline may be easily described. Every member of the Orchestra may, and probably will, contribute a fixed annual sum, which will entitle him to a pension at the end of a fixed period of years, or when, through sickness or other disability, he is no longer able to fulfil his engagements. And if at any time a member is unable to accept an engagement at the beginning of a season, or if his engagement shall not be renewed, his claim to have returned to him the whole of the money he has contributed in subscriptions will be fully recognised. But the annual subscription will not be the only contribution of the Orchestra to the pension fund. Henceforward they will play gratuitously at the annual extra concert, and the conditions just stated in regard to members whose engagements will not be renewed will prevail in this case also, as members will have the right to claim the fee they would have received had the concert been one of the regular series. The pension fund will also be assisted by contributions through the Executive Committee. We have now in hand for pension purposes, including the surplus of two special donations of together £500, about £1,120. From these special donations we have paid towards the assistance of sick and aged instrumentalists about £83; but the residue, including the proceeds of the extra concerts and the contribution of friends, remains intact. This we hope will steadily increase, and when funded it will allow us to make substantial annual grants to the fund.

Yours, &c.,

E. J. BROADFIELD.

The Secretary of the Fund is Mr. Carl Fuchs, principal violoncellist of the Hallé Orchestra, who has kindly furnished us with the above particulars of this estimable orchestral organization.

Church and Organ Music.

CHANTING.

The notes on the Anglican Pointed Psalter in our last issue (p. 174) have brought forth the following exceedingly interesting letter from that excellent authority on Church music, Mr. John S. Bumpus. He writes:—

SIR,—In the Historical Notes on Chanting the Psalms given in your last issue, I observe that you dwell at some length upon Miss Hackett's letter contributed to the Harmonicon of February, 1832; and you point out that the worthy and accomplished 'Lady of Crosby Square' took an evident interest in the above subject.

She undoubtedly did so, for in my possession is a large-type octavo copy of the Psalter, pointed from beginning to end, with bar-lines and other symbols, by her own hand, in red and black ink.

On the blank pages with which the book is interleaved such verses as failed to satisfy Miss Hackett on the first trial are 'scanned,' and given with figures, accents and small black and white notes, as mentioned in the Harmonicon letter. Occasionally, short Scriptural comments are introduced, and each Psalm is prefaced by an historical notice.

Miss Hackett doubtless intended to publish the result of her labours, for inserted at the commencement of the volume is the 'copy' for a title-page, which runs thus:—

The Music | of the | Bible | including | the Book of Psalms, pointed as they | are to be sung in Churches and such other passages from | the Sacred
Scriptures | as were originally adapted | & designed for | Musical Performance | or | Instrumental Accomp.

The | Appendix | containing | a few easy Chants,
Services and | Anthems for Congregational |
Worship. Selected and arranged by | W. Horsley,
Mus. B., Oxon.

The Appendix may be had separately.

'Serve the Lord with gladness and come before
His presence with a song.'

Then follows this dedication:—

To the Members of the | Church of England | as by law established | this volume | is inscribed | by a | namesake & disciple of | Bishop Hackett.

At the first Commemoration of Sir Thomas Gresham, held at St. Helen, Bishopsgate, on July 12, 1832, the Psalms for the day (lxii., lxiii., and lxiv.) were printed with Miss Hackett's pointing, as part of the Form of Service used on the occasion, a copy of which lies before me. These Psalms were printed, so a footnote informs us, from an edition of the Psalter then being prepared for publication by W. Hawes, Vicar-Choral of St. Paul's Cathedral, but beyond the aforesaid specimens I cannot find that any more was ever done. The work possibly languished for want of support, or there may have been others at work in the same field. The two chants (both double) used for the Psalms at the above Commemoration were Hawes in C (No. 31 in a collection then in course of publication by Hawes himself) and Goss's well-known adaptation from the Allegretto of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony (No. 32 in the same Collection).

A large quantity of Miss Hackett's papers, diaries and letters, extending from 1810 to 1874, came into my possession some six years ago, all of which I have carefully arranged, bound and indexed for easy reference. Amongst the correspondence are many interesting and valuable autographs of celebrities of the day in the realms of theology, literature, painting, architecture, sculpture and music, chiefly English. On the subject of chanting, Miss Hackett seems to have carried on an animated correspondence with the Rev. W. H. Havergal, of Worcester, Rev. Peter Maurice, of New College, Oxford, John Peace, Librarian of the Bristol City Library (author of 'An Apology for Cathedral Service'), Robert Jones, organist of Ely, Rev. Joshua Stratton, Precentor of Canterbury, and others.

I herewith send Miss Hackett's Psalter for your inspection, as I, in common with many of your readers, know so well the great interest you take in everything that relates to the History of English Church Music and the choral service.

Yours faithfully,

Glebelands, JOHN S. BUMPUS.

PURCELL'S 'O SING UNTO THE LORD.'

Sir Frederick Bridge, in one of his recent Gresham lectures, made a serious attack upon Vincent Novello's edition of Henry Purcell's anthem 'O sing unto the Lord.' 'It is dreadful,' said the Professor, 'to see how Vincent Novello treated this anthem, and quite dreadful to think how it is sung in cathedrals.' He (Sir Frederick) bases his charge on 'a contemporary MS. of Purcell's great anthem written in 1688. The

MS.', he went on to say, 'belonged to Purcell's great friend Gostling, the celebrated bass, and his descendant, my friend Mr. Kennedy Gostling, has lent it to me.' The inference is, of course, that Novello made his edition from this transcript, or one exactly like it, as Sir Frederick sets forth in detail the things that he (Novello), with evil intent, has done, or has not done. But there is not the slightest evidence that Novello ever saw this Gostling copy, or one similar thereto. If Sir Frederick will look at the folio edition of 'O sing unto the Lord,' he will find an editorial note—unfortunately not printed on the octavo copy—which reads thus:—

The copy from which this anthem has been engraved, was contained in a very curious old Volume of Manuscript Church Music, that formerly belonged to Mr. Richard Guise, who succeeded Dr. Benjamin Cooke as Master of the Choir Boys at Westminster Abbey. The Book afterwards formed part of the valuable collection of Mr. Bartleman, at the sale of whose music this very rare volume was purchased by Mr. John Watts (who was a pupil, as singing boy, of both Dr. Cooke and Mr. Guise) and by whom the book has been since very kindly presented to the Editor of this work.

Unlike many editors, Vincent Novello has frankly stated the source from which he published the anthem, and it is not fair to charge him with deliberate maltreatment without further evidence. We have been unable to trace the whereabouts of the volume referred to in the above note: perhaps some of our readers may be able to give some information in regard to its present location. It is easy to criticise, but the fact should not be forgotten that, but for the enthusiasm of Vincent Novello seventy years ago, Purcell's anthems would have remained a sealed book to many a musician and choir. He was the first to publish any of the anthems of Purcell, and although he was not infallible,—who is?—his name should not be held up to reproach without just cause.

TWO SPECIAL SERVICES IN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

Time was, and that not so very long ago, when organs were entirely tabooed in Presbyterian churches, even in England. But among the many ecclesiastical changes that have taken place in recent years none is more marked than the changed attitude towards music in churches under Presbyterian government. For instance, at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, South Shields, on Sunday afternoon, the 1st ult., a musical service included the rendering of Bach's fine church cantata 'Sleepers, wake!' and Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' given, to the edification of the congregation, by the church choir, under the direction of the able organist of the church, Mr. W. G. Whittaker.

At Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, on the 13th ult., the Musical Association sang Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' (Praise Jehovah) and Stainer's 'The Daughter of Jairus' in a manner most commendable to all concerned. The performance may be regarded as unique, in that the choir of seventy voices sang without a conductor, and that the accompaniments to both works were played on the organ entirely from memory! When, however, we say that the organist was Mr. Alfred Hollins, chief musician of the church, the adjective 'masterly' naturally comes to mind in the achievement, and it may be used without fear of undue adulation. Miss Maconochie, the leading soprano of the church, sang her solos beautifully.

Mozart's 'Requiem' was sung in Ripon Cathedral at a special service on Friday evening the 20th ult., under the careful direction of the organist, Mr. C. H. Moody, with Mr. Percy Hughes, organist of Holy Trinity, Coventry, at the organ. The other instrumental accompaniments were pianoforte (Mr. Harry Jackson) and drums (Mr. J. Shaw), while the Cathedral choir was augmented by vocalists from the Training College and Choral Society. The service lists of Ripon Cathedral show an eclectic selection of music, from Byrd to Brahms. Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion is to be sung on Wednesday evening the 8th inst.

THE BUZZING SWELL TONE.

Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons, the well-known organ builders, have recently been turning out some old papers. Amongst them is the following curious application, of a purely bonâ fide character, which they received from a lady. We print it literatim, only omitting the name of the fair writer:—

Miss ——— would be glad to know the cost of building the following organ (without pipes), or with, if possible to get into room 6 feet 6 inches in height:

2 manuals, straight pedals, 20 stops as following.

Oboe must swell out a buzzing swell tone.

Mechanical swell - to ped.

Great.

Great ped.

Swell org : oboe swell 8 ft.

Vox Anglicana - 8 ft.

Flute 8 ft. Lieblick - 8 ft. echo.

Tremolo Vox Humian 8 ft. mixture.

Gt. organ large open Diapason.

Soft shut Diapason.

Trumpet. Principal. Dulciana.

Twelfth, 2 ft. 8 in. and one more.

Gamba loud.

Pedal organ. Soft Diapason. Loud.

Bourdon pedals.

4 composition (or more) pedals acting on swell, great and pedal organs.

Powerful swell pedal held open by swing rod.

Perfectly plain wood—no show—as used in churches, unpolished, and plain steel pipes.

Nothing came of the proposal, not even the 'powerful swell pedal held open by swing rod.'

Messrs. Breitkopf and Haertel have just issued a new edition of their extensive catalogue in a portly tome of 1,240 pages and weighing over 4lbs.! The plan adopted—strictly alphabetical of composers' names, with full cross-references—is the only plan for a catalogue if it is to be of any practical value. The extent of this useful book of reference may be estimated by the fact that the works of Schubert occupy nearly sixty pages of closely, yet clearly, printed titles, his songs, about 650 in number, alone filling nine pages. The Beethoven and Mendelssohn entries necessitate forty pages each. The work of collecting such a mass of detail as is here presented must have been a task of patient magnitude, and the Catalogue seems to have been very accurately compiled. We notice, however, one slip. The name of one of the Editors of the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book is somewhat shorn: it appears as J. A. Fuller!

The Madrigal Society offers two prizes for the same number of madrigals. The first award is the Molineux Prize of Ten Pounds and the Society's Medal, and the second is the sum of Five Pounds. Compositions must be sent in before October 1 to the Hon. Secretary, Mr. J. Edward Street, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey. The conditions of the competition will be found in our advertisement columns.

FESTIVALS IN APRIL.

April will be quite a Musical Festival month this year, though the various events occur very near the border-line of its successor, in fact one fixture extends into the month of May. We subjoin the various music-makings in chronological order, with an outline of each meeting:—

NORTHAMPTON.

April 17 and 18.

This music-making, organized by the Hon. Mrs. C. Spencer, consists of a competition and evening concert.

MIDDLESBROUGH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Conductor, Mr. Kilburn. April 22 and 23.

The scheme includes Dr. Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' (conducted by the composer); the first performance in England of Fritz Volbach's 'The Page and the King's Daughter'; Bach's 'Sleepers, wake!'; Richard Strauss's Symphony in F minor, and Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 in E flat ('The Romantic'); Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' &c. Hon. Secretary, Mr. C. Wood, North Ormesby, Middlesbrough.

CARLISLE.

April 22 and 23.

Competition and two concerts; Bach's 'O Light everlasting,' conducted by the adjudicator, Dr. McNaught, will be the chief work performed. Mr. D. Hodgson is the Secretary.

WESTMORLAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Held at Kendal. April 23, 24, and 25.

Concerts and competitions.—Dr. McNaught, Mr. Tertius Noble, and Mr. Frank Kidson, adjudicators. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, conductor. Principal works: Somervell's cantata 'The Power of Sound,' Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' and a new cantata, composed especially for the Festival by Mr. George Rathbone and entitled 'Vögelweid, the Minnesinger,' to be sung by a chorus of 500 children, accompanied by one of the local orchestras and conducted by the composer, also Miss Lehmann's new Cantata 'Once upon a time.' The interesting Folk-Song competition, peculiar to this Festival, is referred to on p. 234. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. A. H. Willink, Burneside, Kendal.

SPILSBY.

April 27 and 28.

This is also a competition (judge, Dr. McNaught) and concert; at the latter 'The Power of Sound' (Somervell) will be sung. Mrs. Massingberd deserves all commendation and encouragement for galvanizing into musical life this rural district in a somewhat out-of-the-way corner of Lincolnshire.

BRIDLINGTON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

April 28.

With Mr. Bosville, most genial of programme annotators, at the helm. The programme includes Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride,' Nesvara's 'De Profundis,' Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander,' Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, Mr. Arthur Hervey's Overture 'Youth,' and a new Suite for orchestra, composed for the Festival by Mr. G. T. Patman. Secretary, Mr. B. M. Townsend, Bridlington.

MORECAMBE MUSICAL FESTIVAL AND COMPETITION.

April 29, May 1 and 2.

The works to be performed are 'The Banner of St. George' (Elgar), conducted by the composer, and Bach's 'O Light everlasting.' Dr. Elgar, Dr. McNaught and Mr. Percy Pitt are the adjudicators at this Festival of more than local renown. Secretary: Mr. Powell.

If we cannot boast of a Festival in London during the present month, we may call attention to the Joachim Quartet Concerts announced to take place at St. James's Hall on April 25 and 27, May 1, 5, 7, 12 and 14. It will be evident from the above schedule of events that all the good music in the British Isles is not made in London.

Reviews.

Selected Pianoforte Studies. Set I., Books 1 to 4; Set II., Books 1 to 4. Progressively arranged by Franklin Taylor.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Not the least difficulty attending the vocation of a teacher of the pianoforte is the selection of music for his or her pupil. And is not this more especially the case in regard to technical studies? There is no dearth of such material, it is the matter of suitable selection that troubles the conscientious teacher, especially when the pupil belongs to the great majority coming under the designation 'average.' It is in order to meet such difficulty that these 'Selected Pianoforte Studies' have been compiled by Mr. Franklin Taylor, who is not only a most skilled expert in pianoforte teaching, but may be regarded as 'a guide, philosopher, and friend.' A quotation from his Preface sets forth the raison d'être of this useful publication:—

The present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

It was an excellent idea to make two selections—Set I. for pupils less naturally endowed than others, and Set II. for those of higher technical attainment. Of course, where additional studies are desired in order to develop some particular shortcoming in a pupil's technique, the larger collection edited by Mr. Taylor and well known as his 'Progressive Studies,' from which the present selections have been made, is available. The practical utility of the publication is so obvious that its adoption by many teachers may be a foregone conclusion.

Life of Richard Wagner. An authorised English version by William Ashton Ellis of C. F. Glasenapp's 'Das Leben Richard Wagner's.' Vol. III.

[Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.]

'Ought I to call the present volume an "English version" of Herr Glasenapp's work?' asks Mr. Ellis in his Prefatory Note. His doubt arose from the fact that 'its five hundred pages represent but a hundred of the German original.' Strictly speaking, no; but it was not worth while altering the title. The period of which he treats is indeed 'rich in psychological and æsthetic interest,' so that the expansion is welcome. It extended from the years 1849 to 1852-3, during which was developed the scheme of the opus magnum, which a quarter of-a-century later was realised at Bayreuth. Numerous extracts are given from the 'Correspondence of Wagner and Liszt,' also from Richard Wagner's letters to his Dresden friends,' and as both these collections have been before the public for some years, we may be able to sum up many pages in a few words. From Mr. Ellis's point of view lengthy extracts were indispensable. The volume opens with a few pages concerning the fruitless visit of Wagner to Paris, in 1849, after he had been forced to leave Dresden. He wants to get to Zurich to be at peace and set to music his poem 'Siegfried's Tod,' which he calculates will take him about 'half a year'! But first came much essay writing, and then when he did set to work, he found that a 'Young Siegfried' must take precedence; and finally he thinks out a big scheme, three dramas and a prologue, so that neither of the operas is sent, as Liszt had hoped, to Weimar. A whole chapter is devoted to Liszt and to the Princess Carolyne v. Sayn-Wittgenstein; it is a long one, but it throws a vivid light on the Wagner-Liszt correspondence, and shows us how much more Liszt would have done for Wagner had he not 'given his soul into silken bondage.' The friendship of Liszt for the composer was distasteful to the Princess; and the latter not only influenced the life of Liszt and his actions, but also his writings. In his last letter written to her three weeks before his death, Liszt signs himself 'umilissimo Sclavissimo.' Of the analyses of 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin' 'much,' says our author, 'is to be assigned to the Princess.'

It was in 1852 that the German theatres began to take an interest in Wagner's operas, and for this Mr. Ellis easily accounts. Wagner was no longer at Dresden, an active object of the jealousy of Reissiger, and also 'of the two opposing camps outside, Berlin and Leipzig,' while Liszt by the production of 'Lohengrin' had aroused curiosity. In the published correspondence between Liszt and Wagner we learn something of the negotiations with various theatres, but in the present volume the story is presented in fuller detail. The delays and shabby behaviour of Leipzig in connection with 'Tannhäuser' caused great annoyance to Wagner, but at last when it was produced there in 1853 the success thereof was great. In one letter to Liszt the composer writes:—'With these Philistines, in general, I probably shan't travel far: they haven't the remotest idea of the nature and future of my works.' We often hear people say 'If only Wagner were alive now what joy it would give him to see how his works are now admired and appreciated!' But such a sentence as the above reminds us that a man of genius is conscious of his power; he knows that he is ahead of the age in which he lives, and is therefore not surprised at the indifference or hostility of the world; as with Beethoven, so was it with Wagner. In a letter to Uhlig the latter says: 'I don't live in my age at all, because I flit among you as a ghost, because the wide world is full of fools.' Wagner cycles are all the fashion now, and it is interesting to note that the first one was given by Liszt at Weimar in 1853. The 'Flying Dutchman' was performed on February 16 in that year, and a second time before the 20th, when 'Tannhäuser' was given, followed on the 26th by 'Lohengrin.'

Passing on to the 'Ring,' Mr. Ellis frankly acknowledges that 'Das Rheingold' is 'the least popular of the four sections of the "Ring," and, unlike its fellows, is scarcely ever performed purely for its own sake, i.e., alone.' So far as London is concerned it has never been thus given. He does not accept the usual explanation, viz., a lack of interest in the doings of mythical gods and goddesses, but accounts for it by 'the general dislike of any story that so ruthlessly displays the seamy side of human nature.' For ourselves, however, we prefer the former explanation. One point is mentioned which 'militates against more general appreciation of "Das Rheingold,"' viz., the 'stringing of chains between the giants' staffs, and the hanging thereto of salvers, &c., that clink like tin as they strike each other.' The effect produced is no doubt highly ridiculous, yet we cannot think that it interferes with 'general appreciation' any more than does the dragon scene with that of 'Siegfried.'

Mr. Ellis has made what he justly deems 'no mean discovery.' The existence of two 'Siegfried's Tod' poems, the original one of 1848, and the revised one of 1852-3, identical with that of 'Götterdämmerung,' is well known, but he believes that there was an intermediate one made in 1851. The 'three different styles of diction' in the 'Götterdämmerung' first attracted attention to the matter. He intends to deal with it at length in Vol. IV.; for the present he only adduces 'the broader reasons of a faith that in my own mind already amounts to a certainty,' and from what he says with regard to internal evidence, he seems to have good reasons for his belief. Mr. Ellis's work has evidently been to him a labour of love, and those who have followed him thus far will look forward with eagerness to the remaining volume or volumes, for the life of the Bayreuth master is one of absorbing interest: it is more than the life of the man, it tells also the story of the decline and fall of old-fashioned Italian opera, and the rise and progress of music-drama.

NEW EASTER ANTHEMS.

I will magnify Thee. By W. H. Bell.Sing ye to the Lord. By C. H. Lloyd.Awake, awake! By the Rev. T. W. Stephenson.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The compositions of Mr. W. H. Bell have shown so much originality and independence of conception that we take up the anthem with pleasurable anticipations, which it is satisfactory to be able to state are realised on examination of the music. The composition is opened by a short passage for the basses in unison, emphatic and jubilant in character, this expression being increased on the entrance of the full choir. The opening portion is succeeded by a section intended to be sung by a smaller number of vocalists unaccompanied. The music of this is flowing and graceful, and well laid out for the voices. It gives place to a baritone solo which, however, may be omitted if desired. The final chorus is bold and vigorous and brings an excellent example of modern Church music to an effective close.

Dr. Lloyd's anthem is less ambitious in design; it is shorter by four pages than the preceding one, and it makes less demands on the executive abilities of the singers. There is a dramatic element in the music, and consequently there are some very effective passages, notably in the setting of the words 'Death is swallow'd up in victory.' The Anthem 'Awake, awake!' by the Rev. T. W. Stephenson is not specially designed for Easter, but it would be suitable for that season inasmuch as it is written for Parish Choir Festivals. The music is diatonic in character and solidly harmonised. It presents no difficulties to fairly trained choirs.

L'Education Musicale. Par Albert Lavignac.

[Paris: Librairie Ch. Delagrave.]

To write about one department of musical art within reasonable compass is no easy matter: to treat of the art generally, and to give advice to pupils concerning the study of this or that instrument, of singing, or of theory and composition, and to keep within moderate limits, is a truly difficult matter. Our author, who is Professor of harmony at the Paris Conservatoire, really conveys many practical hints in a singularly easy, pleasant style. His observations, cautions, and criticisms show knowledge and experience, and his book will benefit both pupils and teachers. It would naturally disappoint readers who expect detailed information on any particular subject, but what M. Lavignac offers is sound and sensible: his book might well be entitled multum in parvo.

Organ Music. By various composers.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Two pieces by Mr. Edwin H. Lemare are entitled 'Rhapsody' (Op. 43) and 'Chanson d'été.' The first of the pair fully justifies its title, and perchance it tells a tale. The second, a typical Lemareian theme in B flat with an episode in the key of G minor, is a composition that has in it the elements of popularity. A Canzonetta and Réverie, by Mr. Herbert Brewer, are imbued with that thoughtfulness which one expects from him. If the Canzonetta is a little restless, the Réverie is a delicate and withal an attractive little piece in six-eight time.

Mr. William Faulkes has written a very melodious composition in his Minuet and Trio (in F); it would make a pleasing recital piece. Everyone knows Mr. E. H. Thorne as a serious-minded musician, his Bach crusade at St. Anne's, Soho (of which church he is the organist), alone entitles him to be so designated. Moreover, this earnestness of purpose shows itself in his three compositions for the organ now before us—(1) a Prelude and Fugue in F sharp minor, (2) Variations on Jeremiah Clark's tune 'St. Luke,' and (3) a Fantasia in F. As love laughs at locksmiths, so Mr. Thorne makes light of difficulties, or rather he expects the players of his trio of pieces to be well equipped in the matter of technique. Organists, and there are many such, who like 'something to work at'—the 'something' being solidly written music for the instrument—will enjoy the fare provided for them by Mr. Thorne.

Old dance forms seem to be favoured by composers for the organ. Here we have another Minuet and Trio (in E flat), this time from the pen of Mr. John Pulein. Pleasant contrast is afforded by the Trio (in G), with its drone pedal bass. With the exception of some octave passages in the right hand, the piece presents no difficulties, even to a player of average attainments. Dietrich Buxtehude, an organist much admired by Bach, is one of those old-time composers who had something to say and the gift of being able to say it. Mr. John E. West has recently edited the Chaconne in C minor of the old master; furthermore he has supplied a brief biographical note of his career, a good idea which might be further developed.

The Village Organist has now been extended to Book 34—the most recent additions to this useful publication being Books 32, 33 and 34. Of the nineteen pieces herein set forth, eleven are original compositions contributed by Mr. Myles B. Foster, Mr. John E. West, Dr. Roland Rogers, Dr. Cuthbert Harris and others. The arrangements, which have always been a feature of the series, include transcriptions from the works of the great masters from Bach to Wagner. All the characteristics of the Publication are retained in this fresh instalment of a work that is of practical value to those for whom it is primarily intended.

The Morning Service set to music in the key of A. By John E. West.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. West writes with long practical experience both as an organist and choirmaster, and this, combined with a lively sense of the value of direct melodic expression, results in his Church music being eminently singable and effective. The Morning Service comprises the Te Deum Benedictus, and Jubilate, which are severally allied to music of important design. The part-writing in the Te Deum is in a considerable measure contrapuntal, but it does not present difficulties to a fairly-trained choir. In spirit the music is essentially modern. The traditional pianissimo for the song of the Cherubin and Seraphin is avoided, the reiteration of the word 'Holy' being delivered fortissimo; the recitation of the text is broken up by short organ interludes, and the conclusion is legato and piano. The opening of the Benedictus is dignified and impressive, and as the setting proceeds there are some notably harmonic changes. The part-writing is interesting, and the Gloria is imposing. The setting of the Jubilate is appropriately jubilant, and the flowing nature of the part-writing is very attractive.

From the character of the accompaniment to this Service we may assume that the composer intends to score it for orchestra, although this in no sense implies that it is unsuitable for organ.

The Junior Violinist. Edited by C. Egerton Lowe.

Books 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

This useful series is growing rapidly. It provides graded pieces and exercises, all of which are printed plainly and even beautifully, and in every detail carefully edited. It must be a great boon to teachers and young players to find suitable music of the best kind ready at hand without a painful and tedious search. Book 5 contains Mozart's Sonata in C major (Köchel, 303), the Allegro of which is a capital study in the rapid execution of fairly easy passages not going beyond the third position. The pianoforte part demands good playing. Book 6 contains eight of Mendelssohn's 'Songs without words,' also not going beyond the third position. Book 7 consists of Mozart's Sonata in F major (Köchel, 547), a beautiful study for both pianist and violinist. In Book 8 we have Schumann's 'Phantasiestücke' (Op. 73), (three pieces). Here rather more technical skill is called for. Many players not juniors would feel that such music makes more than a little demand upon execution, and more especially upon interpretative skill. Book 11 contains Three Romances, by Schumann (Op. 94). Here again real appreciation of the music is an absolute condition of success. The three pieces are full of characteristic beauty. Book 12 gives us six of Pleyel's duets for two violins (Op. 8), and Book 13, another set of six (Op. 48). These twelve duets bring us as it were back a year or two, for, interesting and melodious as they are, they make little demand upon technical skill. Every young player will delight in playing with his or her teacher or a fellow-student these really excellent and educational compositions. It may be well to mention that the first set of six (Book 12) can be played wholly in the first position, and the second set (Book 13) in the first and third positions. These violin duets being complete in themselves no pianoforte accompaniment is provided. Book 14 consists of scale and arpeggi exercises, and includes all the exercises of this kind asked for by the Associated Board in their School examinations and those in the Junior and Senior Divisions of the Local Centres. Books 15 and 16 each give three Sonatinas for Violin and Pianoforte by Carl M. von Weber. These light and pretty fancies call for delicate playing, and the violin part demands an acquaintance with the region of the fourth position which will not be an insuperable difficulty to any player who has mastered the pieces in the preceding books of the series.

Correspondence.

THE STREETS OF LONDON.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to the paragraph on the streets of London named after composers, in the March issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, it is stated that Mendelssohn is unrepresented in that respect. May I be allowed to mention that a huge block of very up-to-date mansions (so called) has recently been erected just off Sloane Street, and overlooking the old burial ground of the Royal Chelsea Hospital, to which the name of the composer of 'Elijah' (Mendelssohn Gardens) was given. This has, however, now been changed to a less pretentious title. Possibly the builder repented him of using a name so artistic to a modern block of flats.

I should also like to add that at Fulham is to be found a Novello Street. Although the name does not stand for a great composer, yet it is one that spells music, and is dear to musicians the whole world over.—Yours faithfully,

A. HAMPTON BROWN.

44, Redburn Street, Chelsea.

DEAR SIR,—Having read the paragraph on pp. 171—172 of your March number on the system suggested by Dr. Koller of Vienna for writing tunes, by means of figures, and noted your comment on it, I venture to remark that some years ago I published an 'Easy Notation of Music' (developed from the system of singing by numerals in German village schools) and a second booklet entitled 'Music minus Stave,' which contains, besides some exercises in scales and chords, sixteen popular tunes by various composers, arranged for the pianoforte for amateurs who have no time to learn stave music. Both booklets are to be had at Messrs. Novello and Co.'s.

The system is simplicity itself, promotes musical intelligence, and greatly facilitates the study of harmony and counterpoint in Imitation, Inversion and Contrary Motion.—Yours faithfully,

F. WEBER.

Organist of the late German Chapel Royal,
St. James's Palace.

23, Highbury Grange.

THE CENTENARY OF FRANZ LACHNER.

DEAR SIR,—On April 2 next, one hundred years will have elapsed since Franz Lachner, one of the most famous composers of a past generation, was born at Rain, a little town in the Kingdom of Bavaria. I lay emphasis on the words 'a past generation,' for I fear that but few musicians, let alone the general public, will remember the centenary of Lachner's birth, so completely has the name of this composer passed from the minds of the people now living. It is difficult to account for this, as Lachner was a very great and illustrious musician indeed and also one of the most successful during his lifetime. He composed works in every conceivable branch of his art, as they comprise eight Symphonies, seven Suites for orchestra, three Operas, two Oratorios, two Stabat Maters, several Masses, five String Quartets, many Pianoforte Quartets, Quintets, Sextets, an Octet for wind instruments, Violin Sonatas, Organ Sonatas, Pianoforte pieces, and a large number of songs. Lachner belonged to the strictly classical school of musicians, religiously following the footsteps of Bach, Handel, Mozart, and Beethoven. By far the finest of all Lachner's works are his Suites, notably those in E minor (Op. 113), and D minor (Op. 115), which once upon a time enjoyed considerable popularity all over Germany and in other countries. Lachner was one of the greatest contrapuntists and masters of fugue who ever lived, and both those delightful Suites just mentioned contain fugues which to my mind are the most magnificent and most glorious ever written for the orchestra. Why such superb compositions as Lachner's Suites should now be ignored by almost every orchestral conductor in the world completely passes my comprehension.

Let us sincerely hope that the centenary of Lachner's birth, of which I have now reminded the public, may be an incentive for reviving some of the splendid works of this most estimable and sterling composer, for it does seem a crying scandal and a burning shame that Lachner's Suites, these grand classical compositions, should be allowed to fall into oblivion, whilst the most ghastly trash of certain latter-day composers is performed, and even applauded by the public. Franz Lachner, it may be of interest to mention, enjoyed the intimate personal friendship of Schubert and Beethoven, and indeed of most of his great musical contemporaries. He lived to a green old age, as he died at Munich on January 20, 1890, in his 87th year.

44, Hamilton Gardens, Yours very faithfully,
St. John's Wood.

ALGERNON ASHTON.

[We make some reference to Lachner's music in England on p. 234.—ED. M.T.]

ONOMATOPOEIA IN MUSIC.

DEAR SIR,—In Mr. Vernon Blackburn's interesting article 'Onomatopoeia in Music' there is a reference to Haydn, who, it is said, 'seems in an extremity of delight when he can secure an onomatopoeic effect like that of the serpent in "The Creation."' Whether, however, Haydn was so delighted with effects of this kind (I try to avoid that very long word) seems doubtful, if faith is to be placed in A. C. Dies, the composer's friend, who tells us in his 'Biographische Nachrichten' (1810) that the text of 'The Seasons' was the cause of unpleasantness between Haydn and Baron van Swieten, who prepared the words, an adaptation from Thomson's 'Seasons.' Haydn specially disliked the croaking of frogs, and sought to hide it from the ear. For this Swieten blamed him, produced a piece by some old author in which the croak (Koax) was prominently set forth, and begged him to imitate it. The latter, enraged, resolved not to be worried any more, and expressed his dissatisfaction in a letter in which he wrote: 'It would be better if the blessed croak were omitted.' This letter passed through many hands, and indeed is said to have appeared in the Zeitung für die elegante Welt. Swieten was much annoyed at it. Mr. Blackburn is a man of wide reading, yet this old out-of-print book of Dies may possibly not have come under his notice, or surely he would have referred to the passage in question.

Ἀντιονοματοποιήσις.

'THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AT DANZIG.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On the 11th ult., the oratorio 'The Dream of Gerontius' was performed for the first time in Danzig, and for the third time in Germany. It was an artistic achievement of the first rank, chiefly on the part of the conductor, Herr Fritz Binder, but also of the chorus (that of the Sing-Akademie) and the orchestra. The excellent soloists, Frl. Frida Kisielnicki, Herr Fr. Dierich and Herr Joseph Staudigl, rounded off and completed a performance which was received with enthusiasm, after having been anxiously looked forward to by the public and eagerly discussed in the local press.

The work marks an epoch in the history of the Oratorio. The composer, with English determination, causes us to realize that, in oratorio, music is the handmaid of religion; and it cannot be gainsaid that the proper place for the work is the Church, strictly speaking—say, some vast, solemn cathedral, the Demon chorus notwithstanding. It is just this chorus, forming as it does a necessary and, dramatically, a life-giving element, which must not be heard at too near a distance. The demons form an essential part of the picture, and with rose-water they could not be painted. Calmly considered, however, the use of dissonances and strenuous rhythms in this demoniac episode is not any more pronounced than in Berlioz, who in such matters goes still farther. The extensive use of ancient Church modes might at first sight appear a mere affectation. But it soon becomes evident that it is the expression of a strong individuality which has entered deeply into the spirit of Religion, and one that could not resist the chaste and holy effect of these modes, while at the same time not despising the use of modern chromaticism and a modern orchestration as original as it is distinguished. With all this, the dependence of the melody on the text has not been carried so far that any four pages of Elgar's vocal score do not throughout contain more good music than whole acts of so-called 'Wagnerian' operas which, with their 'spoken song,' lower music to the role of a mere ancilla dramatica.

In his avoidance of set forms Elgar follows Wagnerian lines. Be this as it may, the ridiculously inconsistent changing from reflection to action and vice versa, so characteristic of old oratorios—the 'St. Matthew' Passion in particular—is thereby avoided. It is remarkable how organically chorus and soli alternate in Elgar's work. The dependence of the music upon the words is shown in that, except in the choruses, it is all but impossible to thoroughly enjoy the work unless the text is known, or can be followed. The man who must read to understand, however, is not the man to whom real, i.e., pure and absolute music addresses itself; but this is not to deny that the 'Dream' is throughout interesting and frequently beautiful and even great. From the point of view of absolute music, the choruses are productive of the highest enjoyment and the purest elevation. In them, deep feeling is wedded with supremest mastery to transparent polyphony and beautiful sound effects, both in the vocal parts themselves and in conjunction with the orchestra; while in the masterfulness of this limpid polyphony (often in as many as fourteen parts) the work surpasses everything that has hitherto been achieved in oratorio. But nowhere does this masterfulness degenerate into a mere display of technique; on the contrary, it everywhere heightens or deepens the expression of the psychic moments, and in doing so reaches the sublime.

DR. C. FUCHS.

The death took place, on February 22, in a lunatic asylum in Vienna, of Hugo Wolf, a prolific composer of songs, several choral works, a string quartet, a three-act opera, and other compositions. He wrote songs wholesale, and Hugo Wolf Clubs were formed in order to popularize his works. Wolf was born on March 13, 1860, at Windischgrätz, Styria; he had, therefore, nearly completed the forty-third year of his life.

THE WHISTLES AND REED INSTRUMENTS OF THE AMERICAN INDIANS OF THE NORTH-WEST COAST.

An exceedingly interesting paper on the above subject, of which the following is a digest, was read by the Rev. F. W. Galpin, M.A., F.L.S., before the Musical Association on the 10th ult., Sir Hubert Parry, the President, in the chair. A number of original specimens were also shown.

The Pacific seaboard which bounds the territory of British Columbia on the western side is separated from the interior by dense forest and high mountain ranges. Scattered along the coast for a distance of about 1,000 miles are certain Indian tribes remarkable for their technical skill and light complexions. They may be divided roughly into five families: The Salishan of Eastern Vancouver Island and the opposite mainland; the Wakashan (including the Kwakiutl) of Western Vancouver and the mainland north of the previous family; the Tsimshian north of the Wakashan; the Tlingit, farther north in Southern Alaska; and the Haida, who inhabit the Queen Charlotte Islands. Museum specimens testify to their skill in carving and weaving, but the object of the paper was to call attention to and classify a remarkable variety of musical instruments found in general use amongst these coast tribes; for in addition to the popular drum and rattle they have certain wooden whistles and reed instruments unknown to the other Indians of North America. Instruments of the cup-mouthpiece type like the horn, and stringed instruments, are not used except under European influence.

The classification, compiled by Mr. Galpin after a careful study of a large number of specimens in America and in Europe, is as follows:—

GROUP A.—WHISTLES.

CLASS I.—Without finger-holes.

Division a.—Mouth blown.

Section 1.—Stopt pipes. This is the commonest and perhaps earliest type of whistle; it is found in its simple or single form; also in twin (or double), triple, quadruple, quintuple, and sextuple forms, giving a remarkable polyphonic series.

Section 2.—Half-stopt pipes. These are not so common, and may have suggested the whistles with finger-holes.

Section 3.—Open pipes. Decidedly uncommon.

Division b.—Mechanically blown.

A compressible bladder filled with grass or bark is attached to the whistle; in later specimens its place is supplied by bellows.

CLASS II.—With finger-holes.

These are rare. There are two genuine old specimens in the British Museum. The slate flutes, carved and decorated with totemic devices, are modern adaptations of European models, made for sale as curiosities.

GROUP B.—REED INSTRUMENTS.

CLASS I.—Without finger-holes.

Division a.—Mouth blown.

Section 1.—Double-beating reeds. These are made of wood, and can be controlled by the lips, or are concealed within a cap or cover as in the mediæval krumborn. In the covered double reeds we have also twin, triple, and quadruple forms.

Section 2.—Single-beating reeds. In the simple form these appear to be a recent introduction due to contact with Europeans. But a twin single-beating reed is found, formed by inserting a thick wooden 'lay' between the two halves of the ordinary double-beating reed. Also a double-action single reed is used, in which a thin piece of wood vibrates between two rigid 'lays.' These seem to be due entirely to Indian originality.

Section 3.—Retreating reeds. The inverse of the double-beating reed, and found both in a terminal and a lateral form. Similar sound producers are used by the country children in England.

Section 4.—Ribbon reeds. A thin vegetable membrane vibrating within a narrow air passage.

Division b.—Mechanically blown.

Bellows only are used for these.

CLASS II.—With finger-holes.

Specimens are rare. There are three in the British Museum of an early form.

As regards the use of these instruments, some of the smaller whistles are perhaps used as decoys; but most, if not all, of the whistles and reeds are employed in the mysteries and secret societies of these Indian tribes. They are considered sacred, and the uninitiated are not allowed to see them on pain of death. As these instruments are not used in connection with the Indian songs, vocal music was not discussed. In what way these Indians obtained their principles of sound production—the carefully constructed whistle head and the elaborate development of the reed—is not known. Some consider it was through communication with the Asiatic continent; but if so, we fail to find the free reed and the vertical and transverse flutes so popular among Eastern Asiatics. More probable is it that in some way they have come in contact in previous centuries with the Aztec tribes, to whom the whistle head was well known, and whose religious mysteries were associated with musical instruments.

The complete paper, with notes and illustrations, will be read with much interest when it is published in the Proceedings of the Musical Association for the current session.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The revival on Ash Wednesday (February 25) at the Royal Albert Hall of Sir Arthur Sullivan's oratorio 'The Light of the World' was an interesting event, in that the work had not been heard in London for many years. Miss Evangeline Florence, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Maggie Purvis, Mr. William Green, Mr. Frederick Ranalow and Mr. Kennerley Rumford, as soloists seemed to realise the devotional character of the music assigned to them.

The expected annual performance by the Royal Choral Society of Sir Arthur Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' took place at the Royal Albert Hall on the 19th ult., when the soloists were Miss Marguerite Macintyre, Miss Florence Bulleid, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Dan Price. The choral singing indicated that the chorists were so familiar with the music that they needed more rehearsal than they had received. This remark does not apply to the notes nor to the precision of attack, but to the important matter of accentuation and intelligent delivery of the text. The popular work was preceded by Dr. Cowen's 'Coronation Ode,' produced at the Norwich Festival last autumn. The effective choral writing greatly gained by the larger body of voices. The march section produced a notable contrast with its context, and the finale became most imposing. The solo part was sympathetically sung by Miss Helen Jaxon. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted both performances.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The ninety-first season opened in a most auspicious manner on February 26, at Queen's Hall. The band was in splendid form, the tone of the strings being particularly rich, and the delicacy, brilliancy, and precision of the orchestral playing, under Dr. Frederic H. Cowen's direction, would be difficult to surpass. The concert opened with the first performance of an overture on the subject of Maeterlinck's play 'Pelleas and Melisanda,' from the pen of Mr. Garnet Wolseley Cox, whose previous compositions produced at the concerts of the Royal Academy of Music, of which Institution he was a student, have attracted favourable notice. The overture is a picturesque and imaginative composition, containing some strong passages and remarkable for its sanity. Other memorable performances were those of Schumann's Symphony in D minor (No. 4), and M. Raoul Pugno's beautiful pianoforte playing in Mozart's Piano-forte Concerto in E flat (No. 9), which was rendered to perfection. The vocalist was Miss Susan Strong.

A particularly attractive programme was presented at the second concert on the 12th ult. Mr. Frederic d'Erlanger's Violin Concerto in D minor was played for the first time in England, with Herr Fritz Kreisler as soloist, and Sir Charles V. Stanford's 'Irish Rhapsody' No. 1, in D minor (Op. 78), and Sir Alexander Mackenzie's suite 'London day by day' were heard for the first time in central London. The concerto is deficient in virility, but its themes are expressive and the workmanship most musically and finished. The opening movement, the strongest in the work, contains some very ingenious and effective contrapuntal writing for the soloist; the slow movement is meditative and poetical, the finale is gay and vivacious. Herr Kreisler played his part to perfection, and he and the composer were twice called to the platform. The other two works above-mentioned were produced at the Norwich Festival last autumn, when they were so fully described in these columns that further comment is unnecessary; but it should be added that they each improved enormously upon a re-hearing under the direction of their composers, who have given us nothing better. Miss Lydia Nervil created a most favourable impression by her finished and intelligent rendering of Ophelia's Scene 'A vos yeux' from Ambrose Thomas's 'Hamlet.'

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The students' concerts on February 23 at St. James's Hall, and on the 13th ult. at Queen's Hall, contained much that merited warm praise. The novelties at the former were an Andante and Allegro for two trumpets by Mr. E. York Bowen, and a 'Cossack cradle song' with pianoforte accompaniment and violin and violoncello obbligati by Miss Eleanor C. Rudall. The former composition proved a more interesting work than might have been anticipated from the combination of instruments, the Andante in particular being pleasing. It was admirably played by Mr. William Cox and Miss Catherine Fidler. The cradle song is a commendable student effort, and was sympathetically sung by Miss Katie E. B. Moss. Other soloists who merit praise and encouragement were Mrs. Dewhurst, by reason of her refined singing, and Miss Margaret Holloway and Miss Julia Higgins, respectively violinist and pianist. Some commendable renderings of chamber music were also given.

The orchestral concert on the 13th ult. acquired distinction by the inclusion of the first performance in England of Herr Richard Strauss's Burleske in D minor for pianoforte and orchestra. The solo part was cleverly played by Miss Mary Burgess, and full justice seemed to be done to the orchestral portion under the able direction of Sir Alexander Mackenzie; but the work did not leave a satisfactory impression, the themes not possessing sufficient significance to justify the lengthy development to which they were subjected. Two other novelties were an Overture entitled 'Redgauntlet,' by Mr. Felix Swinstead, and a song of ambitious design for soprano and orchestra named 'Cleopatra,' by Miss Katie E. B. Moss, by whom it was sung. The Overture testifies to a lively imagination and considerable knowledge of orchestral effect, and is a promising composition. A notable performance was Mr. E. York Bowen's rendering of the solo part of Sir A. C. Mackenzie's 'Scottish' Pianoforte Concerto (Op. 55). Miss Ruth Clarkson showed great promise as a violinist, and the trio 'Jesus, Heavenly Master,' from Spohr's 'Calvary,' was well sung by the Misses S. P. Soper, Katie Moss, and M. F. Jones. At the close of the concert Sir Alexander received a shower of violets from the students, who had armed themselves with bunches of this fragrant flower as a 'send off' of their popular Principal previous to his departure to Canada.

The following awards have been made:—The Goldberg Prize—to Edith C. Patching (of Worthing). The Llewelyn Thomas Prize—to Gwladys Roberts (of Llanelly). The Evill Prize—to W. Daniel Richards (of Blaينا, Mon.).

The Westmorland Scholarship annually awarded to vocalists has this year been gained by Mr. Basil Franklin Taylor, a nephew of Mr. Franklin Taylor of The Royal College of Music.

London Concerts, Recitals, &c.

BROADWOOD CONCERTS.

It is satisfactory to see Messrs. Broadwood's excellent scheme of chamber concerts so widely appreciated. At the performance on February 26 at St. James's Hall there was played for the first time a Trio for pianoforte, violin, and cor Anglais by Mr. Donald F. Tovey, the composer (at the pianoforte) being assisted by Mr. Haydn Wood and Mr. Horton. The unusual combination of instruments did not prove satisfactory, and the music, although well written, failed to make a deep impression. A specially interesting feature of the evening was the interpretation of one of Purcell's Ten sonatas of four parts, for strings and clavier, published in 1697, two years after his death. The vocal element included Henschel's 'Serbisches Liederspiel' and Sir Charles V. Stanford's songs from Tennyson's 'Princess,' which were admirably rendered by Miss Ethel Wood, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. F. Ranalow, with Mr. Randal Ronald at the pianoforte.

The concert on the 12th ult. opened with Mr. T. F. Dunhill's Quintet in F minor for strings and horn, an estimable work which improves on acquaintance. The other Quartet was that by Mozart in the key of C. The string players in both compositions were Miss Jessie Grimson and Messrs. Frank Bridge, Ernest Tomlinson, and Edward Mason. The horn-player was Mr. T. Busby. Mr. Campbell McInnes and Mr. Howard Jones gave an effective rendering of the 'Willow-wood' section from 'The House of Life,' a cantata for baritone voice and pianoforte by Mr. Vaughan Williams.

RICHTER CONCERT.

What may be termed a tentative 'Richter' concert, with the Hallé (Manchester) Orchestra, took place at the Queen's Hall on the 16th ult. The bringing by Dr. Richter of his own band to London doubtless relieved of much labour in rehearsal, but in matter of tone quality the Manchester players are not so good as the London players, and it cannot be said that, in the matter of precision, attack, and delicacy, they surpassed the effects produced by the orchestra selected from the metropolis. Mr. Schultz-Curtius, however, announces that a series of concerts will be given in the autumn. Dr. Richter was most successful in his interpretation of the 'Meistersinger' Overture and Beethoven's eighth Symphony. The other works were the 'Love scene' and 'Queen Mab' Scherzo from Berlioz's 'Roméo et Juliette,' cantata, Tchaikovsky's fantasia 'Francesca da Rimini,' and Liszt's 'Mephisto Walzer.'

MISS MARIE HALL.

Five hundred people were turned disappointedly away from St. James's Hall on a wet afternoon last month (the 5th ult.), when Miss Marie Hall gave her violin recital, an unprecedented experience in the history of the building, at all events in regard to a new-comer. It took Paderewski three years to get a London audience; but this gifted young girl, still in her teens, at once makes her mark by the simple force of her genius. The programme was one that would put to the test any violinist, yet Miss Hall triumphed gloriously over all the demands it made upon her. In the Kreutzer Sonata she was overweighted by her colleague at the pianoforte. One sighed for a less up-to-date pianoforte in such concerted music, or a player with the delicate touch of a Henry R. Bird. The virtuoso performer and the sonorous instrument beloved by him are not always suggestive of ideals in concerted music.

In Ernst's Violin Concerto in F sharp minor, a composition that simply bristles with difficulties, the fair fiddler furnished fresh proof of her extraordinary technical equipment and musicianship. Bach's Chaconne received an interpretation that was perfectly natural and satisfactory, and one that gave much promise of Miss Hall's future as an exponent of classical music. Herr Gottfried Galston played on the pianoforte Brahms's 'Variations on a theme of Handel,' and Miss Caroline Montefiore contributed some songs. Mr. H. R. Bird was, as usual, irreproachable as accompanist.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Only a brief notice is required of the concert conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, at Queen's Hall, on the 14th ult. The feature was the superb rendering of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, which should be more often played. M. Jacques Thibaud proved himself an artist of the first rank in M. Saint-Saëns's attractive Violin Concerto in B minor, and the finished singing by Mdle. Marcella Pégi, in Mozart's Recit. and Rondo 'Chi' io mi scordi di te,' and in songs by M. Saint-Saëns and Schumann, added to the enjoyment of the afternoon.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

The Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, under the able direction of Mr. Ernest Ford, gave an excellent concert on the 10th ult. at Queen's Hall. The programme included the Overture to Wagner's 'Tannhäuser,' and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, and the first performance in this country of Herr E. N. von Reznicek's 'Donna Diana' Overture, a bright but conventional composition. The soloists were Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Dalton Baker and Herr Max Wolfstahl.

The Strolling Players' Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. William Shakespeare, gave a performance on the 20th ult. at Queen's Hall, but this only calls for record.

SIGNOR BUSONI.

Among the many pianoforte recitals of this season, the one given by Signor Busoni at Bechstein Hall on February 26 deserves special mention. When he interprets a Beethoven sonata or a well-known classical piece we mentally compare his reading with that of some of the great pianists who have passed away, or with living ones of note, and thus criticise to our heart's content. When, however, Signor Busoni announces half-a-dozen of Liszt's 'Études d'exécution transcendante,' we feel that we have no standard whereby to measure him. Now and again some pianist plays one of the Liszt-arranged Paganini Études—especially the 'Campanella'—which on the occasion in question Signor Busoni gave by way of encore; but to attack monsters like 'Mazeppa,' 'Wilde Jagd,' or the No. 10 in F minor, which bears no superscription, is quite out of the ordinary run of things. Though the actual notes may be within the power of many pianists, very few could dash off these and other of the fearfully difficult 'Études transcendantes' with the force, fire, and, apparently, facility displayed by Busoni. The first part of his programme included six Études by Chopin, but his readings of these tone-poems are familiar. He also played César Franck's fine Prelude, Choral, and Fugue.

DR. LUDWIG WÜLLNER.

The vocal recital given by this distinguished artist on the 20th ult. at St. James's Hall was a notable event in the past month. His musical and powerful tenor voice and keen dramatic perception were advantageously displayed in an admirable selection of songs, particular interest being attached to his interpretations of a group by the late Hugo Wolf, which confirmed the opinion of many of his countrymen that the composer was one of the greatest lieder writers of the Fatherland.

VARIOUS CONCERTS AND RECITALS.

M. Jean Gerardy made his reappearance in London, after an absence of five years, at St. James's Hall on February 26 at an orchestral concert conducted by M. Ysaye. The gifted violoncellist was heard in M. Saint-Saëns's Concerto in A minor, the Adagio and Allegro of Haydn's Concerto in D, and in Böellmann's Symphonic Variations (Op. 23), in all of which he played with a beauty of tone, brilliancy, and artistic intuition that entitle him to be placed in the front rank of his art. M. Ysaye secured excellent renderings of the orchestral portion of the above works, and also admirable interpretations of M. Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem 'Jeunesse d'Hercule' and M. Svendsen's legend 'Zorahayda.' Madame Cleaver sang with dramatic emphasis. On the 18th ult. M. Gerardy gave a recital in the same hall, when he was heard to advantage in Goltermann's Concerto in A minor, and Boccherini's Sonata in A (No. 6). The vocalist on this occasion was Miss Florence Schmidt. Mr. Percy Pitt rendered good service at the pianoforte.

It was pleasant to see a numerous audience at the Wessely chamber concert on the 2nd ult. at Bechstein Hall, for this quartet party merit generous support. Messrs. Wessely, Spencer Dyke, Lionel Tertis and B. Patterson-Parker are manifestly animated by artistic impulse, and their ensemble is excellent. Detailed criticism is unnecessary, but it should be said that the above-mentioned qualities were prominent in the interpretations of Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18), Grieg's Quartet in G minor, and in Brahms's Quintet in F minor, the pianoforte part of the last-named being admirably played by Miss Gertrude Peppercorn.

The first performance in England of Herr Felix Weingartner's String Quartet in D minor (Op. 24) took place at the Saturday Popular Concert at St. James's Hall on the 7th ult. The work is an interesting example of modern methods applied to established forms. Its sentiment is not deep, but it is sincere and attractively expressed. It was well rendered by the Kruse quartet party.

Miss Fanny Howard and Miss Wyllie Jaeger gave distinction to their concert, on the 9th ult., by playing for the first time in England a Sonata for violin and pianoforte by Dirk Schäfer. It is a fluently-written work, deficient in strength, but pleasing. The concert-givers showed intelligence and proficiency.

Mr. Francis Harford at his vocal recital at St James's Hall on the 10th ult. again brought forward a number of new songs by British composers. The best were entitled 'Silent noon' by Mr. R. Vaughan Williams, and 'Idyll' by Mr. Cecil Forsyth, which merit the attention of cultured vocalists.

Miss Gertrude Ess, a young violoncellist, aged nineteen, from Newcastle-on-Tyne, made a most successful début at Steinway Hall on the 18th ult. Miss Ess is a pupil of Signor Pezze, and her playing in two movements, Adagio and Allegro moderato from a 'Concerto Patetico' by Charles Schubert, not previously heard in London, and in Tschaiikovsky's 'Variations on a Theme Rococo,' showed exceptional abilities that entitle her to an esteemed position in the musical world, and should carry her to the summit of her profession.

An interesting pianoforte and vocal recital was given at the Guildhall School of Music on the 24th ult. by two much-esteemed professors of that Institution—Mr. Willem Coenen and Mr. Arthur Oswald. The former played a varied programme of pianoforte music with his well-known ability, the selection including Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor, and Beethoven's 'Waldstein' Sonata, and Mr. Coenen's own study for the left hand alone. Mr. Oswald interpreted the vocal part of the programme with his usual refined and artistic methods in songs by Purcell and other composers. Mr. Stanley Hawley accompanied.

A choral competition for ladies' choirs was held at the Kensington Town Hall on the 24th ult. There were five classes—viz., sight-reading, which was compulsory, two-part singing, three-part singing, and four-part singing, and one specially for church choirs. Seven choirs sang. The four-part test-piece was 'Questionings' (Brahms). Very great interest was manifested in the proceedings. Mrs. Layton's highly-trained choir gained first prizes in the four classes in which they competed. Miss Wray's choir gained the second prize for four-part singing. Dr. McNaught adjudicated, and Mr. Henry R. Bird gave away the prizes, and in doing so made an interesting speech on the value of such competitive gatherings.

The following concerts merit record:—

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—3rd ult., Miss Mathilde Verne 17th ult., Mr. Herbert Fryer, pianoforte recital; 23rd, Herr Wilhelm Backhaus, concert.

BECHSTEIN HALL.—3rd ult., Miss Edith Robinson, third historical recital; 10th ult., Madame Frickenhaus, pianoforte recital; 17th, M. Godowsky, pianoforte recital; 18th, Madame Helene Ansbacher, chamber concert; 19th ult., Mr. Sterling Mackinlay, vocal recital; 20th ult., Miss Elyda Russell, vocal recital.

A remarkably fine performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' was given at the Alexandra Palace on the last day of February, under the inspiring sway of Mr. Allen Gill. The choir of 800 voices sang with intelligence, good attack, and commendable attention to detail. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Eunete Truscott, Miss Kate Holbrook, Mr. Anderson Nicol, and Mr. Robert Radford. The performance was one that reflected the greatest credit on all concerned, especially on the choir and their skilful conductor.

The People's Palace Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. H. Davan Wetton, gave a most successful performance of Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' Bridge's 'Flag of England,' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' in the Queen's Hall of the People's Palace on the 14th ult. Miss Stanley Lucas sang the soprano solo in Sir Frederick Bridge's Cántata with excellent effect, and the composer received 'an ovation' from audience and performers.

The Bishopsgate Choral and Orchestral Society gave a performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' on the 19th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Ada Barnett, Miss Esther Franklin, Mr. Miles Mole, and Mr. David Zeldenrust. Miss Alice Rust presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Arthur Trickett conducted.

Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed at Union Chapel, Islington, on the 19th ult., under the direction of Mr. G. H. Betjemann. The Psalmody and Choral Class gave a good account of the choruses, and the solos were admirably sung by Miss Mildred Rix, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. James Leyland and Mr. Franklin Clive. Mr. Fountain Meen accompanied on the organ.

The Highbury Philharmonic Society, so ably directed by Mr. G. H. Betjemann, gave an excellent performance of the 'Messiah' (Prout's Edition) at the Highbury New Park Anthem on the 3rd ult.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' in the Crystal Palace Concert Room on the 14th ult. The band and chorus numbered 320 performers, and Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted, Mr. W. Hedgcock presiding at the organ.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, March 9.

The opera season is hastening towards its close. In a fortnight all will be over, and Mr. Grau, who has won the unique distinction of being the only American impresario of record who has won both financial and artistic success in large measure, will retire permanently from the field. His triumph has been great as such things go, but it has been achieved at the cost of his health. His retirement is involuntary and is deplored by the stockholders of the Opera House, the artists, his associates of the opera company and the public; but the commands of his physicians are peremptory. Mr. Grau's successor has been chosen, and gossip has concerned itself largely with speculations as to the consequences of that choice for the last three weeks. The new director is to be Heinrich Conried, manager of a small German theatre in New York. Mr. Conried has kept himself in the notice of the public far beyond the field dominated by his modest playhouse by his advocacy of high artistic ideals in University lectures, &c., and is a man of indomitable energy and zeal. But he is wholly inexperienced in the operatic world, and has never been called upon to face so formidable a proposition as is involved in the management of an enterprise which represents hundreds where his theatre represents units. In the handling of his affairs, moreover, he has always been a radical rather than a diplomat, and much curiosity is felt concerning his ability to satisfy the demands of the small band of aristocratic stockholders who have a way of enforcing their wishes touching singers and repertory, the larger company of subscribers who are swayed largely by fad and fashion, and the multitude who fill the upper strata of stalls, and are quite as fickle and intolerant as the others. Mr. Conried is fortunate in coming into the possession of an institution which is in perfect working order, fulfilling a mission satisfactorily, and will practically run itself if not disturbed. There will be occasion for considering the offerings of the season in my next letter. For the present it may suffice to say that though the illness of Madame Eames, which compelled her temporary retirement some weeks ago, caused a disturbance of the season's plans, no less than twenty-eight operas have been produced up to the present time and three more are in prospect. Wagner and Verdi have contributed most numerous to the list, the former with eight the latter with six works.

An effort by Mr. Walter Damrosch to put our Philharmonic Society on a different footing has just come to grief because of the extreme conservatism of that organization, and has caused a deal of discussion as to the future of orchestral music in New York. The Philharmonic Society is in the sixty-second year of its existence. It is a purely professional body, which gives eight concerts each season, preceded by the same number of public rehearsals, and divides the proceeds pro rata among its members. It has passed through many vicissitudes in the course of its career, but for two decades or so success has attended it, largely because of the popularity of two of its conductors within that period—Theodore Thomas and Anton Seidl. Since Mr. Seidl's death the subscription list has lessened and public interest in the Society's concerts fallen off, the benefit of this accruing to the Boston Orchestra, which gives fifteen concerts each season in the city. Last year Mr. Walter Damrosch was elected to succeed Mr. Emil Paur as conductor. In the hope of increasing the efficiency of the band and putting it on the basis of something approaching permanency, Mr. Damrosch and his friends secured subscriptions amounting to about $20,000 a year for four years, which money was to be applied as a sort of bounty to the betterment of the concerts and an increase in their number. The gift was conditioned upon changes to be made in the fundamental law of the Society, however, and these the members thought too radical and subversive of the integrity of the Society. After much discussion it was declined, greatly to the disappointment of those optimists who have been looking forward to the establishment of a permanent concert orchestra in New York on the basis of the Philharmonic Society, which, in a sense, is the father of orchestral music in the United States. It is a question, however, whether the action of the Society was not dictated by wisdom. Four years of bounty would not have insured the existence of the Philharmonic Society on the new lines. That is the teaching of many efforts in the past, and has recently received confirmation of a melancholy character from Chicago. It was a fine ebullition of public spirit which called the Chicago Orchestra twelve years ago, and robbed the New York Philharmonic Society of Theodore Thomas. The Chicago Orchestra is now ending its twelfth season with a proclamation from its directors that unless a fund of $750,000 be raised, the orchestra will be disbanded when the season comes to an end. The reason? Up to the end of last season the orchestra has cost its guarantors the sum of $371,000—that is to say, an average of $33,725 a year. The supporters of the organization have been generous, public-spirited men; a deficiency of $53,631 in the first year did not frighten them nor give check to their enthusiasm. For six years the deficiency steadily declined, but at the end of that period there was no indication that there was any likelihood that the orchestra could ever be maintained without a perpetual bounty of from $25,000 to $30,000 a year. Old subscribers were dying, or losing their interest (which is very much the same thing), and it was necessary to enlist more and more men. The task of doing this seems to have grown intolerable, and, as a last resort, the project of raising $750,000 by gifts was devised, the money to be expended in building a hall whose rentals, coupled with the receipts from ticket sales, it is fondly hoped will suffice to maintain the orchestra. It is not likely that the project will be carried to a successful issue.

Of our foreign visitors this year Herr Hugo Heermann, the violinist of Frankfort, has made far and away the best impression. His performances of the concertos by Beethoven and Brahms have been set down as authoritative in every respect. Critics and public seem to have been equally glad to welcome one who is an artist as well as a virtuoso, but who brings his artistic character to notice before the other. In the department of choral music there is little to record beyond the performance of Henschel's 'Requiem' by the Brooklyn Oratorio Society in New York on February 27 at a charity concert. On the whole it was an unfortunate affair. Mr. Henschel had come to New York in the interest of his work early in the season, and it had been accepted for performance by the Oratorio Society. Subsequently he arranged for a performance, which he should conduct, for the benefit of the Ethical Culture Society, knowing that the performance would anticipate the concert of the Oratorio Society by a few weeks. Naturally enough, human nature being what it is, the Oratorio Society substituted another work for the 'Requiem.' But the result was that Mr. Henschel's Mass had a very unsatisfactory performance, and we are promised a very good one of Dr. Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' in its stead. This is to take place on March 26, but the oratorio will have its first American performance in Chicago by the Apollo Club three days previously.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, March 15.

Quite a number of interesting new or seldom-heard works has been produced during the last few weeks by that excellent young institution the Concert-Verein, the importance of which for the musical life of Vienna—and therefore for Austria generally—is becoming daily more evident. Amongst these works must be mentioned in the first place the Orchestral Variations of Edward Elgar. Admirably played as it was, this series of symphonic pictures produced a most marked impression, and was received with so much spontaneous and hearty applause that there can be no manner of doubt a hearing of some of the other works of this composer will be looked forward to with much pleasure; notably that of his 'The Dream of Gerontius,' with which we shall probably become acquainted during next season. As for the 'Variations,' in addition to their absolute perfection as regards form, their orchestral colour is so brilliant and vivid that one regretted not having before one's eyes, at the same time, a material portrait of the different persons here characterised, feeling sure that the musical contents and colouring of each variation must needs correspond with the physiognomical expression of the individual represented.

By the side of Elgar's work some cleverly-written excerpts from an allegorical ballet by Alexander von Zemlinsky, played at the same concert, were heard somewhat at a disadvantage. They furnished evidence, however, of the steady progress which is being made by this very gifted young Viennese composer. Great enthusiasm was occasioned by the superb rendering, under Herr Loewe's direction, of Anton Bruckner's eighth Symphony, a work containing certain 'heavenly lengths,' which however was listened to throughout with the closest attention. Richard Strauss's early symphonic poem 'Macbeth,' likewise produced by the Concert-Verein, met with a distinctly more favourable reception this time than on the occasion of its first performance last year by the Berlin Tonkünstler Orchestra, when the composer himself conducted.

At a concert given here recently by Richard Strauss, the programme—a very 'modern' one—included his own suite 'Aus Italien,' and symphonic poem, 'Tod und Verklärung,' as well as the symphonic ballade 'Der Woywode,' by Tchaikovsky, and a number from 'Messidor,' by Alfred Bruneau. The two last-named pieces had not been produced in Vienna before, but failed to arouse any very great interest.

At recent Philharmonic concerts, a highly favourable reception was accorded to Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, and a magnificent performance of Brahms's fourth Symphony, under Capellmeister Schalk's direction, was greatly appreciated. A new overture, entitled 'Ekkehard' (suggested by Scheffel's well-known novel of that name), by a young Viennese composer, Franz Schrecker, attracted some favourable notice.

The performance, by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde and conducted by Herr Loewe, of Bruckner's 'Mass' in F minor was an event of considerable interest. The work, having been written with a strict view to the ritual of the Catholic Church, necessarily suffered not a little by its transference to the concert-room. Nevertheless, a deep impression was produced by the 'Benedictus,' the 'Kyrie,' and 'Agnus Dei.' There was a comparatively small audience, a fact which would have been far otherwise could the performance have taken place in a church.

The lovers of chamber music who foregather at the concerts given by the Fitzner Quartet have received with much favour a new Quintet for flute and stringed instruments by Jan Brands-Buys, a talented young Dutch musician residing in Vienna. The delicately conceived and transparently wrought work deserved the success it achieved. At one of the invariably crowded performances of 'The Bohemians'—as the Bohemian String Quartet Party are affectionately called here—Fräulein Magda Dvorák, the daughter of the famous composer, appeared as the vocalist. The lady, who sang some of her father's songs, is eminently gifted musically, and possesses a fine and perfectly trained voice. Amongst other vocalists who have afforded delight to the musical public recently may be mentioned Frau Lula Gmeiner, whose performance was devoted to songs by Schubert and Brahms; Fräulein Marcella Pregi, who interpreted songs by Beethoven; and Frau Gorlenko-Dolina, the Russian prima donna, whose programme was an international one. A splendid reception was also given to Madame Francis-Saville, recently retired from the personnel of the Imperial Opera, on the occasion of her farewell concert a few weeks since.

Charpentier's 'Louise' is in course of being mounted at the Imperial Opera, where, amongst other works, Tchaikovsky's 'Pique Dame' continues to attract good audiences.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The musical season in Belfast draws to a close as the daylight lengthens. This is more accurate than saying that at the approach of summer musical activity slackens, for there is rarely any summer among the 'blameless Hyperboreans' of the capital of Ulster.

Dr. Laurence Walker's penultimate chamber concert took place on the 3rd ult., with Miss Winifred Burnett, violin, Mr. Clyde Twelveteetres (Dublin), violoncello, and Dr. Walker, pianoforte. The programme was admirably selected and performed.

The Philharmonic Society intended to close its season with 'Lohengrin,' but owing to the illness of its conductor, Dr. F. Koeller (now happily recovered), a change became necessary, and the lot fell on 'The Golden Legend,' which was performed on the 6th ult., the soloists being Madame Sobrino, Miss Muriel Foster, and Messrs. Peperdel Price (substituted for Mr. John Coates, who was prevented by illness from fulfilling his engagement) and Fowler Burton. The performance was on the whole successful.

A comparatively new organisation, 'The Belfast City Choral Society,' gave its second concert of the season on the 15th ult., the conductor being Mr. Derrick-Large. The principal work was Vincent's Choral Ballad 'Sir Humphry Gilbert,' and the artists were Miss Emily Davies, Miss Mary Boyd (a native of Belfast and a very promising singer), Messrs. Tom Child, and Ward Kemp. The performance of the chorus and orchestra was very creditable, and the whole concert interesting and successful.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the seventh Halford Concert, in the Town Hall, February 24, we had the long promised Pianoforte Concerto No. 2, by Rachmaninoff, with M. Siloti as soloist. The performance was superb, but the work requires more than one hearing. It is very complex, fully scored, and in places noisy. M. Siloti and his pupil Miss Hannah Bryant played part of a Suite for two pianofortes by the same composer, and this was music that pleased. The novelty was a Symphonic Poem, 'Lalla Rookh,' by Mr. Granville Bantock, a fanciful composition, but not perfect enough in performance for criticism. The composer conducted. At the eighth concert, on the 10th ult., Bach's Concerto in C major for two claviers and string orchestra was beautifully played, Miss Fanny Davies and her pupil, Miss Kathleen Arnold, being the soloists. The rest of the programme consisted of Mozart's lovely Symphony in G minor, and Tchaikovsky's Suite in G (Op. 55). Madame Lyona made a successful local debut as vocalist. The third and last of the orchestral concerts promoted by Messrs. Stockley and Sabin took place in the Town Hall on the 16th ult., when the Queen's Hall orchestra from London played in Birmingham for the first time. Mr. Henry J. Wood had a most cordial reception, and his inspiring conducting secured a magnificent performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony (Op. 64). Other pieces were Beethoven's 'Coriolan' Overture, Richard Strauss's 'Don Juan,' finely played, and Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody, with the sensational effects of the new scoring. Madame Sobrino gave a fine rendering of an air from Tchaikovsky's 'Joan of Arc,' and was brilliant in the 'Jewel Song' from 'Faust.' The band accompaniments were absolute perfection.

The last of Mr. Max Mossel's Drawing-room Concerts was held at the Grosvenor Rooms on the 12th ult. Professor Julius Röntgen was the pianist, and he played, with Mr. Mossel, his Violin Sonata in E (Op. 40); and as solos Schumann's 'Papillons,' and some Variations (Op. 25) of his own. He was a most welcome visitor. Mr. Ffrangcon Davies was the vocalist. The Chamber Concerts Society closed their season at the Masonic Hall on the 17th ult. The Max Mossel String Quartet gave a good account of Schubert's Quartet in A minor (Op. 29, No. 1), and Fräulein Frida Kindler made a most successful debut here as a pianist. She took part, with Messrs. Mossel and Hock, in Arensky's Trio in D minor (Op. 32), and played some solos. Miss Lillie Wormald's rendering of songs by Beethoven and Brahms was most artistic. The Historical Chamber Concerts came to an unexpected close on February 28. Want of support was the reason given.

The last Harrison Concert in the Town Hall on the 9th ult. was a brilliant function. Madame Clara Butt was the main attraction. A popular programme was admirably given by that lady, with Miss Louise Dale, Mr. William Green and Mr. Kennerley Rumford, vocalists; Miss Ethel Wilson, a young pianist new here, made a favourable impression, and the Misses Watts, violin duettists, were successful. At Madame Milward's last recital, in the Temperance Hall on February 27, the programme consisted of songs and pianoforte pieces by living English composers, of whom fourteen were represented. Dr. Rowland Winn was the pianist. In the same hall Mr. Arthur Crook and Mr. William Henley gave a Sonata recital; two sonatas for pianoforte, and two for pianoforte and violin were played. Madame Leslie Arnott was the vocalist, and Mr. Walter J. Evans (two of whose songs were given) acted as accompanist.

The only choral concerts of the month were on Saturday evenings at the Town Hall. On February 28 the Choral and Orchestral Association, under Mr. Joseph Adams, gave a recital of 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and on the 14th ult. Mr. Thomas Facer gave a Gounod night, including the Mass 'St. Cecilia' and other pieces. On the 7th ult. the Ladies' Choir of the Midland Institute School of Music, directed by Mr. Bantock, sang Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater,' and the same evening, in the Town Hall, Mr. F. W. Beard, with a band of a hundred, gave a Wagner and Tchaikovsky concert.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The third of the Clifton chamber concerts, given on the 8th ult. at the Victoria Rooms, was well attended, and the audience evinced their appreciation of the works performed by hearty applause. The executants were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Tschaikovsky's Quartet in D minor (Op. 11), Bach's Sonata in E for pianoforte and violin, and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25) were excellently interpreted. The vocalist was Mrs. Morton.

A large audience was present at the Victoria Rooms on the 7th ult., when there was an orchestral concert directed by Mr. C. W. Stear, organist at the Church of the Holy Nativity. In Handel's Organ Concerto in A, Mr. Hubert Hunt (organist of Bristol Cathedral) was at the solo instrument. The band (led by Mr. F. S. Gardner) performed compositions by Grieg and Boccherini, and Mr. Hunt contributed organ solos by Dr. Crotch, Mailly, and César Franck. Miss Emily Nash and Mr. Harry Elliott (Bristol Cathedral) contributed some songs.

In aid of the funds for holding Sunday afternoon services at Colston Hall, a concert was given in that building on the 11th ult. Those who took part in the performance were Madame Sobrino, Miss Lalla Parry, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Montague Worlock (vocalists), Mr. Maurice Alexander (violin), and Mr. George Riseley (organ), Mr. W. E. Fowler being the accompanist. A varied programme was excellently rendered.

The Wednesday afternoon and evening concerts at the Fine Arts Academy have been commenced and will be continued till June. They are under the management of Mrs. Roeckel and her sister, Mrs. Villiers.

The Mid-Lent performance of the Bristol Choral Society on the 21st ult. at Colston Hall attracted a very large audience. 'Elijah' was admirably presented under the direction of Mr. George Riseley. The band (with Mr. H. Lewis leader) and choir numbered 600, and the soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Santley. These were associated in the double quartet with Miss Amy Perry, Miss Clara Aldersley, Mr. H. L. Wensley, and Mr. W. Thomas, all local vocalists.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On February 24 the Dublin Orchestral Society (conductor, Signor Esposito) gave their Third Subscription Concert for the season. The programme contained for the first time at these concerts Beethoven's 'Fifth Symphony.' Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees was very successful in the solo part of Tschaikovsky's 'Variations on a rococo theme' for violoncello and orchestra. Smetana's 'Die verkaufte Braut' Overture and Weber's 'Der Freischütz' Overture completed the programme, which attracted a considerably larger audience than is usual at these concerts. The funds of this Society being now quite exhausted, and the money taken at the doors quite inadequate to pay the expenses, this would have been the last concert given by the Society but for the generous action of a well-wisher, who has promised to pay all the expenses of the remaining two concerts advertised for this season.

At the Dublin Orchestral Society's Fourth Concert given on the 18th ult. the chief item in the programme was Brahms's magnificent Second Symphony in D, which received a very satisfactory interpretation under the baton of Signor Esposito. The programme also included Beethoven's 'Coriolan' and Gluck's 'Alceste' Overtures, and Bizet's charming 'L'Arlesienne' Suite, No. 1.

The Chamber Music Union gave their third concert on February 27, with Mr. John Dunn (principal violinist), Mr. P. Delany (second violin), Mons. O. Grisard (viola), Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees (violoncello), and Signor Esposito (pianoforte). Mr. John Dunn played Saint-Saëns's 'Rondo Capriccioso,' and joined the other artists in Beethoven's String Quartet in C major, and Brahms's pianoforte Quartet in G minor.

The 'College Choral' on February 28 performed Mendelssohn's settings of the 13th and 42nd Psalms, and Meyerbeer's 91st Psalm, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Marchant. The solos were sung by members of the Society.

The Glee and Madrigal Union gave their first concert on the same evening. The members of the Union—Messrs. J. R. Morgan, Melfort Dalton, T. F. Marchant, and J. Harris Watson—were assisted by Miss Louise Dale, Mr. Hamilton Earle, and Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees (violoncello). Mrs. Joseph Robinson and Miss Ada Skipworth played the accompaniments.

The annual concert and distribution of prizes given by the Royal Irish Academy of Music took place on the 7th ult., when the Lord Lieutenant handed the prizes to the various recipients. The orchestra, conducted by Dr. Józé, played part of a Mozart Symphony, Gluck's 'Iphigénie' Overture and Mendelssohn's 'Cornelius' March. Amongst the prize-winning pupils who performed were Miss Lizzie Gorman (contralto), Miss Nellie Ruthven (violin), Miss Sophie Allen (pianoforte), and Miss Figgis (violoncello).

On the 11th and 14th ult. Mr. Plunket Greene, who is a native of this city, gave two song recitals, and Miss Constance Greene played the accompaniments.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Never in its history has Edinburgh had such a flood of concerts as during the present season. And the music has, generally speaking, been so excellent in quality as to have merited detailed comment had space permitted.

Most interesting was the concert of sacred music given by the choir of St. George's Church, in the Music Hall, on February 23. The programme consisted of the 'Missa Papæ Marcelli' of Palestrina, and anthems by Byrd, Gibbons, Goss, Gounod, and Croft. These were sung a cappella with fine tone and devotional feeling, and greatly impressed the listeners. Mr. Henry Hartley conducted.

Mr. Kirkhope's second concert, on the 10th ult., was devoted to modern part-songs. The choir did themselves and their genial conductor great credit by their performance of a varied and interesting programme—notably fine being the rendering of Sullivan's 'The long day closes,' by the male voices of the choir. Other admirable numbers were 'O happy eyes' by Elgar, and 'Laugh at loving if you will' by Percy Pitt. Variety was given by the Fillünger Quartet (Brahms's 'Gipsy Songs') and Signor Antonietti, whose violin solos aroused much enthusiasm.

The annual concert of the University Musical Society was signalled by the inclusion of Mozart's beautiful 'Requiem' in the programme. That a work of such purity and charm is so seldom heard is matter for wonder and regret, and the Society deserves warm congratulations, not only upon its choice, but also for the admirable and impressive rendering of the noble composition. In strong contrast was the remainder of the programme—Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' which received a bright and happy rendering. The quartets and solos were delightfully given by Misses Helen Jaxon and Lalla Parry, Messrs. William Green and Dan Price; and a singularly excellent band, under Mr. Siegl, combined with Mr. Collinson in a dainty rendering of the accompaniments. Mr. J. A. Moonie conducted an excellent concert.

The second concert of the Amateur Orchestral Society was a very good one, and demonstrated how steadily the Society improves under Mr. T. H. Collinson's baton. The chief works were the 'Ossian' Overture of Gade, Dr. Elgar's 'Sursum Corda,' for organ, brass and strings, and Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto, which latter received a broad and sympathetic rendering by Dr. Harold Ballantyne, an amateur of exceptional technical ability.

The Saint Cecilia Orchestral Society, an amateur body carefully trained by Mr. Gerald Crawford, showed at their concert on the 6th ult. that they steadily maintain the improvement which has been so favourably commented upon before. The players showed much insight and fervour in a somewhat ambitious programme. A Mazurka for orchestra, composed for the Society by Mr. W. B. Moonie, proved a bright and grateful number.

For its third concert on the 16th ult. the Choral Union chose 'Judas Maccabæus,' and the fine military oratorio secured from chorus, soloists, and orchestra a thoroughly adequate performance. For the solos a very competent quartet had been engaged—Mesdames Alice Esty and Gertrude Lonsdale, and Messrs. John Coates and Charles Knowles. Mr. Dambmann led the band, Mr. Bradley was organist, and Mr. Collinson conducted. Messrs. Paterson and Sons gave the last—and one of the best—of their series of popular concerts in the McEwen Hall on the 21st ult. Mr. Moonie's Choir was engaged for the occasion and delighted the large audience with a magnificent performance of the first and second parts of Haydn's 'Creation' and the 'Wedding Feast' section of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' The soloists were Madame Emily Davies (soprano), Mr. Kelly Cole (tenor), and Mr. Charles Bennett (bass). The instrumental accompaniments were rendered with remarkable efficiency by Mr. Collinson (organ) and Mr. Nicol Affleck (piano-forte).

Another interesting concert was that given by the Ladies' Choir, conducted by Mr. J. A. Y. Stronach. Into Hofmann's 'Song of the Norns' and a varied selection of part-songs they not only infused much spirit and artistic feeling, but gave evidence throughout of careful training.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

As is usual at the close of the Choral and Orchestral Union's season, a considerable number of miscellaneous concerts fall to be recorded. On February 21, Mr. Golan E. Hoole's Choir performed Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Departure' (first time of performance here, we believe) with as good effect as was possible with only piano-forte accompaniment. The baritone solos were excellently sung by Mr. Young. An audience of encouraging dimensions assembled at the third Halstead-Verbruggen Quartet Concert on February 23, when Brahms's Quintet for piano-forte and string quartet (Op. 34), Beethoven's Trio (Sérénade) for violin, viola and violoncello, two Caprices for violin and viola by Wieniawski, and Corelli's violoncello Sonata in D minor formed the programme. The best effort of the artists was the Quintet, of which an inspiring performance, especially of the Andante and the Scherzo, was given.

On the 3rd ult., Miss Adeline Fera gave a concert in celebration of Mr. Santley's jubilee, at which the veteran baritone sang as artistically as ever and was presented with a laurel wreath. Smart's 'The Bride of Dunkerron' and Macfarren's 'The Lady of the Lake,' two cantatas which have not been heard here for many years, were given, the former on the 10th ult. by the students of the Athenæum School of Music, under Dr. Harper, and the latter on the 13th ult. by the choir of Cambridge Street United Free Church, under Mr. James Forsyth. The choir of Caledonia Road United Free Church (Mr. Robert Turnbull, organist and choirmaster) gave a meritorious performance of Handel's 'Samson' on the 10th ult., and on the 12th ult. the music classes in connection with the Southern and Eastern sections of the Young Men's Christian Association brought their session to a close with a very creditable rendering of the 'Messiah,' under the direction of Mr. John Tannahill. The Glasgow Glee and Madrigal Society, a new choir, ably conducted by Mr. B. W. Hartley, made its first public appearance on the 10th ult. As its name implies, the Society devotes attention mainly to glees and madrigals, and Mr. Hartley and his choristers deserve the support of the musical public in their efforts to popularise a species of vocal composition, peculiarly native, which in recent years has been too much neglected. The Society's performance was one of all-round excellence, but Cooke's 'Strike the lyre' and Stevens's 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind' may be singled out for special commendation. Vocal solos by Miss Jenny Taggart and Mr. Henry Brearley gave variety to the programme.

On the 18th ult. the choir of St. Luke's parish church (Mr. Andrew Milne, organist and choirmaster) made a good appearance in Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' and 'Hear my prayer,' and on the following evening the choral classes in connection with the Sabbath School Union (Mr. Alec Steven, conductor) united in giving a performance of 'Elijah.' The chorus, composed largely of young voices, sang very well, and a small but efficient orchestra, led by Mr. Siegl, and supported by Mr. Berry at the organ, gave the accompaniments. A miscellaneous programme was given by the Paisley Choral Union on the 18th ult., when the leading choral numbers were Mendelssohn's 'Come, let us sing,' and 'Hear my prayer.' In the former, the singing of the chorus was exceedingly fine. Messrs. James Barr and Hopkins Ould acted as conductor and organist respectively. On the same evening the Clydebank Choral Union, under Mr. W. J. Clapperton, essayed Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' with considerable success, and an orchestra, chiefly amateur, led by Mr. George Sunderland, rendered the accompaniments creditably.

Under the skilful direction of Mr. Herbert Walton the Cambuslang Choral Society gave a good performance of Parts 1 and 2 of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' on the 20th ult. Mr. W. H. Cole led the orchestra, and Messrs. Stevenson and M'Millan presided at the piano-forte and harmonium respectively. Mr. Edwin C. Owston, the conductor of the newly-formed Dumbarton Musical Association, showed wisdom in selecting Sterndale Bennett's beautiful cantata 'May Queen' for the choir's first appearance on the 17th ult. The work is particularly grateful to the chorus, and it is surprising to find it so seldom taken up by our local choral societies. Mr. Owston secured a most creditable rendering of the cantata, and the new choir's efforts were warmly applauded by a large and appreciative audience.

To complete the record of a busy month, we may mention piano-forte recitals by Mr. Joseph Bradley, the accomplished conductor of the Choral Union; an inaugural organ recital by Mr. Herbert Walton in Tron United Free Church, and a week's performances by the Moody-Manners Opera Company.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

As the last of the series of free recitals of sacred music which has been given for many years in the great nave of Gloucester Cathedral marked a slight departure from the usual course, some reference may be excused. Falling in the season of Lent it was decided to give at the recital of March 5 the biblical scene entitled 'Emmaus,' and written by Mr. A. Herbert Brewer (Cathedral organist) for the last Gloucester Festival, in its entirety. The large band and chorus, numbering over 200, was drawn almost entirely from the local musical organisations which Mr. Brewer directs. The performance was most impressive, and the solos creditably rendered by Miss Lynes (of Coventry) and Mr. C. E. Morgan (Cathedral choir). Mackenzie's 'Benedictus' was also played by the band. Mr. Brewer conducted. It is interesting to note that this was the one hundred and fifty-eighth recital since the movement was inaugurated by Dean Butler and Mr. C. Lee Williams, the former organist of the Cathedral. 'Emmaus' attracted a congregation which must have numbered fully four thousand persons. In how few of our English cathedrals are such services available!

The second of the three concerts of the season given by the Gloucester Choral Society was held in the Shire Hall on the 17th ult., when a most interesting programme was arranged. The chief work was 'The Dream of Jubal' by Sir A. C. Mackenzie, which was performed at the Gloucester Festival Meeting in 1889. Mr. Charles Fry recited Mr. Bennett's admirable poem on the present occasion, as he did at the work's production at Liverpool in February, 1889. Mr. A. Herbert Brewer conducted an excellent performance, and Miss Mabel Manson and Mr. Reginald Brophy proved most acceptable interpreters of the solo music. An interesting item in the programme was a new orchestral work by the conductor entitled 'Springtime,' written for small orchestra, and given on this occasion for the first time. It is a pleasing and graceful work, and the composer-conductor was heartily applauded, an encore being called for and conceded. Mozart's 'Zauberflöte' Overture was also well played by the competent band, led by Mr. G. H. Reed.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The 'grand orchestral night' which occurs once in every season of the Philharmonic Society is anticipated with no small satisfaction. February 24 was set aside for this special festival, and Dr. Cowen's scheme met all demands. The programme included Tchaikovsky's F minor Symphony (No. 4), very distinctively rendered; Liszt's symphonic poem, 'Les Préludes'; the prelude to 'Parsifal'; the 'Parisian' version of the 'Venusberg' music ('Tannhäuser'); and one of Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' marches—that in D. For the occasion the numerical strength of the orchestra was considerably increased, and Mr. Santley, who was heard to especial advantage, sang well-known numbers. The penultimate concert of the same Society was on the 10th ult., when Miss Münchhoff made a first appearance at these concerts, and by her clever use of a most pleasing soprano voice won golden opinions. Mr. Robert Hausmann, the distinguished violoncellist, reappeared, and the orchestra revived Goldmark's 'A Rustic Wedding'—a symphony replete with simple picturesqueness and charm.

The Orchestral Society's programme on the 14th ult. was again of high interest. It included Mr. Granville Bantock's tone-poem 'The Witch of Atlas,' a work which reveals in no uncertain manner the composer's resourcefulness in scoring; Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor, of which Miss Pauline St. Angelo gave a meritorious account; and Brahms's Symphony No. 3 in F. Miss Helen Jaxon was the vocalist, and, as usual, Mr. Rodewald conducted. February 28 saw the last of the most interesting series of four Schiever concerts at the College of Music. The quartet party was made up of Mr. Ernst Schiever, Mr. Alfred Ross, Mr. Carl Courvoisier and Mr. Walter Hatton, and, inter alia, they played Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1). Miss Therese Pott (of Cologne) and Miss Michiels played with fluency and marked ability Saint-Saëns's Scherzo (Op. 67) for two pianofortes. Miss Pott joined the quartet in giving an interesting rendering of Dohnányi's pianoforte quintet (Op. 1).

Mr. Lawson's series of classical chamber concerts finished their course on the 3rd ult. The string quartet party was composed of Mr. Lawson, Mr. John Lawson, Mr. Thomas Rimmer, and Mr. W. Hatton. Beethoven's Quartet in G. (Op. 18, No. 2) was put forward. Miss Agnes Lewis's performance of Beethoven's C minor variations was characterised by skillfulness of execution. An interested audience listened at Hope Hall, on the 12th ult., to the Rev. Augustin Gatard's disquisition—replete with scholarly research—on Gregorian music. In elucidation the lecturer had the assistance of the boys of St. Joseph's Plain-song Choir, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Booth. The Fiorentino string quartet have at all their concerts met with considerable appreciation, and the programme offered on the 7th ult. evoked the usual signs of approval.

The Walton Breck Musical Society gave Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' on February 27, the soloists being Miss Florence Hall, Mr. J. C. Greenlees, and Mr. Fred Owens, good work coming from each, while the chorus sang with precision and care. Mr. J. S. Johnson conducted. Mr. Arnold Földes delighted a large audience by his fine violoncello playing on the 6th ult., at the matinée musicale given in the Court Theatre.

The third and last of the season's Richter concerts, given on the 17th ult., was considerably the most successful of the three. An immense audience was attracted by a brilliant programme which included the 'Pathétique' Symphony of Tchaikovsky, Strauss's symphonic poem 'Tod und Verklärung,' Liszt's 'Mephisto Walzer,' Beethoven's 'Coriolan' Overture, 'The Ride of the Valkyries,' and another work from the pen of Richard Strauss, to wit, the humoresque 'Till Eulenspiegel' (Op. 28). Dr. Richter surpassed himself in the direction of this lavish programme, and the enthusiasm after the third movement of the Symphony was such as the Philharmonic Hall but seldom knows.

Mr. Johannes Weingaertner's concert on the 16th ult. at the Institute passed off amid every indication of success. The concert-giver had the assistance of Mr. Fridolin Weingaertner, and Messrs. Whitely, Stutely, and Wright.

The Orchestral Society concluded a highly meritorious series of concerts on the 21st ult., when, in the absence of Mr. Rodewald, Mr. Granville Bantock conducted a programme which included Weber's Overture to 'Der Freischütz,' Elgar's Sérénade for Strings, Dvorák's Symphony No. 5 in E minor, 'From the New World,' and Beethoven's Violin Concerto, Mr. Rawdon Briggs being the soloist.

On the 14th ult., at Hope Hall, the Liverpool Cymric Vocal Union—now twenty-one years of age—put forward a well-varied programme which attracted a large audience, whilst the Post Office Choral Society offered attractive fare, in the good cause of charity, on the 10th ult., at the Philharmonic Hall, the concert being under the direction of Mr. Percival H. Ingram. Mendelssohn's 'Vale of Rest' was sung. Miss Winifred Wynne, Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint were contributors to a nicely-differentiated scheme.

Postscript.

'The Dream of Gerontius' was heard under Dr. Cowen's efficient direction for the first time in Liverpool, at the last concert of the Philharmonic Society's season on the 24th ult. At once let it be said that the work created a profound impression upon an immense and musically-representative audience, which gave to it marked concentration of mind.

Dr. Wüllner's rendering of the music attributed to Gerontius was fully attuned to the occasion. His phrasing was a delight; his intonation perfect; his method something of a revelation, whilst his finely sympathetic embodiment was peculiarly rich in that spirit of imaginativeness to be found in the work itself. His performance was a triumph, and will be stored in the memory as such for many a long day. Mr. Andrew Black sang well and carefully, and Miss Marie Brema devoted her splendid voice and dramatic method to the part of the Angel. Once the chorus had warmed to their work they did admirably, and in the swift and colourful chorus of Demons they showed resolute attack, weightiness, and homogeneity, whilst they emphasised the grandeur of the chorus of Angelicals—praise indeed.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The seventeenth Hallé concert on February 19 was in the main devoted to Wagner. Of the four extracts two were heard for the first time at these concerts, namely, the Erda scene from the third act of 'Siegfried' and the closing scene of 'Rheingold.' In the weird and magically beautiful music of Erda, Miss Ellen Sellars—a pupil of Mrs. Hutchinson at the Royal Manchester College—made a good impression in virtue of correct intonation and a style that was free from positive defects, and Wotan's part was declaimed by Mr. Black with fine vocal art. Conspicuous among the soloists was Miss Nicholls, who sang gloriously in the love duet from 'Lohengrin' and as leader of the Rhine Daughters' Trio. Mr. William Green sang with good vocal but defective dramatic art in the 'Lohengrin' duet, and also gave a fair rendering of Nurweddin's air from Cornelius's 'Barber of Bagdad'—a comic opera of rare merit that is unfortunately not known here. The other pieces were the amplified 'Venusberg' music from the late Paris version of 'Tannhäuser,' and the closing scene from the second act of 'Fidelio.' The orchestral playing was admirable throughout, and the choir acquitted themselves well in the 'Lohengrin' and 'Fidelio' selections. There was a vast audience and much enthusiasm.

Glazounow's postponed Seventh Symphony stood first on the programme of the eighteenth concert (February 26). This well orchestrated but otherwise defective composition made but a slight impression, and it is not likely to be repeated here. The tricks of harmony and orchestration do not suffice to conceal the flabby and amorphous character of the essential tone structure. It was altogether a rather Muscovite concert, for the principal solo was Rachmaninoff's Second Pianoforte Concerto, exquisitely played by Mr. Siloti, and a set of Variations for Pianoforte by Glazounow also figured in the scheme. The Concerto, though old-fashioned in most respects, proved to have attractive qualities; the Variations, on the other hand, sounded rather insignificant. Mr. Fuchs played the solo part in a Sérénade for violoncello and orchestra by Volkmann, compelling a certain amount of admiration for the work by the warmth and beauty of his playing, and the 'Walkürenritt' brought the concert to an end.

The following week occurred the disappointment in connection with 'Gerontius,' and, chiefly owing to the presence of those two famous Wagnerian singers, Miss Brema and Mr. Plunket Greene, another Wagner programme was at the last moment substituted for the postponed oratorio. Both singers were in good voice, Mr. Plunket Greene once more giving his most eloquent rendering of the Sachs monologues, and Miss Brema repeating her heroic declamation in the 'Götterdämmerung' finale. The 'Faust' Overture, and selections from 'Tristan,' 'Parsifal,' and 'Rienzi' made up the rest of the programme, in the course of which Dr. Richter's authoritative renderings showed not the slightest falling off.

Nothing, it may safely be said, in the way of a musical performance in Manchester has ever been better prepared than the rendering of Elgar's 'Gerontius' on the 12th ult. The orchestral parts were, I believe, considerably better done than ever before—and having heard two German renderings, as well as the original production at Birmingham and the repetitions at Worcester and Sheffield, I may perhaps be allowed to express an opinion on the point. The chorus and semi-chorus showed themselves completely at home in the music; Mr. Coates gave his highly artistic interpretation of Gerontius's tenor solos; Miss Brema sang the Angel's part with her customary expressive power; and Mr. Black gave the utterances of the Priest and the Angel of the Agony in unexceptionable style. The impression created by the performance was altogether extraordinary, most of the vast audience remaining till some time after the end to applaud the conductor, principals, and, in fact, everyone connected with the performance. At the close of the concert the Committee adopted the unusual course of sending the following telegram to Dr. Elgar:—

Cordial congratulations to our honoured friend the distinguished composer of 'Gerontius' on the wonderfully impressive performance of his magnificent oratorio, which was enthusiastically received this evening.—The Hallé Concert Committee.

At the Brodsky Quartet Concert on February 25 the most interesting feature was the rendering of Tschaikovsky's A minor Trio with Mr. Siloti at the pianoforte. The final Brodsky Concert on the 11th ult. was devoted to Brahms: Messrs. Brodsky, Speelman, and Fuchs—regular members of the Quartet—were joined by Mr. Dayas in the C minor Pianoforte Quartet (last of the three), and a performance full of colour and imagination was given. The concluding work was the G major Sextet, finely played by Messrs. Brodsky, Briggs, Speelman, Fuchs, Holme and Smith.

Three Gentlemen's Concerts have been given since my last letter to THE MUSICAL TIMES. On February 18 the programme consisted of string quartets by Dr. Brodsky and his associates, and of male-voice choruses by the Manchester Orpheus Glee Society, which can probably produce the best male-voice choir in the North of England. At the penultimate Gentlemen's meeting on the 2nd ult., Miss Fanny Davies played Schumann's Concerto with something less than her former mastery, and Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony was exquisitely played by a small orchestra under Dr. Richter. For the wind-up of the season, Mr. Godowsky was engaged to give a pianoforte recital, and Miss Foster to sing. Mr. Godowsky made a considerable impression, though probably few among the audience suspected the full measure of his talent. He made some attempt to adapt his programme to the hall, which has a bad acoustic, particularly unfavourable to percussion instruments and to music of a complex kind. Miss Foster proved herself a genuine lyrical singer in a programme of striking freshness. Among the songs, which were all unfamiliar, Grieg's 'Im Kahne' was the most remarkable.

At Mr. Brand Lane's sixth and last concert on the last day of February, the choir sang admirably in Mendelssohn's 43rd Psalm and in Stanford's 'Jolly Shepherd.' There were several soloists, who gave performances in ballad concert style, and Mrs. Beerbohm Tree recited pieces by Kipling and others. Mr. Alfred Jordan's vocal recital on February 24 brought back a most refined lyrical singer to the concert stage after an interval of some years. Mr. Max Mayer's second concert was held on the 10th ult., the most interesting feature of the occasion being the performance of Mr. Hausmann, violoncellist of the Joachim Quartet, who played with fine distinction of style in Schumann's 'Stücke im Volckston' and, together with Mr. Mayer, in sonatas by Beethoven and Brahms. Miss Neruda's concert on the 20th ult. brought an opportunity of hearing her capable pupil Mr. Edward Isaacs in Bach's Organ Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, as arranged for the pianoforte by Liszt. Together with Mr. Dayas, Miss Neruda gave a powerful rendering of Liszt's 'Concerto Pathétique' for two pianofortes, and, in association with a group of efficient string players, led by Mr. Rawdon Briggs of the Brodsky Quartet, she played trios by Beethoven and Dvorák.

On the 17th ult. Dr. Brodsky lectured in the Whitworth Hall, Owens College, on 'Tschaikovsky, the Man and the Composer.' He spoke of the extraordinary interest aroused in this country by the 'Pathetic' Symphony, and passed on to a sketch of the composer's youth. A remarkable episode in his career, the lecturer said, was his friendship with a lady whom he had only seen at a distance and whose voice he had never heard. She was drawn to the composer through his music, and in his letters to her he expressed his inmost thoughts. In one of those letters, when he had been speaking of immortality, he ended with the characteristic phrase—'There may be no music beyond the grave, so let us live here as long as we can.' Dr. Brodsky spoke of Tschaikovsky's strange and unhappy marriage, and afterwards alluded to his own friendship with the composer. Dr. Brodsky made his début in Vienna by playing for the first time the Violin Concerto by Tschaikovsky. It was adversely criticised but, added the lecturer, 'I persisted in playing it all over Germany until it became popular.' This earned him the warm gratitude of Tschaikovsky, and a friendship began which lasted until the composer's death. Among the passages from Tschaikovsky's letters which Dr. Brodsky read was one giving a beautiful analysis of the meaning of one of his symphonies, and in another letter Tschaikovsky put on record his own estimate of the great musicians. It was interesting to find that he dreaded more than loved the music of Beethoven, that he considered Handel quite a third-rate composer, and that he looked upon Mozart as the 'sun' and the 'saviour' of music.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Miss Marie Hall, the brilliant young violinist respecting whom so much has been written during the past month or two, gave a recital in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on the 10th ult. before a very large and exceptionally enthusiastic audience. Miss Hall is a native of Newcastle, where she spent the first ten years of her life, and this fact tended to increase the warmth and enthusiasm of her reception. The fair young violinist was assisted by Madame Eleanor Cleaver, whose singing was much appreciated, and Herr Gottfried Galston, a capable pianist. Miss Vojacek discharged the duties of accompanist.

The Durham College of Science Choral Society gave its eleventh annual concert in Connaught Hall, Newcastle, on the 17th ult. The programme included Goring Thomas's 'The Swan and the Skylark,' Gade's 'Spring's Message,' and Sullivan's 'On Shore and Sea.' The soloists were Miss Maggie Wilson, Miss Mary Bowmaker, Mr. C. Blow, and Mr. J. Heywood; Miss E. Simey presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted. The Society has done good work during the twelve years of its existence, and its efforts to popularise good music are worthy of encouragement.

The most important musical event in this district during the past month was the performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah' in the Royal Assembly Hall, South Shields, on the 18th ult., by the South Shields Choral Society under the baton of Mr. M. Fairs. Miss Marie Brema and Mr. Charles Tree were conspicuously successful in the parts of Delilah and the High Priest respectively, the other solo parts being also very satisfactorily filled by Mr. Henry Brearley, Mr. Jos. Lycett, Mr. T. Watts, Mr. Henry Darling and Mr. H. Parker. The choruses were admirably sung, much care having evidently been bestowed upon their preparation. The orchestra too was good, and the entire work—by no means a light undertaking for a Choral Society—was most creditable to all concerned in its performance.

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society gave a recital of Gounod's 'Faust' on the 19th ult, in the Victoria Hall, Sunderland, with Madame Marie Duma, Miss Amy Martin, Mr. Henry Brearley, Mr. Waddle and Mr. Charles Knowles in the solo parts. Gounod's tuneful music was much appreciated by a large audience, and the performance may be said to have successfully closed the Society's season. Mr. N. Kilburn conducted with his customary care and discretion.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was the work undertaken by the Newcastle Philharmonic Society at its concert in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 19th ult. The choruses were well sung, and the solos were entrusted to Miss Maggie Wilson, Miss Margaret Hogarth, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Herbert Brown. Mr. George Dodds conducted, and Mr. H. Yeaman Dodds presided at the organ.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second of the Nottingham Orchestral Concerts took place on the 5th ult., when Mr. Allen Gill guided his forces through an intricate programme. Comprised in this were Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite (No. 2); Haydn's Symphony in D; Prelude, Act I., 'Lohengrin'; and Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture. Miss Lilian Coomber sang three very exacting solos by Gounod, Weber, and Mendelssohn, with orchestral accompaniment.

The Nottingham St. Cecilia Choir for Female Voices, conducted by the Hon. Mrs. Handford, gave their Annual Drawing-room Concert on the 10th ult. The programme, limited to part-songs and choruses by Brahms, Verdi, E. Walker and Bayley, received no small share of its attraction from the assistance of Mr. Charles Fry, who recited amongst other items 'King Robert of Sicily,' with Mr. John E. West's music, in which he was assisted by Mr. W. Wright on the organ. Miss Bourne was vocal soloist, Miss Sybil Speed violin soloist, and Mrs. Cunliffe accompanist. Though this Society has been in existence something like sixteen years, this is the first occasion on which it has given a public performance.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society closed the season with a performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Spohr's 'Last Judgment' on the 20th ult. The soloists were Miss Emily Squire, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Robert Radford. Of the last-named, Nottingham is distinctly proud, a fact which he could easily perceive by the warmth of his reception.

Mr. Allen Gill conducted, and Mr. W. Wright presided at the organ. The concert may be added to the number of successes which have distinguished the Society in the past.

Miss Cantelo's chamber concerts were brought to a conclusion on the 17th ult. at Nottingham, when she was supported by the Kruse Quartet. A noticeable feature of the programme was Tchaikovsky's Trio in A minor, written in remembrance of his teacher Nicolas Rubinstein. Altogether the concert was a singularly fine performance.

The Derby Choral Union terminated their season on the 11th ult., with the presentation of Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty' and a selection which included Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture and a madrigal, 'To Primroses,' by the conductor, Mr. Hancock, besides solos by the principals, Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. H. Lane Wilson. Mr. Neville Cox officiated at the organ, and the band and chorus were two hundred strong.

On the 3rd ult. the Loughborough Musical Society gave a successful performance of Gaul's 'Holy City.' Dr. Briggs conducted, and the soloists were Miss Hearn, Miss Spencer, Mr. J. Turner, and Mr. A. Lakin. On the 9th ult. the members of the Society presented Dr. Briggs with a gold-mounted ivory baton in recognition of his services. The same work was performed by the Wirksworth Choral Society on the 10th ult., under Mr. Hatchett's baton. The Society were obliged to turn numbers away through lack of space.

On the 12th ult., the Melton Mowbray Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' The solos were taken by Miss Warner, Miss Adelaide Lambe, Mr. Norcup, and Mr. Stoddard; and Mr. Warner conducted.

An old society has been resuscitated in the Sutton-in-Ashfield Choral Society. The performance by them of Handel's 'Messiah' on the 16th ult. seems to have been a great success, and had the effect of rousing a musical district into fresh musical life.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

According to custom we give 'a brief digest' of this Term's music. On January 29 an excellent concert was given in the Town Hall under the auspices of the Musical Club, the principal item in the programme being Schubert's ever-lovable Octet, the performers in which were Messrs. Alfred Gibson, Reeves, A. Hobday, Withers, C. Hobday, Egerton, James, and Borsdorf.

On February 11 Sir Hubert Parry lectured in the Sheldonian Theatre on 'The two main divisions of Music, and the manner in which their recognition affects questions of style.' It is hardly necessary to say that the genial Professor gave a most interesting discourse to an appreciative audience.

On February 24, in the Town Hall, and again under the auspices of the Musical Club, the Kruse Quartet gave a capital chamber concert, the principal pieces being Beethoven's Quartet in D major (Op. 18, No. 3) and Brahms's Quintet in B minor (Op. 115) for strings and clarinet, Mr. Clinton joining the strings as clarinetist.

On the 2nd ult., in the Examination Schools, and under the auspices of the Musical Union, the Schiever Quartet gave an invitation concert, the principal items being Brahms's Quartet in B flat (Op. 67) and Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74); both were well played, the Beethoven especially displaying admirable tone-colour and intelligent phrasing. On the 10th ult. came the chief concert of the term, this being nothing less than the performance (for the first time in Oxford) of Bach's Mass in B minor, in the Town Hall, by the triple forces of the Choral Society, the Philharmonic Society, and the Bach Choir, under the enthusiastic conductorship of Dr. Allen. That a godly number of lay-clerks were engaged to sing in the choruses proved to be a very wise step, as the demands made on the intelligence and musicianship of the chorus-singers in many instances are very great indeed. Excellent results were obtained, and the volume of tone was thoroughly excellent, and in some special passages simply superb—indeed, we have scarcely ever heard better chorus singing in Oxford. The energy and enthusiasm with which the imitative work was attacked—bristling as it does with difficulties—are worthy of the highest praise. The soloists were Miss Sichel, the Hon. Norah Dawnay, Mr. J. Reed, and Mr. McInnes. Miss Venables (an Oxford lady) played the violin obbligato in No. 5, and Mr. Horton and Mr. Manners the Oboe d'Amore and Corno da Caccia to Nos. 9 and 10 respectively.

In conclusion, we congratulate most heartily all concerned in the production of this stupendous work, much of the success being undoubtedly due to the unflinching energy, zeal and enthusiasm displayed by the conductor, Dr. Allen, in the preparation of the work. Moreover, we must sincerely congratulate the three Societies themselves for their insight and wisdom in joining hands (and voices) to further this excellent result. It may be remembered that in the April number of THE MUSICAL TIMES of a year ago we strenuously advocated the joining—once and for all—of these three Societies 'for the furthering of the highest artistic aims,' and we think that the present performance of the Leipzig Cantor's great Mass with this triple force in friendly combination has amply justified the view we ventured to advance. We look forward to similar triumphs under the same auspices in the future of Oxford music.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Suburban and district musical societies have monopolised the field during the past month. It is satisfactory to find a progressive tendency in the programmes of their various concerts. Though the list given below contains but one absolute novelty, and that an orchestral work, the broadening outlook of those responsible for the selection of works is a hopeful sign of the times.

Cowen's 'Rose-Maiden' was performed on the 2nd ult. at South Street Chapel, Sheffield, where, under Mr. W. S. Skelton's devoted efforts, music is becoming an increasing force. On the following evening the Amateur Instrumental Society (Mr. H. Dean conductor) submitted an interesting programme, which included Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto (solo Mr. G. F. Cawthorne), Weber's 'Der Freischütz' Overture, and a novelty in the shape of Three Dances by Mr. Claude Hawcroft. The composer, who fills the post of leader to the band, has the gift of tune, and his workmanship is very promising. The compositions were cordially received. On the 5th ult. a charity concert promoted by Lady Edmund Talbot was given in the Albert Hall, among the performers being Madame Ella Russell, Lady Maud Warrender, Mr. Andrew Black and Mr. Frederick Dawson. An excellent performance of 'Elijah' at Bromgreave Congregational Church under Mr. H. C. Jackson was especially notable for some successful chorus singing, and a progressive young choral society at Norton Lees gave evidence in 'A Hymn of Praise' of Mr. Horace Reynolds's skill as trainer and conductor.

Benedict's oratorio 'St. Peter' was performed by the Chapeltown Sacred Harmonic Society on the 17th ult., the concert celebrating the 'coming of age' of this, one of the most enterprising of the district musical societies. Mr. Thomas Bool directed an adequate and in many respects a praiseworthy rendering of the work, in which the fine chorus-singing stood out prominently. The soloists were Miss Eva Rich, Miss Clara Robson, Mr. W. Burrows and Mr. Thornton.

Of the other numerous events of a busy month little beyond a bare record of their main features can be said. The Rawmarsh and Parkgate Choral Society gave a concert on the 5th ult., when, under Mr. A. E. Simmonite, 'The Creation' and 'Hymn of Praise' were successfully performed, the choristers, numbering 120, especially distinguishing themselves. The Heeley Wesley Choral Society, under Mr. R. M. Bullmore, in 'The Daughter of Jairus'; the Wath District Society (conductor, Mr. G. M. Coates) in the 'Hymn of Praise'; the Rotherham Choral Society (conducted by Mr. T. Brameld) in 'The Golden Legend' and Brahms's 'Triumphlied'; the St. Mary's Church Choir in Sullivan's Thanksgiving Te Deum; and the Hoyland Common Choral Society (under Mr. C. R. Senior) in Handel's 'Samson', have all furnished instances of the choral activity of the city and district. An 'Elijah' performance at Oak Street Chapel, Heeley; a concert by the newly-formed Talbot Street Choral Society (Bennett's 'May Queen'), and performances by the Sheffield Choral Union (conductor, Mr. Suckley) of Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Elgar's 'Coronation Ode' are also to be added to the list of the month's doings.

On the 24th ult. the Sheffield Musical Union performed Parry's 'Judith' in the Albert Hall under the direction of Dr. Coward. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Masters E. Muscroft, and Frank Hicks, Messrs. Henry Brearley, Hamer, Senior, and Charlesworth. Mr. J. H. Parkes led the band and Mr. W. S. Jessop was organist.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

The event of the month, if not of the season, has been the revival of Stanford's dramatic oratorio 'Eden,' at the Philharmonic and Subscription Series of concerts on the 18th ult. Since its production at the Birmingham Festival of 1891 this important work has been neglected, which is not altogether surprising, for it is difficult, it exacts as much from the listener as from the performer, and demands a great array of principals. On purely artistic grounds, however, it well deserved attention, and the Leeds Philharmonic Society in undertaking this performance not only paid a delicate compliment to their conductor, but earned the thanks of musicians, many of whom were attracted by the event. The general impression left by a very fine all-round performance was that the work gained on a further acquaintance. Based on one of the most powerful, dramatic, and coherent of modern libretti, the music reflects and indeed intensifies these good qualities, and one cannot help being impressed by the variety, the character, and the resourcefulness of which the composer shows himself capable. After so successful a revival, for the audience was not chary of its approval, it will be surprising if the oratorio is again put on the shelf for long. Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Plunket Greene were particularly fine in their respective parts of Eve and Satan, and the other parts were very ably taken by Miss Kate Anderson, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Ivor Foster. The Hallé band and the Philharmonic chorus did their share of the work brilliantly.

At another concert of the Subscription Series, on the 4th ult., the Kruse Quartet appeared and displayed the utmost finish of ensemble in a seldom-heard Quartet of Haydn (in D, Op. 76, No. 5), the performance of which made a remarkable impression even in a room as unsuitable for chamber music as the Leeds Town Hall. Miss Fanny Davies was the pianist and Madame Blanche Marchesi the vocalist. Two concerts by the Leeds Musical Union, at which glees and other concerted pieces for male voices were sung under Mr. B. Johnson's conductorship, were given on February 24 and the 2nd ult.; and on February 28 one of Mr. Edgar Haddock's popular orchestral concerts took place, Sullivan's music forming a prominent feature of the programme. On the 10th ult., Mr. Fred Dawson came to Leeds to give a pianoforte recital. His playing was as facile as ever, and showed a deeper musicianship, while one feature of his programme deserves a special record—Bach's 'Thirty "Goldberg" Variations,' written for a two-manual harpsichord, and recently made available by Klindworth for the modern pianoforte. It was a really masterly performance of a great work. Of especial interest, too, was the programme of the Bohemian concert on the following day, when César Franck's remarkable and most individual String Quartet in D and Tschaikevsky's rather laboured Quartet in E flat minor were most creditably played by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Haigh, and Giessing. These concerts, which attract perhaps the most exclusively musical audience in the West Riding, are making their way, and it is satisfactory to learn that it is proposed to extend their number next season. On the 13th ult., Miss Gertrude Elliott and Mr. Elliott gave a pleasing chamber concert, at which they introduced Sjögren's Violin Sonata in G minor (Op. 32, No. 3) and Arensky's Pianoforte Trio in D minor (Op. 32). On the 16th ult. the Leeds Symphony Society gave a concert, at which Mr. A. E. Grimshaw conducted a fairly creditable performance of Gade's B flat Symphony, and an interesting rarity was provided in Mozart's 'Sinfonie Concertante for violin and viola' (Köchel, 364), the soloists in which were Messrs. Elliott and Nichols. Mr. Bernard Johnson played Sterndale Bennett's 'Capriccio' for pianoforte and orchestra, and Miss Dewes was the vocalist.

BRADFORD.

On the 3rd ult. the Old Choral Society gave a performance of Mozart's 'Requiem,' which has not been heard for a good many years in the district, combined with Parry's 'Song of Darkness and Light.' The chorus-singing under Mr. J. W. Fitton was excellent in intention, and creditable in actual achievement, more confidence being the main thing wanting. Madame Duma, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Anderson Nicol, and Mr. Dan Price were the soloists. On the 6th ult. the last concert of the Subscription series took place, and Beethoven's Choral Symphony, together with the third act of 'Lohengrin' formed the programme. With the aid of the Hallé Orchestra and the experienced chorus of the Festival Choral Society, Dr. Cowen had no difficulty in securing fine performances, though his reading of Beethoven was hardly so satisfying as of Wagner. The principals, too, Madame Ella Russell, Miss Edna Thornton, Madame Cockcroft, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Ivor Foster, seemed less at home in the former than in the latter, which they sang with much fervour.

On the 7th ult. the Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave a concert at which the performances under Mr. Allen Gill were more than creditable, and such things as the 'Lohengrin' Prelude and 'Rienzi' Overture were very smartly played. Mr. Henley's feats as a violinist added a zest to the proceedings.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

That Halifax holds Sir Hubert Parry in honour is evidenced by the fact that over one of the entrances to their new concert hall his name is carved in enduring stone, and a further proof was afforded by the concert given on the 12th ult. by the Halifax Choral Society, at which the composer conducted two of his happiest choral works—the 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' and the 'Invocation to Music.' Carefully trained by Mr. English, their conductor, these eager and intelligent singers gave a good account of themselves and presented Sir Hubert's beautiful music, which repays repetition, in a very favourable light. The orchestra was hardly strong enough, but made the most of its powers, and the principals, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. H. C. Wilde, and Mr. H. Lane Wilson, were all thoroughly artistic in their respective parts, the first- and last-named giving exceptionally sympathetic renderings. On the 5th ult. the Halifax Orchestral Society, which is doing well under Mr. H. van Dyck's guidance, gave a very praiseworthy performance of Haydn's well-known 'Salomon' Symphony in D, and other orchestral pieces.

At Huddersfield, the Subscription Concert on February 25 was of much more than ordinary importance, since Dr. Richter appeared with his Manchester Orchestra to conduct a 'Wagner Programme.' At the next concert of the series, on the 10th ult., Mrs. Beerbohm Tree recited 'Enoch Arden' to Strauss's music, ably played by Mr. C. Wilkinson. On the 6th ult., the Choral Society gave Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' Trilogy. They had already performed the work with much success under the composer's baton, and this repetition served to show what Dr. Coward's energetic methods could make of it. Madame Effie Thomas, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. Charles Tree were the principals.

The Keighley Orchestral Society, under Mr. Summer-scales, gave a concert on the 4th ult. at which Haydn's 'Military' Symphony was creditably performed, Mr. John Dunn being the violinist and Miss Agnes Nicholls the vocalist. Another very capable orchestra, also chiefly amateur in its composition, the Hull Philharmonic Society, essayed a higher flight on the 6th ult., attempting Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony with a large measure of success. Miss Gertrude Foster, a Hull pianist, played Schumann's Concerto ably, and Miss Tadman was the vocalist. Mr. J. W. Hudson conducted. At Scarborough Messrs. W. H. Cass and Owen Williams have during the season been giving a series of chamber concerts which have covered all the principal nationalities in turn. The idea is a good one, and has been carried out very ably and artistically.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

After many delays Charpentier's 'Louise' was produced at the Royal Opera House, Berlin, on the 4th ult., with Fräulein Destinn in the title-rôle. The Signale states that the opera achieved only a 'succès de curiosité.'

BUDAPEST.

At the eighth concert of the Philharmonic Society was produced a new Symphony by Edmund Mikalovich, Director of the Royal Music Academy. The work created a deep impression, and was received with marked favour.—The ladies Berta Oeder and Emilia Herzog have each given a song recital. At the first appeared Várkonyi, an able pianist; at the second, the gifted violinist, Barmas Jssay.

FRANKFURT-ON-MAIN.

The first performance of Goldmark's 'Götz von Berlichingen' in German took place last month in the Opera House of this city, and with great success. The work was given under the direction of Dr. Kunwald.

LEIPZIG.

Performances of all Wagner's stage works, from 'Rienzi' to 'Götterdämmerung,' are to be given at the Stadttheater of this city at the conclusion of the festivities at Berlin in connection with the inauguration of the monument to the Master next October. Herr J. H. Block, a friend of Arthur Nikisch, director of studies at the Conservatorium, has presented to that Institution the sum of £500, the interest of which is to be given yearly to the pupil who produces the best composition.

MANNHEIM.

The new festival hall built by Bruno Schmitz is to be opened at Easter. The inauguration will consist of a three-days' festival under the direction of Felix Mottl and Kähler and Langer, Court-capellmeisters of this city. The Carlsruhe Orchestra will be added to that of Mannheim, and there will be a choir of about a thousand voices. Bach's 'Ein feste Burg,' Beethoven's Choral Symphony, Liszt's Thirteenth Psalm, and Bruckner's Te Deum are included in the programmes. On the evening of each day there will be a chamber concert in which the Joachim Quartet and Signor Busoni will take part.

MILAN.

Signor G. Gallignani, director of the conservatorio of this city, has written a choral work of large dimensions (words and music), bearing the Latin title 'Quare,' or in plain English 'Wherefore.' Philosophers of every age have tried to solve the mystery of the universe, to answer the questions 'Whence come we?' 'Whither do we go?' 'What is the aim of our life?' The seven sections of the work which represent some of their utterances are as follow:—'Humanity,' 'The Stoics,' 'The Epicureans,' 'Sceptics and Atheists,' 'Mystic Chorus,' 'The song of the Sun,' and 'Invocation to supreme Love.' The programme is not without ambition.—

The Secolo states that 234 scores were sent in for the Sonzogno competition. Of the libretti, 198 were in Italian, nineteen in French, eight in German, six in English, two in Russian, and one in Spanish. Of these three have been set apart for performance before the final decision.

PARIS.

According to Le Ménestrel Augusta Holmès has bequeathed all her works, published or manuscript, to the Paris Conservatoire. Among the latter are:—An unfinished opera 'Merrow,' only the words of the first Act, and a few sketches of the music; 'Jugement de Nais,' symphonic poem, words and music but without the orchestral score; and a melody 'Les trois petits gars.' A marble bust of the great vocalist Marietta Alboni will shortly be placed in the foyer of the Opera House. A manager proposes, but la grippe disposes. A week was to be devoted to the veteran composer, M. Ernest Reyer; 'Sigurd,' 'La Statue,' and 'Salammbô' were to have been given at the Opera during the first week in March, but the arrangements were partially upset by the indisposition of Mlle. Bréval and M. Jean de Reszke, the latter indeed being compelled to leave Paris for at least a fortnight. M. Paderewski has been in negotiation with M. Albert Carré for the production of his opera 'Manru' at the Opéra Comique. The French translation of the libretto has been made by M. Catulle Mendès, who indeed has promised to write a French libretto for a new opera from the pen of the eminent pianist. Sunday, March 1, was the thirtieth anniversary of the foundation of the Colonne concerts, and after a performance of César Franck's 'Les Béatitudes,' a special ovation was bestowed on the able and enterprising conductor, who on the morning of the same day had received a letter from M. Chaumié, Minister of Public Instruction, recognising not only the manner in which he has trained and improved public taste, but also the just honours paid to Berlioz and Franck, and the encouragement given to rising composers.

Miscellaneous.

The Board of Trinity College London, announce the appointment of four Examiners to conduct this year's Examinations in Practical subjects, in India and the Colonies, viz.: Australia, Dr. William Creser; South Africa, Mr. G. E. Bambridge; New Zealand and Tasmania, Mr. Charles Edwards; and India, Mr. Alfred Mistowski.

Dr. Elgar's cantata 'Caractacus,' one of his finest works, but almost unknown to London audiences, will be performed at the Northern Polytechnic, Holloway Road, on the 23rd inst., at 8 p.m., by the Finsbury Choral Association, under the conductorship of Mr. Allen Gill, when an excellent rendering may be expected.

Candidates who intend to present themselves for examinations for degrees in music at the University of Oxford may be interested to know that certain changes will come into force on May 12. Particulars may be obtained upon application to the Secretary, Boards of Faculties Office, Broad Street, Oxford.

The 400th concert of the South Place Sunday Popular Concerts of Chamber Music took place on the 15th ult., when a special programme of wind chamber music was performed by the Queen's Hall Wind Instrument Quintet, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Wood.

In the account of the Handel Society given on p. 170 of our last issue, the name of the excellent accompanist and organist to the Society ever since its formation twenty years ago, Mr. Edward G. Croager, was inadvertently omitted. Honour to whom honour is due.

Master Vernon Warner, the clever young pianist, recently made his appearance at a concert in Genoa with considerable success, notably in Tschaiikovsky's 'Paraphrase de Concert.'

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARISED.

ANNAN.—Highly commendable were the efforts of the Annan Choral Society on the 5th ult. in the Victoria Hall, when the inhabitants of the little border town had the felicity of listening to a 'grand choral-orchestral recital' of Mendelssohn's oratorio 'Elijah,' under the careful direction of Mr. W. C. Darley, of Carlisle Cathedral. The soloists were Miss Marion Dalziel, Miss Lilian Payne, Mr. George Riley, and Mr. John Browning. The orchestra (led by Mr. Arthur Dobson) rendered excellent service; but a special word of praise is the just due of the Annan choralists, nearly one hundred strong, who proved themselves to be a very enthusiastic and efficient body of singers. This is the first time that 'Elijah' has been performed in Annan: the success of the recent rendering should certainly not allow it to be the last of such music-makings.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE. — The Philharmonic Society gave their third concert of the season in the Town Hall on the 10th ult. The programme included the part-songs 'The merry March breeze' (Frank L. Moir), 'Far away' and 'The Irish Reel' (T. R. G. Jozé), and 'The Cavaliers' (Clutsum) by the choir; and the orchestra played a selection from Gounod's 'Faust,' the accompaniments to Mozart's Piano-forte Concerto in A (solo pianoforte, Dr. Keighley), Beethoven's Second Symphony, and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March. Mr. Charles Knowles was the vocalist and Dr. Keighley conducted.

AYR.—The last concert of the Choral Union this season was given on the 19th ult. in the Drill Hall, when Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' and Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' were performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Gertrude Hey, Mr. H. Beaumont, and Mr. R. Burnett.

BATH.—Mr. J. H. Macfarlane gave an interesting lecture on 'Handel as a Melody Maker' at the Literary and Philosophical Association on February 27, when illustrations were supplied by Miss Emmeline Blake, Miss Hutchings, Mr. Wills, and Mr. C. Poole.

CHESTERFIELD.—Mr. G. H. Sadler, organist and choirmaster of Holy Trinity Church, has been presented by the members of the choir with a silver-mounted ivory baton as a mark of their esteem.

CONSETT.—The Wesleyan Church Choir gave a performance on the 4th ult. of Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' and a miscellaneous selection which included the Allegro from Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, 'O gladsome light' (from Sullivan's 'Golden Legend'), and 'Unfold ye portals' (from Gounod's 'Redemption'). Both choir and orchestra rendered efficient service, and the solo parts were sung by Miss Maggie Matthews, Miss Lydia Muir, and Miss Cissy Soulsby, Mr. W. F. Lane acting as reader of the verses. Mr. W. G. Lowrie conducted.

COVENTRY.—The Free Church Choral Union gave a miscellaneous concert on the 19th ult. in the Corn Exchange. The choir of 130 voices, directed by Mr. Charles Matthews, was heard to excellent advantage in Fanning's 'The Miller's Wooing,' 'Come live with me' (Sterndale Bennett), Dr. Callcott's glee 'O snatch me swift,' Benedict's 'Hunting Song,' Löhr's 'Slumber Song,' and two typical old English madrigals, 'I thought that love had been a boy' (Byrd), and 'See the Shepherds' Queen' (T. Tomkins). The solo vocalists were Miss Marjorie Eaton and Mr. Charles Tree, with Mrs. Stockham as solo harpist. Mr. Aubrey Edwards accompanied.

DUDLEY.—The Vocal Union at their second concert of the season on the 18th ult. gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' Trilogy in the Town Hall. There was a band and chorus of over 100 performers, conducted by Mr. W. H. Aston, and the solo vocalists were Mrs. Walter Aston, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. W. J. Ineson.

ERDINGTON.—The Chamber Concert Society gave the second concert of the present series on the 11th ult. The programme included Schubert's String Quartet and two of Coleridge-Taylor's Characteristic Dances, played by Mr. Reginald Chamberlain, Mr. W. E. Thomas, Miss Kate Benson, and Mr. A. H. Duncuff. Solos were played by Mr. Frank Madeley (pianoforte), Mr. R. Chamberlain (violin), and Mr. A. H. Duncuff (violin-cello), and the vocalists were Miss Gertrude Yates and Mr. Hickman-Smith. Mr. H. M. Stevenson acted as accompanist.

HARROW.—An interesting lecture on 'Handel' was given in the John Lyon School on the 14th ult. by Mr. Alfred Gurney (organist of the parish church). Excerpts from 'Israel in Egypt' and 'Acis and Galatea' were well sung by an efficient choir, and Miss Adelaide Lambe gave a very fine rendering of 'But who may abide?'

HUNTLY.—The Choral Society gave their first concert in Stewart's Hall on the 13th ult., when Cowen's cantata 'St. John's Eve' was performed with a miscellaneous programme, which included Elgar's part-songs 'As torrents in summer' and 'O happy eyes.' The solo vocalists were Miss Ritchie, Mr. Weir, Mr. R. McKenzie, and Mr. McCallum. The choir and orchestra numbered over sixty, and Mr. Warren T. Clemens conducted.

KEITH.—The annual concert of the Philharmonic Society took place in the Longmore Hall on the 11th ult., when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' was performed under the able direction of Mr. Warren T. Clemens. The choir gave evidence of careful training, and were supported by an efficient orchestra led by Mr. J. M. Riach. The programme included German's Henry VIII. Dances and the part-songs 'As torrents in summer,' and 'O happy eyes' (Elgar). The solo vocalists were Miss M. Louise Christie and Mr. R. S. Callaghan.

KENDAL.—The Choral Society gave its forty-first concert on the 19th ult., when Elgar's fine symphonic cantata 'The Black Knight' formed the most important work on the programme. The great and varied choral opportunities of this beautiful work were realised with true dramatic instinct by the choir and orchestra. The remainder of the programme included 'Hear my prayer,' Mendelssohn, Wagner's 'Bride's March' ('Lohengrin'), 'The Dance' (from 'The Bavarian Highlands'), Elgar, Weber's Overture to 'Euryanthe,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Casse-Noisette' Suite. The solo vocalist was Miss Evangeline Florence, and Mr. J. Smallwood Winter conducted.

KIRKCALDY, N.B.—The Musical Society gave a concert in the Adam Smith Hall on the 18th ult., when Gounod's 'Redemption' was impressively performed. The chorus numbered 150 voices. The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Wynne, Miss Emily Hart, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Andrew Black, the accompaniments being played by an efficient band of thirty performers, drawn chiefly from the Scottish Orchestra and led by Mr. W. H. Cole. Mr. Collinson presided at the organ, and Mr. Charles M. Cowe conducted.

LEAMINGTON.—The Orchestral Society gave their second concert of the season on the 18th ult., under the direction of Mr. Walter Warren. The orchestra acquitted themselves creditably in the following works:—Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony; the 'Pilgrims' March' from Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony; Cherubini's 'Anacréon' Overture; Movements 3 and 4 from Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite; Thomé's 'Andante religioso'; and a 'Meditation' by Aspa, the last-named item being composed for the occasion by a leading Leamington musician. Miss Gleeson-White was the vocalist, and Mr. Percy Hall contributed a violin-cello solo.

LEICESTER.—The Highfields Choral Society gave their tenth annual concert on the 8th ult., when Handel's 'Joshua' was performed. The choir, who sang with excellent attack and vigour, were supported by an efficient orchestra led by Mr. G. H. Barker. The solo vocalists were Miss Lucy Murtagh, Miss Grainger Kerr, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Arthur Walenn. Mr. H. Ellson skillfully conducted.—Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed by the West End Choral Society at the Temperance Hall on the 16th ult. On this occasion the Society was reinforced by the Wigston Harmonic Society, the combined strength being about 140 voices; which, with an orchestra of thirty, gave a very creditable rendering of Mendelssohn's great work. Earnest work had evidently been bestowed in the training of the choir, the attack and volume of tone produced being highly commendable. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Locke, Miss B. A. Pickett, Mr. Arthur Stork and Mr. A. G. Colledge. Mr. B. Sansome led the orchestra, and Mr. A. Pickett was at the organ. The performance was under the able direction of Mr. S. Pickett.

REDHILL.—The Redhill and Reigate Harmonic Society gave a performance at the Town Hall on the 5th ult. of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' and 'Death of Minnehaha.' The choir and orchestra consisted of members of the Society, and the solo vocalists were Mr. Harry Stubbs in the first cantata, Miss Katie Smith and Mr. Dalton Baker in the second. Miss Adey Brunel recited the poem before the performance of each section. Mr. W. S. Bartlett conducted.

RICHMOND.—Mr. James Brown delivered a highly interesting lecture on 'Bach and Handel' at the Athenæum on the 2nd ult. The musical illustrations were of an unusually important character, the choir and orchestra of the New Philharmonic Society and several soloists taking part in a selection from the works of the two great composers, including Handel's Overture 'Giustino' and Oboe Concerto (the solo by M. Desiré Lalande), and Bach's Church Cantata 'Sleepers, wake!' These were conducted by the lecturer.

RIPON.—Elgar's 'Black Knight' was performed by the Choral Society at the Victoria Hall on February 23, under the able direction of Mr. Charles H. Moody. The choir and orchestra, numbering about 100 performers, carried out their duties satisfactorily. The miscellaneous part of the programme included Jackson's part-song 'Ode to the woodlark,' Pearsall's madrigal 'I saw lovely Phillis,' and the March from 'Tannhäuser.'

SCARBOROUGH.—Mr. R. J. Pitcher gave a lecture on Voice Production at the Mechanics' Institute on the 3rd ult., illustrated by lantern slides made by the lecturer.

STIRLING.—The Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Elgar's 'Caractacus' on the 12th ult. The choir sang with excellent expression and refinement. The solo vocalists, Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Henry Brearley, Mr. Charles Tree, and Mr. John Browning, were all highly efficient. Dr. Marchant, who conducted, may be congratulated on the success of the performance, and on the progressive character of the Society he directs.

SWINDON.—The Choral and Orchestral Union associated with the Great Western Railway Mechanics' Institute gave a concert on the 11th ult., when the chief feature of the programme was Sir Hubert Parry's oratorio 'Job.' The choir and orchestra gave an admirable account of their share of the work, although the latter were occasionally too loud—a not unusual failing with orchestral performers. The solo vocalists were Mr. W. Fell, Mr. Daniel Price, and Mr. H. Dearth. Mr. H. T. Sims was an able and careful conductor.

WALLINGTON.—The Orchestral Society provided an excellent programme at Carshalton Public Hall on the 12th ult. It included Weber's 'Jubilee' Overture, the first movement of Schubert's Symphony in B flat, Moszkowski's Spanish Dances (Op. 12, Nos. 2 and 5), and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March. Instrumental solos were given by Miss Maggie Holyman (pianoforte), Miss C. Fawcett (violin), and Mr. H. E. Pickering (oboe). The vocalists were Miss Maud Bawden and Mr. David Brazell, the latter displaying a fine baritone voice of extensive range. Mrs. Alfred E. Dutton recited, and Mr. Arthur Dutton was the conductor.

Answers to Correspondents.

CECIL.—(1) William George Wood died (aged about 40) at Highgate, September 25, 1895. For the last ten years of his life he was Music-master at Highgate Grammar School. He was a professor and examiner at the Royal Academy of Music, of which Institution he was a Fellow, and also a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists. (2) The 'Akademische Fest-Ouverture' by Brahms was composed in recognition of the degree of doctor of philosophy conferred upon him by the University of Breslau, and was privately performed at that place on January 4, 1881. It is built for the most part upon themes of German students' songs. Further particulars regarding this overture will be found in Mr. Fuller Maitland's book 'Masters of German Music' (p. 48).

METRONOME.—(1) You do not state the examining body, but you probably refer to the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music. If so, inquire of the Secretary, 14, Hanover Square, London, W. (2) This is a free country, and any teacher may prepare a candidate for an examination without having passed an examination himself. The greatest musical geniuses the world has ever known have never passed examinations; they would probably pass them by, and get on by degrees without them.

TRIO.—The Philharmonic pitch from 1846 to 1896 in performance, with an average concert-room temperature, was A = 454 complete vibrations a second. In the latter year the Directors adopted a mean pitch of A = 439, the Paris standard being A = 435. The difference of these lower vibration numbers is equivalent to the rise of temperature in performance. Messrs. Broadwood, for convenience, use the A = 439 instead of the official standard.

J. M.—'The best method to train for the pianoforte, to the extent of playing any popular piece of dance music almost (why almost?) at first sight, and to master about six (why six?) classical pieces; and how to attain a nice touch, read well, strike chords, &c.?'—well, all this and more might be acquired by studying under a good teacher; but at your age you will need to practise diligently if you wish to succeed even moderately well.

B.—The difference between the action of the spinet and the pianoforte is briefly this—the single string of the spinet is plucked by a jack, a wooden upright in the mechanism, while the pianoforte string is set in vibration by a hammer. See 'The History of the Pianoforte' by Mr. A. J. Hipkins, a very informing book on an interesting subject.

REX.—An intelligent singer will certainly study his song from the rhetorical point of view of the words. Your questions show that you are on the 'intelligent' track, which is more than can be said of all those who claim to be of the vocal fraternity. Exaggeration, and a finicking striving after effect must, of course, be avoided.

P. D. G.—There are no musical bureaux in this country corresponding to those in the United States. Advertisements and agents are the only means of getting such an appointment as you desire; but you would need to be in the 'old country' in order to secure such a post, as they are quickly filled up.

R. T. B.—For books on Wagner's Operas see the following by Kobbé:—'Wagner's Life and Works,' Vol. I. (Biographical), Vol. II. (Analysis of the music-dramas) and 'Wagner's Ring,' each five shillings net; also 'The Epics of Sounds' (treating of the 'Ring') by Freda Winworth.

GLEN' GREY.—(1) Beethoven's Op. 96 is a sonata for pianoforte and violin, not for pianoforte solo: this has doubtless misled you. (2) 'The Pianoforte Sonata,' by Mr. J. S. Shedlock (published by Methuen & Co.), is a book that will give you much reliable information on Beethoven's sonatas and those by other composers.

H. F.—In addition to the pieces you name, the following works by Hugo Ulrich have been published: Symphony in G (No. 3), Sonata for pianoforte duet (Op. 5), and various pianoforte pieces (solo), Op. 3, 4, 13, 14, and 16, in addition to some vocal music.

ORGANUM.—The organ lofts of cathedrals are often so dark that it is very difficult to get a good photograph of the keyboards; but we will bear in mind your request in regard to the organ you name as soon as it comes into our series of illustrated articles on cathedrals.

S. B.—Write to the Secretary of the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, London, W., and the Registrar of the Royal College of Music, Prince Consort Road, Kensington, S.W., for the information you require in regard to open scholarships.

LOHENGRIIN.—(1) See Prout's 'Primer of Instrumentation.' (2) Your condition appears to be such as to call for the skill of a doctor of medicine rather than that of a doctor of music.

G.—Giovanni Morandi (1777-1856) was born at Pergola. He succeeded his father as Maestro di Cappella at Sinigaglia, and held that appointment up to the time of his death.

PUZZLED.—The 'harmony of the spears' is certainly vague. It may be explained as an abnormal flight of rhetoric, or as a machination of the printer. The 'armoury of the spears' would be more to the point.

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.—It would be quite correct to play a tenor solo on the organ at its exact pitch; but it may be expedient, by reason of poor quality of tone in that particular range, to play it an octave higher.

AFFLICTED.—You ask 'Can a curate be cured of singing vilely out of tune?' We give it up, with the hope that ere long your out-of-tuner may get a cure of his own.

R. R.—The article on 'Copyright' in Stainer and Barrett's 'Dictionary of Musical Terms' gives a lucid epitome of the law on the subject both here and in America.

ARPEGGIO.—The curved and the zig-zag lines placed in front of a chord are synonymous in indicating that the notes are to be spread in arpeggio fashion.

LOFE.—We cannot speak from personal experience of the system, but we hear it well spoken of by those qualified to form an opinion.

IGNORANT.—As you do not give the edition of the Bach piece, or the particular bar on 'page two,' we are sorry that we cannot enlighten you.

M.—Messrs. Novello will supply you, upon application, with a list of music composed for harp, pianoforte, and violin (trios).

ENTHUSIAST.—We believe that neither Leo Delibes, Adolphe Adam, nor Luigini has composed any chamber music.

ANTI-HUMBUG.—We cannot give a list of notable musicians who have been cremated. The number would be small.

W. B.—Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' is published by Messrs. Macmillan and Co., Ltd., price four guineas the four volumes.

CESTRIAN.—The Grieg pianoforte piece part of which is written on three staves is 'An den Frühling' (Op. 43, No. 6).

AND PRACTICE REGISTER

ARRANGED BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

PREFACE.

This book is intended to meet the convenience of Teachers who wish to record clearly for a pupil's guidance the work to be prepared for each lesson or a series. The column headed "Time" is added for the purpose of indicating the number of minutes to be given to the daily practice of each separate subject. (This column is for the Teacher to fill up.)

A few pages of music paper have been inserted for the purpose of writing out turns, trills, &c., and blank pages have been left at the end on which it is suggested that a list of pieces studied should be kept or other memoranda made. The book will be found suitable for students of any instrument.

Price Sixpence.

COMPOSED BY

REV. J. B. DYKES, MUS. DOC.

COLLECTED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

INCLUDING

MANY HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

The Rev. J. B. Dykes was well known to most people as a writer of beautiful hymn-tunes, but it will come as a surprise to some to find that he had written such a large number as this volume contains.

On looking through the book one is struck by the many tunes that are known and loved by all religious-minded persons—tunes so successfully wedded to the words, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get on without them. . . . They are "on the lips of thousands," and are associated with the most solemn moments of life. But because Dr. Dykes was happy in expressing emotions in a way that was intelligible to the masses, we must not overlook the real difficulty and merit of discovering a musical way to the hearts of men—for not every great composer has been successful with hymn-tunes.

The world is richer for Dr. Dykes's music, and his memory deserves to be loved and honoured by all those who, like himself, strive to follow in the footsteps of the Divine Master.

FROM GRIEG TO BRAHMS STUDIES OF SOME MODERN COMPOSERS AND THEIR ART

BY

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

In a series of essays on Grieg, Dvůřák, Saint-Saëns, Franck, Tschaiikowsky, and Brahms, Mr. Mason has undertaken to show how each man has brought to his work his own particular temperament and conception of his art, how each has contributed some special quality of expression or beauty to modern music. While the purpose of the book is thus chiefly biographical, the author has considered in an introductory essay, "The Appreciation of Music," and a concluding essay, "The meaning of Music," points of more general interest, such as the process by which music has developed and the place of the art among men's other activities.

Mr. Mason's method is indicated by a sentence in the preface:—"Music may be hard to understand, but musicians are men." So clearly is the human aspect of the subject presented throughout that the book will interest all music-lovers, whether or not they have a technical knowledge of the art. Each essay is accompanied by a portrait of the musician written of and a brief bibliography of those of his works which best illustrate the points touched on in the essay.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING
600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERSBY
ERNEST A. DICKS,Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO REVISED EDITION.

With this issue of the new edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music it is desired to direct attention to the additional papers which are printed for the first time in this form.

These are, the University of Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper required of all candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors.

These papers will be found most valuable and useful, and for the kind permission to make use of them the author desires to express his most sincere obligations to Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A.; Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc.; Edward J. Chadfield, Esq.; and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A.

A further reprint of the Handbook affords the opportunity of adding the papers set forth for the recent Mus. Doc. Examination at Victoria University, for the use of which the Author is indebted to the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS).

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

MY KINGDOM.

Angel of dreams, in hope's glad paradise—

Rose of the roses, star of all the skies.

Love of my life, till life and love are o'er,

Your heart to be my kingdom evermore:

THE GENTLE SHEPHERD.

Shepherd of the flock, with unchanging love,
Seek thy wandering sheep, weary though the way.
Lead them safely home, when afar they roam,
Fondly guard their rest at the close of day.

SUN OF MY SOUL.

Sun of my soul, Thou Saviour dear,
It is not night if Thou be near:

In Keys to suit all voices.

FOR BASS OR BARITONE

BY

JOSEPH H. ADAMS.

THE SPIRIT OF THE STORM

See, how the lightnings flash!

Hark how the thunder crashes!

Over the doomed barque the angry billow dashes!

Vainly for help men pray,

Cowering in wild dismay:

All hope is flown; they sadly own, the mighty deep I sway!

THE FIFTH STRING

(FIVE SHILLINGS)

BY

JOHN P. SOUSA

THE "BAND KING."

To-Day says: "Mr. Sousa's first fiction composition is hardly less stirring than his musical. Exceedingly ingenious. Contains some rare flashes of unexpected dry humour."

THE FIFTH STRING

(FIVE SHILLINGS)

BY

JOHN P. SOUSA.

Pall Mall Gazette says: "Distinctly a pretty and pleasant story."

THE FIFTH STRING

(FIVE SHILLINGS)

A MANUAL OF PLAINSONG

FOR DIVINE SERVICE

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES NOTED THE PSALTER NOTED

TO GREGORIAN TONES

TOGETHER WITH THE LITANY AND RESPONSES

A NEW EDITION

PREPARED BY

H. B. BRIGGS AND W. H. FRERE

UNDER THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCE OF

JOHN STAINER

(Late President of the Plain-song and Mediæval Music Society).

PREFACE.

THE first edition of The Psalter Noted was published in 1849 under the supervision of the late Rev. Thomas Helmore, and secured for the Gregorian Tones a general recognition of their appropriateness for Divine worship. Subsequently Mr. Helmore's scheme was enlarged by the issue of The Canticles Noted, of A Brief Directory, and of three Appendixes to the Psalter; and the whole collection was issued in one volume under the title of A Manual of Plain-song. The Manual had also two companion books, one of Words only, containing The Canticles and Psalter Accented, the other a collection of Accompanying Harmonies. Thus complete provision was made for the musical performance of the regular services of the Prayer Book. Practical objections, however, to the monotony of the recitation of several Psalms to one Tone without the relief of Antiphons, added to certain difficulties in the pointing, led to the issue of other Psalters which have competed with The Psalter Noted, but without obtaining, any of them, a marked supremacy; and nothing has been issued which covers the whole field so completely as Mr. Helmore's Manual.

Study of the art of Plain-song during the last half century has, however, undergone something like a revolution; on every branch of the question new light has been thrown, and not least upon the principles of pointing. In consequence of repeated demands for a new edition of the Manual, the work of revision was entrusted to the late Sir John Stainer. He readily undertook the task, and called into collaboration Mr. H. B. Briggs and the Rev. W. H. Frere, with the result that before his death he had passed for the press the greater part of the revised proofs prepared by them for the new edition. He had also devoted much time to the consideration, with Mr. Shebbeare, of the Organ Accompaniments, so that the complete work may be considered as his last contribution to the music of the English Church.

His was not the only loss that this book had to undergo in the course of revision, for on the eve of its completion, Mr. Briggs was suddenly called to his rest. So the foregoing words which he had written about Sir John Stainer have now become his own epitaph. Without competing with Sir John Stainer in the wider domain of Church Music he had, in the narrower department of Plain-song, an influence and a competence which were unrivalled; and whatever merits this book may have are due almost entirely to him.

The Manual thus appears in a New Edition, revised in accordance with modern standards of taste and science; it does not cover quite so large a field as formerly, for it contains no music for the Holy Communion; but it has the same counterparts as before in the shape of The Canticles and Psalter Accented, and The Accompanying Harmonies prepared by Mr. Shebbeare, which include accompaniments for the Responses, Te Deum and Litany, as well as for the Tones.

THE VILLAGE TUNE BOOK

CONTAINING

ONE HUNDRED POPULAR HYMN TUNES.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The one hundred hymn-tunes forming this collection have been selected from various sources, old and new. As the earliest can be traced to the year 1551, and the most recent was composed in 1901, they cover a period of three-and-a-half centuries.

In selecting these tunes, care has been taken to provide for all the metres in general use, and the index of first lines may be found useful as a guide to the selection of suitable tunes for particular hymns.

Clergymen and Organists of most Village Churches will find all they need in this collection, and thus be saved the trouble of searching through overlaid volumes; therefore, its practical utility, no less than its varied contents, will, it is hoped, render this book of one hundred hymn-tunes acceptable for use in Divine Service and also in the home circle.

GOUNOD'S CELEBRATED “FAUST” BALLET MUSIC

Important Announcement to Orchestral Conductors !

MESSRS. CHAPPELL AND CO., LTD., the Sole Proprietors of the Copyright of this important work for Great Britain and the Colonies, have the pleasure to announce that at considerable expense, they have now issued AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION DE LUXE (Concert Edition, size 12½ in. by 9½ in.) of this world-famed Ballet Music AT A PRICE THAT PLACES
IT WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL.

Hitherto this work was practically unobtainable owing to the prohibitive price at which the Original Edition was published.

Great care has been taken in the Editing. The work remains as originally scored, but all necessary cues have been added to facilitate performance by small orchestras, for which purpose a Pianoforte Accompaniment has been specially arranged to be used ad lib.

JOHN HARRISON (the New English Tenor)

(PUPIL OF MADAME AMY SHERWIN)

At the LONDON BALLAD CONCERTS, Saturday Afternoon,
March 7, 1903.

The Daily Telegraph says: "A remarkably successful first appearance at these concerts was achieved by Mr. John Harrison, a tenor vocalist hailing from Lancashire, who possesses an organ of genuinely agreeable quality and of adequate range. His renderings of Goring Thomas's 'O vision entrancing' and Balfe's 'Come into the garden, Maud,' were notable for fullness of expression and good phrasing, while the excellent style in which the songs were delivered assisted towards establishing the new-comer in high favour. He was warmly and deservedly applauded."

JOHN HARRISON.

The Standard says: "One of the notable successes of the afternoon was won by Mr. John Harrison, the tenor who is steadily making his way to the front rank of vocalists. Mr. Harrison puts a great amount of work into his singing without in the least resorting to undue force or exaggeration. He has attained the art of knowing his limitations, with the result that he never attempts a note beyond the compass of his natural voice."

JOHN HARRISON:

The Star says: "Another feature of interest was the second appearance of Mr. John Harrison, the new tenor, who made such a successful début recently. His success was again very marked. The sympathetic quality of his voice, his admirable production, his perfect enunciation, and his spontaneous expression seem to point to an exceptionally brilliant future. Songs like 'Come into the garden, Maud' and Adams's 'Nirvana' make no great demands on interpretative ability; it can only be said that his interpretations were quite artistic. He is to be heard in the summer at the Strauss Festival."

JOHN HARRISON.

The Daily Express says: "Mr. John Harrison is the possessor of a beautiful voice, which has changed from baritone into tenor. His success was emphatic. He achieved quite a triumph with his second song, 'Come into the garden, Maud.' His voice is beautifully clear, he sings naturally, and is undoubtedly a great acquisition to our list of tenors."

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY

(FOUNDED 1741).

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY offers TWO PRIZES, being the "Molineux Prize" of TEN POUNDS, with the Society's Medal, and the "Society's Prize" of FIVE POUNDS, for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS, in not less than four, nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two Treble Voices.

The character of the Composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative Part-Writing; not a mere Part-Song or harmonised Melody.

The following conditions must be complied with, viz. :—

1. That the Alto and Tenor parts be written in their respective clefs;
2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least;
3. That the intended "Tempo" be clearly indicated;
4. That the words, to be selected by the Composer, be written out in full on a fly-leaf at the beginning; and
5. That not more than one Composition be submitted by each competitor, which must not be in the Composer's autograph.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey, on or before October 1, 1903, each Composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the Composer's name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark.

The Award of the Judges will be made known at the meeting of the Society in December, 1903.

RECENT PRESS NOTICES.

HUDDERSFIELD CHORAL SOCIETY.

"HIAWATHA."—"Mr. Masters sang in good voice and method, and with telling effect, the solo 'He had seen, he said, a water.' He also gave admirable renderings of the solos conveying the departing messages of the 'Black-robed chief, the Prophet.'"—Huddersfield Weekly Herald, March 7, 1903.

"Mr. Samuel Masters sang the tenor solo music very correctly. He gave a very accurate, tasteful, and well-phrased interpretation of that exacting but beautiful song, 'Onaway! awake, beloved.'"—Huddersfield Examiner, March 7, 1903.

STAFFORD CHORAL UNION.

"JUDAS MACCÆÆUS."—"A feature of the concert was the singing of Mr. Samuel Masters, who was in splendid voice and surpassed all his previous triumphs. He sang the most difficult and florid passages with perfect ease, strict regard to time, and well-judged expression. The reception which followed his rendering of the beautiful air, 'How vain is man,' which, by the way, is usually omitted, was flattering in the extreme. Mr. Masters also gave 'Sound an alarm' in stirring style, and had encores been permitted he would certainly have had to respond."—Staffordshire Advertiser, April 4, 1903.

MR. S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S RECITAL.

"The famous solo from Hiawatha, 'Onaway! awake, beloved!' was sung by Mr. Samuel Masters. His pure, powerful, flexible tones were the admiration of all listeners, and twice was he loudly recalled. Later, Mr. Masters sang three exquisite songs, 'How shall I woo thee?' 'O, set the sails,' and 'The forest flowers are faded all.' The first and third of these are particularly pleasing, and Mr. Masters treated them with a delicacy, skill, and tact which showed him in fullest sympathy with the composer's muse."—Streatham News, February 7, 1903.

LEICESTER NEW MUSICAL SOCIETY.

"THE BRIDE OF DUNKERRON."—"Mr. Samuel Masters took the tenor parts in this cantata. The beautiful solo, 'The full moon is beaming above the blue deep,' he sang with great expression, and had to bow his acknowledgments to an encore. In the duet, 'Hark, those spirit voices,' in which Dunkerron and the Sea-Maiden declare their devotion to each other, he displayed great dramatic power, and sang with a spirit and vigour that did the fullest justice to this delightful number."—Leicester Daily Post, March 27, 1903.

THE "ECCLES" CONCERT.

BLACKBURN.—"Mr. Samuel Masters, tenor, possesses a splendid vocal organ, of good range, with a clear, full tone of splendid quality. His best contribution was 'Stars of the Summer Night' (Hatton). Also sang 'Lend me your aid' (Gounod) and 'Macgregor's Gathering' (Lee). Both songs gave Mr. Masters plenty of scope for his robust voice."—Blackburn Times, March 7, 1903.

"FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD."

MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM OF TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE.

"The most striking discovery of the present generation for practical musicians."—Musical News.

"Wonderful work is being done by Mr. Macdonald Smith in the application of his new system. . . . He is giving hundreds of lessons by with the very best results."—Musical Courier (New York).

"It is clear that Mr. Macdonald Smith has studied the subject carefully, and acts upon well-ascertained scientific grounds."—The Dai Telegraph.

"The great, the supreme merit of Mr. Smith's system consists in the fact that it involves the total abolition and disestablishment of all terrible scale-practising and five-finger exercising."—Westminster Gazette.

"May be distinctly regarded as a boon and a blessing to men."—The Referee.

"Mr. Macdonald Smith's system of training the fingers, hands, &c., for pianoforte playing is most excellent, and in every respect well worth the high fees charged for lessons."—Organist and Choirmaster.

"The excellence of his methods had been abundantly proved."—The Times.

THE SYSTEM EXPLAINED.

The correct translation to the keyboard of the pianoforte of the notes of written or printed music, together with the proper interpretation of the expression, presents an interesting and difficult problem to pianists, viz.:—What is the best means of acquiring that quickness of eye, brain, and muscles, requisite to the perfect rendering of pianoforte music?

In considering this problem, we are forced to a recognition of the fact that very much depends upon physical health and development. Perfection of eye, brain, and muscles are an exceptional occurrence, and, where non-existent, require to be developed by artificial means, since physical perfection and a healthy condition of the organs named are a sine qua non in the proper training of the musician. To achieve this desideratum is the aim of Macdonald Smith's system of Touch and Technique. Many ingenious attempts have been made to develop this perfection of action and control, and thereby to ensure freedom and rapidity of voluntary movement, but hitherto none has been completely successful. The problem remained to be solved by Macdonald Smith's discovery of the principle of "full-contraction," with what remarkable success is shown by the practical experience of hundreds of pianists of all ages and of every degree of proficiency.

The use of the exercises alone results in a most pronounced improvement in delicacy of touch, good loud tone-production, command of independent rhythm in the two hands, general rapidity, confidence, "grip," stretch of the hands, flexibility of the fingers and wrists, besides many other benefits.

There are other difficulties encountered by the pianist, depending upon purely mechanical considerations, which would still exist were the hands and arms formed of wood or iron, instead of bone and muscle. But these have been reduced to a science, and are met by "TECHNICAL RULES." The latter, which, combined with the "full-contraction" exercises, comprise the system of Touch and Technique, are indispensable for the easy and correct rendering of "skips," quickly-repeated movements, trills, and other technical difficulties of the keyboard.

The System affords the player invaluable assistance which is unattainable by any other means by even the most advanced student, and it is indispensable to beginner and proficient alike.

DEAR SIR,

THE NATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC tenders its apologies to you for having inadvertently placed your name on their Syllabus as a member of the Board of Examiners of the College. The mistake arose through confusing your name with that of Dr. Bennett, who is, in fact, a member of the Board, but whose name does not appear in the copies of the Syllabus in which your name is printed.

Yours faithfully,

YORK MINSTER.

If architecture is 'frozen music,' York Minster is a pæan in stone. It is the largest English Cathedral in regard to area and height of roof, in length only is it exceeded by Winchester. Though not occupying so splendid a position as Durham, the ancient walls of the city of York enable the visitor to go round about the towers of the stately Cathedral and gaze upon a scene that is pleasant to behold and rich in historical association. In this Eboracum, once the capital of the North, one recalls such events as the death of the Roman Emperor Severus in 211; the burning of the city by the Danes in 1069 (York has an unenviable notoriety for its conflagrations); the Parliament of Charles I. at which that unfortunate monarch professed his intention to govern legally; the siege of York during the Civil War, when the Corporation presented Fairfax with a butt of sack and a tun of French wine in gratitude for the good treatment he had meted out to the besieged citizens; and, coming to later and more peaceful times, the organization of the British Association in 1831. And then is not York the most ancient metropolitan See in England? Its Archbishop is allowed to style himself Primate of England, but his brother of Canterbury takes precedence in that he is Primate of all England. And who can fail to be impressed with the city's fine old gateways that happily have been preserved through all the long years of troublous times—for instance, Micklegate Bar and Monk Bar? These old-world entrances may appropriately lead us to the chief glory of York—its magnificent Minster.

It is difficult to imagine the architectural features of Edwin's Wooden Chapel, erected in 627 on the site of the present sanctuary, but they would doubtless furnish a strong study in contrasts were it possible to compare them with those of the Minster as we now know it. Buildings and rebuildings of successive churches cover a period of 847 years, the last addition having been the north-west tower, erected 1470-74. The beautiful Early English transepts, dating from early in the 13th century, form the oldest part of the Minster. The Nave was built between 1291-1345, and the graceful Chapter House is of the same period. The Choir—originally Norman, now Perpendicular—dates from 1373 to 1400. The stately lantern tower, the largest in England, belongs to the beginning of the 15th century. Its great height—216 feet—is better judged from the interior of the edifice, especially when the sun shines through its large windows. Loftiness is a general characteristic of the Minster, and the noble Gothic arches of the transepts once seen are never forgotten. The organ stands on a screen, not remarkable for beauty, at the entrance to the Choir.

If, in comparison with other English cathedrals, York strikes one as being somewhat cold, ample atonement is made by its exquisite glass. There are no less than 25,531 superficial feet of mediæval stained glass in the church—at least twice as much as in any other English cathedral, and probably more than in any other church in the world.

Moreover, it is almost all of a very high quality and of remarkable variety of effect. It ranges from the simplest and most beautiful designs to those of definite forms of glittering colours. The East window is a poem—an In Memoriam in glass, glowing with colours of fascinating hue. To sit in front of it in the solitude of the Lady Chapel, while some old unaccompanied anthem is being sung, is in the nature of a dream of loveliness and indescribable charm. This great East window, seventy-eight feet high and thirty-two feet wide, was glazed by one John Thornton, of Coventry, in the year 1405. The contract, still extant, provides that he is to 'complete it in three years, pourtray with his own hands the histories, images, and other things to be painted on the same. He is to provide glass and lead, and workmen, and receive four shillings per week, five pounds at the end of each year, and after the work is completed, ten pounds for his reward.' The Five Sisters window in the North Transept is, in the words of the Dean, 'an almost complete specimen of Early English glass, with an elaborate geometrical pattern formed by the conventional foliage of the planta benedicta; but at the foot of the central light there is a panel consisting of distinctly Norman glass, portraying Jacob's dream—or Daniel in the lion's den—for it is indistinct, and critics differ.' No account of the Minster would be complete without mention of the Chapter House, with its elegant vestibule, unique in the Cloisters of Europe. It is no wonder that the Dean regards this stately hall as 'the flower of our flowers.'

May we not now leave the 'frozen music' and refer to that music which melts the soul by the warm breath of its divine attribute? Let us take an old-world peep into the Minster at a time when the siege of York by the Parliamentary Army disturbed the even tenor—and for the matter of that, the soprano, alto and bass—of the ways of the inhabitants of the city for 'eleven weeks space.' There chanced to be in York during that bellicose period of the 17th century, worthy Thomas Mace, clerk of Trinity College, Cambridge, the author of 'Musick's Monument; or, A Remembrancer of the best Practical Musick, both Divine and Civil, that has ever been known to have been in the world.' In this work he records his experiences of congregational singing in York Minster during the aforesaid siege in the year 1644. Here are his words:—

By this occasion there were shut up within that city abundance of people of the best rank and quality, viz., lords, knights, and gentlemen of the countries round about, besides the soldiers and citizens, who all or most of them came constantly every Sunday to hear publick prayers and sermon in that spacious church.

And indeed their number was so exceeding great, that the church was, I may say, even cramming or squeezing full.

Now here you must take notice, that they had then a custom in that church, which I hear not in any other cathedral, which was, that always before the sermon the whole congregation sang a psalm, together with the quire and the organ: and you must also know, that there was then a most excellent, large, plump, lusty, full-speaking organ, which cost, as I am credibly informed, a thousand pounds.

This organ I say, when the psalm was set before the sermon, being let out into all its fullness of stops, together with the quire began the psalm.

But when that vast concurring unity of the whole congregational-chorus, came, as I may say, thundering in, even so as it made the very ground shake under us; Oh the unutterable ravishing soul's delight! in the which I was so transported and wrapt up in high contemplations, that there was no room left in my whole man, viz., body, soul and spirit, for any thing below divine and heavenly raptures: nor could there possibly be any thing on earth to which that very singing might be truly compared, except the right apprehensions or conceivings of that glorious and miraculous quire, recorded in the scriptures at the dedication of the temple, of which you may read in the 2 Chron. ch. 5, to the end; but more particularly eminent in the two last verses of that chapter, where king Solomon, the wisest of men, had congregated the most glorious quire that ever was known of in all the world: and at their singing of psalms, praises, or thanksgivings, the glory of the Lord came down amongst them, as there you may read.

And here is one thing most eminently remarkable, and well worth noting, which was, that in all the whole time of the siege there was not any one person, that I could hear of, did in the church receive the least harm by any of their devilish cannon shot; and I verily believe that there were constantly many more than a thousand persons at that service every Sunday during the whole time of that siege.

The York Musical Festivals deserve notice in connection with the history of the Minster. The first, held in 1791, lasted three days, when the sacred music, all by Handel, was performed in the Choir of the Minster. Ashley and Matthew Camidge, the latter a son of the then organist, conducted. It has been stated that these Festivals were held annually until 1803, but this statement is not borne out by the facts, so far as the Minster is concerned. The next great Festival, held in September, 1823, resulted in the publication of John Crosse's elaborate 'Account' of the same, issued in 1825. On that occasion the performers—180 instrumentalists and 285 vocalists—occupied a platform specially erected under the central tower. The scheme consisted of four sacred concerts in the Minster, and three secular concerts and two balls given in the Assembly Rooms. The receipts amounted to the substantial sum of £16,174 16s. 8d., and the profits (£7,200) were divided between the hospitals of York, Leeds, Sheffield, and Hull. Two incidents of this great music-making call for notice. Madame Catalani, the prima donna of the meeting, not only appropriated 'Comfort ye' and 'Ev'ry valley,' but sang them in D! 'Such a practice cannot be sufficiently reprobated,' said the Harmonicon, 'for if that distinguished singer could not perform it as Handel wrote it, some other person ought to have been selected for the purpose; Mr. Vaughan was present, and he would have done it justice.' At the second evening concert (September 25, 1823), Beethoven's C Minor Symphony headed the programme. Owing to the non-arrival from London of some additional string parts it was proposed to omit the Symphony and to proceed to the next number on the programme—'Charley is my darling.' When Miss Travis began to sing the Scotch ballad a general murmur of disapproval manifested itself among the audience, and, according to the late John Ella (a member of the band), 'one of the stewards, a grave-looking, bald-headed gentleman with a stentorian voice, lustily exclaimed: "Symphony. None of your darlings, we can hear them any day in Yorkshire; I insist upon the Symphony being played."' It was thereupon performed, although the players had to crowd around the desks in order to read their music. All honour to that protesting steward—Mr. F. Maude, Recorder of Doncaster. It is satisfactory to learn that 'every movement was listened to with attention and hailed with prolonged applause. The remaining

We may now pass on to Thomas Wanless (1691), the composer of the 'York Litany' and the compiler of a collection of words of anthems sung in the Cathedral. He is described in the Chapter books as 'in musicis expertum.' Dr. James Nares, appointed in 1734 at the age of nineteen, was the next organist of note. He being an excellent trainer of boys' voices, some of his anthems were written to display the vocal attainments of his juvenile pupils. Nares, who subsequently became organist of the Chapel Royal, published some Harpsichord Lessons, in the preface to which he attacked the 'fashionable passages which, though adopted by some of the ablest masters, he cannot help considering as Instances of false Taste which seems advancing too fast in all sorts of Music.' What would Dr. Nares have said to Wagner and Richard Strauss? He objected to the wanton and improper successions of half-notes—in other words, the chromatic scale!

The more than hundred years' reign of the Camidge family as chief musicians of York Minster began on January 31, 1756, when ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER FROM 1756 TO 1799.

(Reproduced and enlarged from a miniature painted on a snuff-box in the possession of his great-grandson, Mr. T. S. Camidge, and by his kind permission.)

Festivals were held in 1825, 1828 and 1835; on the last-named occasion the audiences included the Princess Victoria, who began her glorious reign two years later. For sixty-eight years the York Festivals have been in abeyance. Has not the time come for their revival? With so able a chief-musician as Mr. T. Tertius Noble, the present organist—and, may we add, a capable organizer—there should be every encouragement to promote a Festival that would redound to the honour of the Minster and the city of York.

The organists. As on former occasions, Mr. John E. West's handy volume 'Cathedral Organists' must be consulted in this connection. Three of the earliest recorded organists were named respectively John Thorne (died 1573), John Wyrnal, and Kirby (or Kirkby), and they all attained to the posthumous dignity of epitaphs. Here are the trio of monumental inscriptions:—

Here lyeth Thorne, musitian most perfitt in his art, In Logick's Lore who did excell; all vice who did apart: Whose Lief and Conversation did all men's Love allure, and now doth reign above the Skies in joys most firm and pure.

Musician and Logician both,
John Wyrnal lieth here;
Who made the organs erst to speak
As if, or as it were.

Here lie the ashes of Kirby, an excellent Chanter and incomparable Organist. He sang extraordinary songs to charming tunes. He was the boast, glory, and honour of this Church. Great were his probity, wisdom, and virtue; and his understanding, morality, and genius remarkable.

MATTHEW CAMIDGE.

ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER FROM 1799 TO 1842.

(From a painting in the possession of Mr. T. S. Camidge, and reproduced by his kind permission.)

John Camidge, who had been a chorister in the Minster, became organist. He held the post for forty-three years, and was the first to introduce Handel's choruses as anthems; they had hitherto been considered too secular for performance in churches. To John Camidge succeeded—on November 11, 1799—his son Matthew, said to have been the first cathedral organist to teach the choristers to sing from notes instead of by ear! Curiously enough, Matthew Camidge reigned for the same period as his father—forty-three years. He was followed by his son and assistant, Dr. John Camidge—appointed October 15, 1842—a masterly executant on the organ. Whilst playing the evening service on November 28, 1848, an attack of paralysis incapacitated him for active work; but his son, Mr. Thomas Simpson Camidge, discharged the duties for the remaining eleven years of Dr. Camidge's life—till 1859. Thus the Camidge régime—four generations—covered a period of 103 years. Moreover, at the recent organ opening (to be referred to presently), the Mr. Thomas S. Camidge just mentioned, but now a veteran, was present, as were his son, Mr. John Camidge, organist of Beverley Minster, and two grandsons—that is to say, there were present members of the fourth, fifth, and sixth generations of the Camidge family, all of them musicians, or musically disposed. This circumstance must surely be unique in the annals of church music. The late Dr. E. G. Monk—joint author with Ouseley of the well-known Psalter—was organist from 1859 to 1883, and for the next fourteen years the post was held by the late Dr. John Naylor.

DR. JOHN CAMIDGE,
ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER FROM 1842 TO 1859.

(From a painting in the possession of Mr. T. S. Camidge, and reproduced by his kind permission.)

The present organist is Mr. Thomas Tertius Noble, born at Bath, May 5, 1867. He gained an open scholarship at the Royal College of Music in 1886, and became a pupil of Sir Walter Parratt. His organ appointments are: All Saints', Colchester (1881), St. John's, Wilton Road, Pimlico (1889), assistant to Professor Stanford at Trinity College, Cambridge (1890), Ely Cathedral (1892), York Minster (1897). In addition to being an excellent performer on the organ, Mr. Noble is an all-round musician of high attainment and tremendous energy. His compositions include the music to the 'Wasps of Aristophanes' (Cambridge, 1897), a sacred cantata, 'Gloria Domini,' anthems, services, organ and violin music, songs, &c. He is the right man in the right place, and under his beneficent sway all the best traditions of music in York Minster are worthily maintained.

Lastly, the organs. The Fabrick Rolls of the Minster are among the earliest and most interesting documents of their class. As far back as 1399 there are references to organs, and in 1419 the following entries appear:—

For constructing two pairs of bellows for the organ	46s. 8d.
For constructing the ribs of the bellows of the same organ, by John Couper ..	12d.

In 1469 there was a payment—

To brother John for constructing two pair of bellows for the great organ, and repairing of the same	15s. 2d.
---	----------

Later on—in the year 1485—a curious entry reads thus:—

To John Hewe for repairing the organ at the altar of B.V.M. in the Cathedral Church, and for carrying the same to the House of the Minorite Brethren, and for bringing back the same to the Cathedral Church	13s. 9d.
--	----------

This is probably the earliest recorded instance of one church lending another its organ. In July, 1632, a fine of £1,000 was demanded from one Edward Paylor for a misdeed, and the Dean and Chapter successfully petitioned the King for the appropriation of that amount. They thereupon entered into an agreement with 'Robert Dallam, citizen and blacksmith (sic), of London, touchinge the makeinge of a great organ.' In May, 1633, King Charles visited York and directed that the new organ should be placed on the North side of the Choir opposite the Archbishop's Throne, in order that the view from West to East should not be obstructed. This was done, but in 1690 it was removed to the Choir screen. 'A most excellent, large, plump, lusty, full-speaking organ,' was the verdict of Thomas Mace upon the Dallam instrument; and a trio of military visitors to the Minster in 1634 have recorded in their diary the following opinion under the heading 'York,' of the music in the Minster: 'There we saw, and heard a faire large high Organ, newly built, richly gilt, carved and painted; and deep, and sweet snowy crew of Quiristers.'

Exactly one hundred years ago the Dallam organ was rebuilt by Green, and in 1823, John Ward, organ-builder of York, further repaired and enlarged the instrument. During the night of February 1, 1829, Jonathan Martin, a lunatic, set fire to the Choir of the Minster, with results most lamentable, including the destruction of the organ and the magnificent stall work. Martin attended the afternoon service on the day of his dire deed, and then and there determined to destroy the organ. He said: 'While I was at prayers that afternoon, I thought it was merely deceiving the people, that the organ made such a noise of buzz, buzz. Says I to myself, I'll have thee down to-night. Thou shalt buzz no more.' He thereupon secreted himself and carried out his destructive intent during the silent watches of the night. In this conflagration connection it may be interesting to recall that a short time previously thereto Vincent Novello had copied with his own hand, rather than wait the pleasure of a dilatory copyist, four of Purcell's anthems and the evening service in G minor, unique possessions of the Minster Library, and which perished in the flames. The Choir must have been in ruins when Mendelssohn visited York on July 23, 1829; his sketch-book contains a pencil-drawing of the Minster and its surroundings.

The organ erected after the fire was an imposing instrument, designed by Dr. Camidge and built by Elliott and Hill, and first used in May, 1832. The cost was almost entirely provided by the Earl of Scarborough, one of the Prebendaries, known as 'Black Jack' from the colour of his hunting coat. The scheme included a C C C manual compass and four 'double' stops of thirty-two feet on the pedal, the first 'thirty-two's' ever produced in this country. It was stated that the largest pedal-pipe would hold a glass of ale for every man, woman and child then residing within the walls of the city of York!

The wear-and-tear of daily use through long years wrought its inevitable effect upon the mechanism of this fine old instrument, and two years ago the Dean and Chapter had to 'face the music'—in other words to consider a thorough renovation which should, to all intents and purposes, be a new organ worthy of the edifice committed to their charge. Liberal-minded counsels prevailed, and a comprehensive scheme was prepared by Mr. Tertius Noble, with Sir Walter Parratt as referee, and the work was placed in the experienced hands of Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons, with results that have fully sustained the reputation of the firm as organ-builders of high rank.

Wednesday in Easter week (the 15th ult.) proved to be a red-letter day in the annals of York Minster, in that the renovated organ was solemnly dedicated to the service of the church. The music at Morning Prayer included Stanford in B flat (Te Deum and Jubilate) and Goss's anthem 'Stand up and bless the Lord your God,' sung by the Cathedral choir and accompanied on the temporary organ by Mr. Noble. Immediately after prayers of dedication had been said by the Dean, the chord of F minor reverberated throughout the vast pile. It came from the new organ controlled by the skilful hands of Sir Walter Parratt, and formed the initial sounds of Mozart's imposing Fantasia in F, minor, played, it need scarcely be said, in a manner eminently befitting the occasion, and the service was closed with the solemn dedication of the instrument by the Archbishop of York.

In the afternoon and evening Sir Walter Parratt gave two recitals, of which we append the programmes:—

native musicians. All the above pieces were interpreted with that artistry which is naturally associated with the technique and, we may add, reverent interpretations by the King's Master of Musick upon the king of instruments.

The new organ is entirely satisfactory. (We give a complete specification and photograph of the console on page 315.) The mechanism is above reproach, and the wind supply both ample and steady. In regard to tone, it is as it ought to be, a church organ, and not one of the concert-room type. Messrs. Walker have long been noted for their diapasons, and this most important characteristic

THE SPRINGTIDE OF MUSIC.

When Mythology, going backwards as it were to the dayspring of things, found that—under the parable of the Goddess springing fully-armed from the head of Jupiter—there were certain matters which in the origin could be understood less by much study than by a sort of natural instinct, music must surely have been of the very essence of that suggestion. Certain arts (there is no doubt about it) come, as one may say in Ionic speech, 'of themselves.' And since speech is the primary expression of intellect, it follows that the writing down of speech, if it is to be considered also among the early arts, takes its place in what may be ranked as the secondary education of the ancients. Thus it is that the Iliad has become the chief battle-ground between those who believe that the art of writing was known to Homer's generation and those who believe that Homer was a mere summary, made by poets of a later date, of the ballads which had accumulated in the celebration of the first greatly known war, outside biblical history, of modern civilization. In any case the composition of the ballad went first; and seeing that the ballads were chanted among the fields and in the vineyards of Greece, music, as we all know, must have existed more or less as the art of chant long before the art of writing began to be known. For music was a sort of anterior voice; it expressed emotions of a general kind; it was the vehicle of intimacies, sad, merry, or commonplace, without any reference to artistic or classified development. Thus it may be said that by degrees there came to be a sort of rivalry between speech and music, until they separated slowly into two distinct arts, each heavy with future possibilities. They separated gradually; and as friends that look back over the shoulder in parting; for there is no doubt whatever concerning the truth of the theory which maintains that rhythm—that is to say, verse, in highly-developed forms—was the predecessor of prose. Verse existed as in Homer, so in Hesiod, so too in Pindar, long before Herodotus wrote his exquisitely beautiful history.

From Herodotus one makes a natural passage to Thucydides, in whose person the art of prose, so far as the Greek nation was concerned, came to its climacteric. One can but trust that this historically suggestive parable will account to some extent for the suggestions which I now propose to make concerning the development of music, not right down to its later sources, but down to the point when those latest sources began to put on the full pride of their modernity. Music, of course, has had its period of barbarism—shall one say its Cave period, when it was looked upon as the means of emotional expression in the rough, when no laws governed it, when it was merely the outcome of an individual scene in early comedy or early tragedy—when in fact it had no binding or loosing, when to it were not entrusted those keys which belong to every —the true organ tone—is a commendable feature of the York Minster organ. It may be said that this instrument lacks the glamour of some others similarly placed. So much the better for the purposes for which it is intended. Reeds on heavy pressures of wind, diapasons of gamba quality, meretricious fancy stops, and mere noise in the 'full organ,' detract from the dignity of the instrument as an aid to devotion. The organ opened the other day by Sir Walter Parratt is one upon which the builders, the Dean and Chapter of York, and their excellent organist may be heartily congratulated.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

fulfilled art—the keys of the kingdom either of Hell or of Heaven?

In other words music has had a spring of its own; a spring like that of literature, to which I have already referred; a spring gay, fresh, and like the sweetest morning of all the springs that the world had ever seen. Sudden, unexpected, and yet the fulfilment seemingly of a natural law, the leaves and the young flowers of the early buds of our Western music came upon us with a quickness that might have seemed almost unnatural save for the summer development which has come since. The long-separated companion of the ballad had come back from her wanderings. Out of the deadness of winter there seemed to come the cry: 'The rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land.' The preparations, like the sap in the trees, had been made in secret; Plain-Song, followed by those natural developments that led to the complex music of Palestrina, had done its best in the way of preparation, and out of a congeries of scales (which included, by-the-way, as details, the major and minor scales which we use at the present day) there issued a body of musicians who, taking the tide at the flood, inaugurated in full spring weather that future which is only at this moment being passed on to another future by the great musicians of recent times. For it is impossible not to think that the present time contains the making of a true and complete summer of music, now that the day is over of the nonentities who in the early part of last century held fashionable sway in Opera House and in Concert Room. Yet the modern musician takes his opportunity from those spring-tide writers who, awakening to the warmth and the beauty of art, contributed to its fulfilment, even as the young primroses by their own perfect beauty, though forerunning the prouder blossoms of summertime, contain in their promise and in their own symmetry the fulfilment of the time which gave them birth.

Take a man like Stradella. With scarcely an artistic ancestor, his being clamoured for expression through the pipes of Pan; whatever should come to him came as it were with music resounding in his ears; and he was wise enough to learn all that he might of the technique of his art before he fell a victim to the common assassin. Corelli, too, a musician of this springtime of the West, peered into futurity rather than assumed the position of one who considered that his lifetime had been an absolute fulfilment; his beautiful work indeed was there to proclaim how completely he had assimilated every law and every teaching of the past; but one cannot help but think that it—such is the inexorable law—is just a trifle pathetic to find how that with all his knowledge, with all his study, with all his genius, his leaf was still of the spring and not of the summer after which he had dreamed. Nor can aught else be said of that distinguished harbinger of modern times, Christopher Gluck. Gluck, true, was a reformer: was one who emphatically understood the essence of dramatic art so far as it applied to music. His study of the Greek drama had straitly shown him to a large extent how opera might be written which should not only possess beauty of musical expression, but should also make for dramatic verisimilitude. But despite all theory, the truth remains that Gluck did not contrive to evade the melodic spirit of his time; magnificent as his musical inspiration was, confident and perfectly true as was his dramatic theory, it nevertheless remains an absolute fact that in accomplishment, though his work is exquisitely beautiful, it in reality contained far less of the spirit of futurity than might have been expected from the man's musical or dramatic attitude. Gluck indeed seems to me to be quite the last so far as our present reckoning goes of the spring musicians. Mozart led the way into the summer; Beethoven set the trees calling with the note of birds; Wagner drove his wain through the fields for the harvest, and, as one may think, to-day is the time of full fruitage and of ripe corn. But it will need a resurrection to bring us back to the days of the musical spring when composers had not learnt the necessity (and mind you, now, but not in their time, a most stern necessity) of avoiding an unused simplicity.

The sifting of that which is really important in musical art from that which is utterly ephemeral, and of the earth earthy, is a task which I for my part would not care to undertake; but it is a matter of interest to observe that later times, by reason of their accumulations of mere material, have distinctly lowered the average of the earlier days which saw the rise of music in its springtime. In the old days no man would dream of perpetuating a musical air unless it were of definite and genuine value; means were not at his disposal so to do. At the present time, as it would seem, a man has only to conceive a melody of the utmost unimportance and it is in his power to burden the public with it, too often to the utter disadvantage of those who care about musical phrase and musical thought. This is only an enforcement of the parable. One is perfectly convinced of the privileges which are entailed in knowing, appreciating, and enjoying the works of the later masters in musical art. Nevertheless, it is impossible not to feel a certain lingering envy for those who heard music that was composed only by enthusiasts, that was played only by the gentle artist, and that was circulated among those to whom music was a sacred name requiring sacred treatment. Have I wandered from the idea of a musical spring? I think not. These early inspirations were surely the daffodils of music; they came before the swallow dared, and they took the winds of March with beauty. The dew of the day-spring was upon this work: and though spring is the Angel of summer, it is of itself complete in beauty. Often have I seen orchids of most elaborately trained groups, perfect in their own symmetry and most curious in their own complexity; they are exceedingly beautiful, and one has certain moods in which they represent as it were symbolically the complicated thoughts and emotions of modern times. Yet in another mood it may be that 'the meanest flower that grows' inspires more native and more intimate thoughts. So do I find the difference between our great modern giants and my musicians of the springtide; and for the moment I am rather for Edmund Spenser's 'clean cut fields and flowery banks' than for the gilded barque of Cleopatra. Civilization and ethical development are curious matters, and I fear that it is still possible for the modern man now and then to lament modern complexity in the reminiscence of historical simplicity. Yet to-morrow there will certainly be another change; and he who out-vies our present modernity itself will be thrice welcome in our midst, and will be set off as an easy foil not only against those simple-minded men who crowded the days of Western music in its springtime, but also against the men of mighty scores whom we honour to-day because they seem to do for us the work of pioneers. So every spring turns to summer; and so even in the wild fields the harebell yields to the clover. And the centre of all speculation is found to have but a relative quality, when it is finally justified.

VERNON BLACKBURN.

WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT

(1816—1875).

Have not the conditions of modern life—in its unrest, its complexity—made their way into our music? Even the intellectuality of the age engenders artificiality. And does not mechanical invention—the strident pianoforte, or full-blown organ, to wit—play its part in the general trend of this up-to-date domination? There is only one answer to these questions, and it may be received in silence for all the good a protest, or even a warning, may do. But just as the weary wayfarer in a busy city finds refreshment in the tranquillity of some fair scene, so may we, at this springtide of the year, when nature is assuming her 'radiant loveliness,' turn to an English master whose music charms by its gentle grace, its refreshing influence, and natural beauty.

William Sterndale Bennett was born on April 13, 1816, at Sheffield. The exact location of the house in which he first saw the light has very nearly been determined through the patient investigations of Mr. W. T. Freemantle, of Rotherham, who has traced it down to one of two habitations. In so doing he has proved that 8, Norfolk Row, as given in more than one biography, is not the birth-house. Sterndale Bennett—so named after his father's friend, William Sterndale, a versifier of Sheffield—came of a musical stock. His grandfather, John Bennett (born at Ashford, Derbyshire, in 1750), became a Lay Clerk of King's, St. John's, and Trinity Colleges, Cambridge, and the devoted guardian of his gifted grandson. His father, Robert Bennett, was organist of Sheffield Parish Church from 1811 till his death in 1819. This Robert Bennett, a pupil of Dr. Clarke-Whitfield, was a musician of repute in Sheffield, and on April 13, 1812—exactly four years before his gifted son was born—he gave a concert in the Assembly Rooms, at which tea and a ball were 'thrown in' to the purchasers of tickets. Sterndale was a babe of two when his mother died. His father soon afterwards married again, but in a few months he also died, at the age of thirty-three. The stepmother took little interest in the Bennett bairns, and in December, 1819, a month after his father's death, the four-year-old boy was taken to Cambridge to be lovingly nurtured by his kindhearted grandfather. The child was not baptized until after he had arrived at Cambridge: the ceremony took place on March 19, 1820, at St. Edward's church. On February 17, 1824, Master Bennett, then nearly nine years old, became a chorister of King's College, Cambridge.

The organist of King's, John Pratt, did not long retain the services of the little chorister. It so happened that the Rev. F. Hamilton, chaplain to Lord Melbourne and superintendent of the Royal Academy of Music—not to be confused with the Principal of that Institution—paid a visit to Cambridge and heard the boy play, in other words he discovered young Bennett. The Academy had then been in existence only three years, and the foresight of the Reverend gentleman who watched over its domestic interests—for it was then a resident school of music—is in the highest degree commendable. The boy, aged ten, entered the 'old place' in Tenterden Street in March, 1826, and remained a student there till June, 1836, a period of ten years. According to his grandfather's wish he took the violin as his principal study, his teachers being Oury and Spagnoletti. His theory professors were first Charles Lucas, and afterwards Cipriani Potter and Dr. Crotch, all of whom, including their genius pupil, were at one time or another Principals of the Institution. He took the pianoforte as a second study under W. H. Holmes, but his lovely touch—we sigh for it nowadays—soon pointed the way to devoting his chief attention to the keyboard instrument. His fellow-students remembered him as an amiable and affectionate boy who endeared himself to everyone with whom he came into contact. Of a quiet disposition, his remarks on music, even at that early age, were original and worthy of note. To the lasting honour of the Academy, Sterndale Bennett was admitted a free student.

During the earliest years of his studentship he seems to have been rather a dilatory youth. (One wonders how, when and where he obtained his general education!) He doubtless joined in the boyish pranks indulged in by those young gentlemen at Tenterden Street. From Mr. Corder's entertaining 'History' of the Academy we learn that: 'The students had an equal allowance of candles served out every Saturday, the same in summer as in winter. Consequently in the summer they accumulated a stock which the prudent found means of selling, while the more reckless used them as missiles wherewith to assail dogs, cats, or even human passers-by in Tenterden Street. Oh, they were nice boys in those days! When "the Reverend" was out of the way they used to go to the front windows with all the trombones and "loud bassoons" they could get hold of and hold a Dutch Concert for the edification of the Oriental Club opposite; and when the long-suffering members sent over to complain, these lads would sit idle till the return of the Superintendent and meekly remark that "it was very hard they couldn't be allowed to practise."'

Candles or no candles, this bright young light placed under 'the Reverend's' care must have found time to practise, in that he was sufficiently advanced to play the solo part in a Pianoforte concerto by Dussek at a students' concert given in the Hanover Square Rooms, September 6, 1828. A composition—a Fairy chorus—belongs to this year: it is scored for drums, flutes, oboes, horns and strings, this being the order in which the instruments are set down in the autograph.

He does not seem to have given up his singing, as we find Masters Phillips and Bennett taking the soprano part in glees at a meeting of The Harmonists, held at London Tavern, in December 1829. The Spectator, in a notice of the event, said: 'Seldom have we heard more correct intonation and more finished expression than their singing discovered,' this specific reference being to the two boys. He sometimes sang in the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral, during the organistship of 'dear old Attwood,' but his only appearance in opera was not altogether a success. He was cast for the part of Cherubino in Mozart's 'Nozze di Figaro,' performed by the Academy students at the King's Theatre, December 11, 1830—he was then fourteen. The Harmonicon, in recording the representation, mercifully withheld the little fellow's name, but it appeared in the word-book and in the newspaper advertisements. This is the severe verdict of the Harmonicon :—

Cherubino, presented by a little boy, was in every way a blot in the piece. Had the memory of the audience not supplied the deficiency, the dramatic effect of the opera must have been utterly demolished.

This adverse criticism of his histrionic-vocal powers by no means deterred him from his true vocation—that of a composer. It may be convenient, as showing his remarkable productivity, to summarize his creative output between the years 1832 and 1835, aged sixteen to twenty :—

- 1832. 1st and 2nd Symphonies, 1st Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, and 'Tempest' Overture.
- 1833. Overture in D minor, and 2nd Pianoforte Concerto in E flat.
- 1834. Overture 'Merry Wives of Windsor,' and 3rd Pianoforte Concerto in C minor.
- 1835. 'Parisina' Overture, Symphony in G minor, and Sestet, for pianoforte and strings.

The records of the Royal Academy of Music contain, under date November 15, 1832, the following Minute :—

Bennett, having applied to the Rev. Mr. Hamilton for the assistance of some of the Pupils at a Concert to be given on the 28th November, at Cambridge, he has in consideration of Bennett being a very deserving student of the Institution, granted such permission.

This concert of the clever youth was duly given in the Town Hall, Cambridge, 'by permission of the Right Worshipful the Vice-Chancellor and the Worshipful the Mayor,' and with 'the sanction of the Noble the Directors of the Royal Academy of Music.' A Cambridge newspaper, in a notice of 'Master W. S. Bennett's Miscellaneous Concert,' said :—

It must have been very gratifying to Master Bennett to find his Concert attended by so numerous and respectable an audience; and we trust that the receipts will prove that his merits have not been neglected. . . . The Concerto composed by Master Bennett, and so admirably performed by him, evinced all that genuine talent we had been led to expect; and we think that the audience must have been highly pleased with the very spirited and accurate manner in which all the pieces were performed.

The fame of young Bennett began to spread in London. The programme of the Academy concert—Hanover Square Rooms, March 30, 1833—included—

Concerto (MS.) Grand Piano-Forte, composed and played by Master Bennett,
Pupil of Mr. Potter Bennett

The Harmonicon, in its criticism of the concert, was no less cordial than prophetic. Here it is :

. . . . but the most complete and gratifying performance was that of young Bennett, whose composition would have conferred honour on any established master, and his execution of it was really surprising, not merely for its correctness and brilliancy, but for the feeling he manifested, which, if he proceed as he has begun, must in a few years place him very high in his profession.

To the further honour of the Royal Academy of Music, the Committee of Management published this Concerto at the expense (£10) of the Institution, according to the following Minute :—

April 4, 1833.—Lord Burghersh has directed Mr. Hamilton to inform Master Bennett that the Committee propose publishing the Concerto he composed and performed with so much credit to himself and to the Institution, at the Expense of the Academy.

The sequel to the production of this Opus 1 proved to be exceedingly interesting and far-reaching in its results. The Concerto was repeated at the Academy Prize Concert in June of the same year. According to Mr. Arthur O'Leary,* there chanced to be present on that occasion Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy. 'When the young performer appeared in his Academy uniform,' says Mr. O'Leary, 'Mendelssohn rose from his seat in order to have a good look at him. He was much struck by the promise displayed in the composition, and singled out that slow movement for special commendation. He invited the youthful writer to Germany, and in reply to Bennett's modest rejoinder, said, "No; not as a pupil, but as a friend."' Thus began a life-long friendship.

At the Royal Musical Festival held in Westminster Abbey in 1834, the name of W. S. Bennett appeared among the viola players. On the same occasion H. Smart, then of Blackburn, was an alto chorus-singer, and Mr. Hullah lent his vocal aid to the basses of the choir, which included three members of the Novello family and one Macfarren (doubtless Sir George), all basses. In the same year (1834) Bennett became organist of Wandsworth Church. The Society of British Musicians, founded in 1834, but now almost forgotten, rendered splendid service to young musicians in bringing forward their orchestral works. Bennett was the bright particular star in that firmament of native talent, and the Society produced his 'Merry Wives of Windsor' and 'Parisina' overtures (the latter twice scored by him), his third Symphony and other works. Thus it will be seen that the British composer was quite as much looked after and encouraged seventy years ago as he is now, if not indeed a great deal more than in the present day. Bennett made his first appearance at the Philharmonic Society's concerts on May 11, 1835, when he played his Pianoforte Concerto in E flat. 'It was very flattering,' records a contemporary notice, 'to so young a musician to be placed in so honourable a situation . . . and the directors are entitled to the praise of discrimination for the selection they made.'

The year 1836 was one of the most eventful in the life of the young musician. Mendelssohn's invitation to visit Germany will be remembered. The Lower Rhine Music Festival was about to be held, at which 'St. Paul' was to be produced. 'What a pity,' remarked a professor of the first rank, 'that young Bennett's finances will not allow of his being present at the approaching festival at Düsseldorf.' 'Don't let the expense be an obstacle to his improving himself by such an excursion,' remarked the then head of the firm of Broadwood, 'I shall be happy to bear the whole of it, and to enable the young genius to remain in Germany as long as he may wish.' So kind and spontaneous an offer was not to be lightly regarded. Mr. Broadwood's generous aid was gratefully accepted, and in company with his friends Carl Klingemann and James William Davison, young Bennett—just turned twenty, light-hearted and free from care and in the flush of his early manhood—started on a trip that proved to be of untold enjoyment to him, and a further development of his artistic career. The journey up the Rhine suggested the overture 'The Naiades'—an inspiration as lovely as the environment which called it forth. The trio of travellers from London seem to have had a good time at that Düsseldorf Festival; Klingemann refers to the performance of 'St. Paul' as 'a great musical field-day, full of soul and song.'

Bennett must have made a good impression on Mendelssohn. The composer of 'St. Paul' wrote a long letter about the Festival to his friend Thomas Attwood, of which, through the kindness of Professor Case, we give the portion relating to the English composer. The letter, written in English, begins about Bennett, which shows that he was uppermost in Mendelssohn's mind in spite of the distractions of the Festival:—

MY DEAR SIR,—I avail myself of Mr. Bennett's departure for London to send you these lines, and to tell you how grateful I am to you for having procured me his acquaintance. I know it is owing to your advice that he went to visit the Festival, and therefore it is to you I ought to address my thanks for all the pleasure he gave me by his compositions and his playing. I think him the most promising young musician I know, not only in your country, but also here, and I am convinced if he does not become a very great musician it is not God's will, but his own. His Concerto and Symphony are so well written, the thoughts so well developed and so natural, that I was highly gratified when I looked over them yesterday; but when he played this morning his six studies and the sketches I was quite delighted, and so were all my musical friends who heard him. He told me that you wanted him to stay for some time on the Continent, and with me; I really do think it impossible to give him—advanced as he is in his art—any advice which he was not able to give to himself as well, and I am sure if he goes on the same way as he did till now, without losing his modesty and his zeal, he will always be perfectly right, and develop his talents as his friends and all the friends of music may desire; if, however, he should like to live on the Continent for a while, and if he should stay at Leipzig, I need not say that I should feel most happy to spend some time with such a musician as he is, and that at all events I shall always consider it as my duty to do everything in my power to assist him in his musical projects, and in the course of his career, which promises to be a happy and blissful one. Have once more my thanks for the treat, which I owe to your urging him to visit this country, and I only hope that it might have given him also some pleasure to assist to the Festival here. . . .

Your true friend,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN.

Düsseldorf, 28th of May, 1836.

On his return to London Bennett left (in June, 1836) the Royal Academy of Music, of which he had been a student ten years. An interesting side-light on those early days of the Academy is recorded by his fellow student, the late Mr. Henry C. Lunn, in THE MUSICAL TIMES of March, 1875. It merits quotation:—

* 'Sir William Sterndale Bennett: a brief review of his Life and Works.' Musical Association Proceedings, viii., 123. A very valuable paper, contributed by Mr. Arthur O'Leary on the career of his master.

* See a most interesting account of this Festival contributed by Carl Klingemann to the Musical World of June 17, 1836.

At this time there were evening orchestral rehearsals at the Academy, which were directed by Sterndale Bennett. Here the students were trained to the contemplation of good music; and never would the young conductor, I well recollect, allow any pupil to remain in ignorance of the composition being performed. 'Listen,' he said to me, on the first evening of my entrance; 'this is a Symphony by Beethoven; try to comprehend the symmetrical construction of the work, and carry away as much as you can with you to think upon afterwards.'

The Broadwood generosity was not exhausted by the Düsseldorf trip, as in October of the same year Bennett again visited Germany, Leipzig being his destination. Here Mendelssohn received him with open arms, and introduced him to Schumann. Temperamentally very different, these two musicians—Mendelssohn and Schumann—fell in love with the young Englishman. The references to Bennett in the letters of Schumann are no less charming than Mendelssohn's letter already quoted. To his sister-in-law, Schumann writes (Leipzig, November 15, 1836):—'There is a young Englishman here whom we meet every day, William Bennett—a thorough Englishman, a glorious artist, and a beautiful and poetical soul.' In another letter he refers to him as 'a perfect angel of a composer.' Again: 'Mind you send me back Bennett's letter. Bennett is a rascal, and does not write to a soul. I should not have thought it of him.' 'You will delight in him' writes Schumann to another correspondent, and so on. But this was not all. Schumann publicly proclaimed his opinion of and belief in Bennett as a composer of high rank in the articles he wrote in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, the journal which he (Schumann) founded and edited. Here is a specimen—one of several similar 'appreciations':—

WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT.

After much thought as to what we could best present to our readers at the beginning of the year 1837, nothing better struck us than the idea of placing before them (with many good wishes besides) a very delightful individuality. It is not a Beethovenian one, drawing years of strife after it, no Berlioz, preaching revolution with heroic voice, and spreading destruction and fear around, but rather a gentle, quiet spirit, that labours on high, no matter how storms gather below him, like an observer of the stars, following their course and remarking the nature of their peculiarities. His name may be found above; as his fatherland is that of Shakespeare, his Christian name is that of the poet. Are the arts of poesy and tone so foreign to each other that the famous land which has already given us Shakespeare and Byron cannot bring forth a great musician? An old prejudice already begins to waver by means of the names of Field, Onslow, Potter, Bishop and others; much more will be done towards abolishing it by this artist, whose very cradle was watched by a kind Providence.

Schumann, after referring to his friend's Three Musical Sketches (The Lake, the Millstream, and the Fountain), which he calls 'most lovely pictures,' concludes his article in the following genial strain:—

I should like to tell my readers a great deal more about him; for these are only short poems compared to Bennett's greater works,—six symphonies, three pianoforte concertos, overtures to 'Parisina,' the 'Naiades,' &c.—and how he plays all Mozart's operas at the piano until we fancy we see the living master before us. But I cannot drive him away; he peeps over my shoulder, and twice has asked me, 'Now, what are you writing?'—'My dear friend, if you only knew!'

Sir Alexander Mackenzie sends us the first of his promised letters, giving an account of his Canadian experiences as conductor of the Cycle of Musical Festivals in the Dominion. This letter—received while these pages are passing through the press—will be found on page 317. Sir Alexander received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Trinity University, Toronto, on the 11th ult. Congratulations to the University and to the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music.

To the good work done for the art of music out of London we have often called attention. It is really quite surprising to find not only earnest endeavour, but to hear of results that call for unstinted commendation. So at York. Attempts to form a local orchestra in that city had failed; but when Mr. Tertius Noble was appointed organist to the Minster in 1898, he at once founded the York Symphony Orchestra, and it is now in a flourishing condition. At the first concert (given in April, 1899) nothing more exacting than a Haydn symphony was performed. Then followed the 'Reformation,' 'Unfinished,' and 'Jupiter' Symphonies, in addition to the 'Hebrides' and 'Britannia' Overtures, Suites, &c. Here is the list of orchestral pieces played at the last concert:—

Overture, Rosamunde	Schubert.
Suite for Strings	Purcell.
Overture, Figaro	Mozart.
Nutcracker Suite	Tschaikovsky.
Introduction to 3rd Act of Lohengrin	Wagner.
Overture, William Tell	Rossini.
Coronation March	Meyerbeer.

The history of the 'Y.S.O.' may be told in Mr. Noble's own words: 'We began with about thirty members and have grown to half-a-hundred. In the early days the "reading" power of the band was very bad, but now we are able to take a new overture and really do it quite well "at sight." I must add that I am most loyally supported by some of our best local professionals, who attend the rehearsals and give their services at the concerts. I must specially mention Miss Knocker, the leader of the band and a pupil of Joachim, also five members of the Groves family, well known in York for many years as being keen supporters of music. I have a lady in the orchestra who four years ago asked me what instrument she should take up. I suggested the bassoon! She bought one and has now become so efficient a performer that she is able to play the second bassoon parts at all the concerts. I am also encouraging old choir boys to take up instruments. We cleared about one shilling on the first two concerts, and have lost sums from £2 to £12 on the last four; but I have kind friends who are keen in supporting my efforts, so round goes the hat and into it fall the golden boys! At our last concert—held in the Exhibition—we opened the back of the huge room to working men at a charge of one penny for admission, including a programme. We had 1,000 chairs ready for them—500 sons of toil came and went away full of joy. At the approaching concert—on May 5—we shall have a great many more.' This plain, unvarnished tale speaks for itself and volumes for the musicianship and magnetic influence of Mr. Noble and the enthusiasm he imparts to his zealous players. A man of broad-minded views, he takes pains to make his programmes interesting to a general audience, without lowering his artistic standard. There is a great deal in this, as there is in the personality of a conductor like Mr. Noble. While we have much pleasure in instancing the doings of the Yorkists as another factor in the spread of music in this country, we wish them well and trust others may be encouraged to follow their good example.

Mr. H. G. Wells, who has contributed so much to the gaiety and alarm of nations by his anticipations of the drift of things, is giving in the Fortnightly Review his views on 'Mankind in the Making.' In the April number he deals with school education, and indulges in a diatribe against pianoforte instruction in the school. He says:—

The eighteenth-century young lady was taught dancing, deportment, several instruments of music, how to pretend to sketch, how to pretend to know Italian, and so on. The dancing still survives,—a comical mitigation of high school austerities—and there is also a considerable interruption of school work achieved by the music master. If there is one thing that I would say with certainty has no business whatever in schools, it is piano teaching. The elementary justification of the school is its organization for class teaching and work in unison, and there is probably no subject of instruction that requires individual tuition quite so imperatively as piano playing; there is no subject so disadvantageously introduced where children are gathered together. But to every preparatory and girls' school in England—I do not know if the same thing happens in America—the music master comes once or twice a week, and with a fine disregard of the elementary necessities of teaching, children are called one by one, out of whatever class they happen to be attending, to have their music lesson. Either the whole of the rest of the class must mark time at some unnecessary exercise until the missing member returns, or one child must miss some stage, some explanation that will involve a weakness, a lameness for the rest of the course of instruction. . . . Not only is the actual music lesson a nuisance in this way, but all day the school air is loaded with the oppressing tinkling of racked and rackety pianos. Nothing, I think, could be more indicative of the real value the English school proprietor sets on school teaching than this easy admission of the music master to hack and riddle the curriculum into disconnected rags.

Mr. Wells would have all teaching of the pianoforte relegated to the 'private home province.' No doubt there is much to be said for this arrangement so far as regards day schools, but in the boarding schools there is no escape from the toils unless indeed the study of pianoforte playing is entirely abandoned. But the disturbance of ordinary class work occasioned by pianoforte lessons is really not so general as Mr. Wells would have us believe. In many schools, and more particularly in high schools for girls, the pianoforte lessons are given at times when no other class lessons are being given. Mr. Wells becomes more interesting and practical when he says:—

But it is probable that a different sort of music-teaching altogether—a teaching that would aim, not at instrumentalisation, but at intelligent appreciation—might find a place in a complete educational scheme. The general ignorance that pervades, and in part inspires these papers, does, in the matter of music, become special, profound, and distinguished. It seems to me, however, that what the cultivated man or woman requires is the ability to read a score intelligently rather than to play it—to distinguish the threads, the values, of a musical composition, to have a quickened ear rather than a disciplined hand.

These very sensible remarks lead us to wonder why Mr. Wells ignores the singing classes that are at work in tens of thousands of schools. In these classes much of what Mr. Wells pleads for is being daily accomplished—the great anticipator in fact is anticipated. There is no better training for the ear than a systematic course of sight-singing. More good listeners are made in this way than by any other mode of studying music.

The world was less merry last year by reason of the fact that Mr. Bosville, of Bridlington Festival fame, was High Sheriff of his county. The important duties of that office were doubtless of the 'no joke' order, but now that they have been satisfactorily discharged, Mr. Bosville is free to resume the conductorship of his interesting music-makings, and to provide 'lots of fun' in his analytical programme notes. The Bridlington Festival was announced to take place on the 28th ult., too late in the month for notice in the present issue; but with a due consideration for the enlightenment, not to say the humour, of his patrons, the versatile Squire issues his programme-book in advance, a copy of which he has, according to his usual custom, been kind enough to send us. The book is as full of plums as a Christmas pudding and the flavour is of the most delicious kind. We extract three as samples. The first refers to Mr. Arthur Hervey's Overture 'Youth,' so successfully performed at the Norwich Festival and at a recent Philharmonic Concert. Mr. Bosville tells us that:—

The overture 'Youth' is certainly descriptive music with a story, but it is quite a nice story. It is much too clean and healthy to suggest a 'problem.' So one can safely recommend this 'youth' as a well-washed, nice-minded boy who was not doomed to an early demise through praternatural smugghiness; one who was alternately the pride and terror of his maiden aunts, and one for whom the pedagogic schoolmaster would prophesy a bad end, drawing his unwarranted conclusions solely from a traditional antipathy to catapults, livecockchafers, and chocolate cigarettes. But there is no real harm in the boy. The sun shines upon him and he radiantly reflects the light. He walks the earth, happy in merely living. He is filled with a great enthusiasm, and the clouds of life seem only a deeper tint of gold in the glorious, lovely vision of Youth.

The Menuetto of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony shows the conductor-analyst in his best vein—'twould be vain to attempt to imitate him. (The example consists of the opening bars of the Menuetto.)

Notice in the example how the old world grace of the triple measure is outraged by the capers of the modern bouncer in common time, and please observe the aristocratic elevation of the eyebrows on the part of the clarinet in the last bars of the example, in a sort of 'Not what we were accustomed to, my dear!' manner. It will be noticed that this sniff of outraged etiquette is emphasized by the employment of the minor mode to freeze the bounding parvenu who has dared to trifle with a minuet.

Lastly, in regard to the final Allegro of the Symphony:—

The last movement dashes off at a speed which would delight the pneumatic bosom of one of those musical sausage machines which feed upon perforated cardboard.

Mr. Bosville's parting shot at this No. 4 of Beethoven is quite in his usual 'form':—

But at last, when the whole of the delightful romp is over, and when the inexorable hour of nursery bed-time has arrived, the principal subject is for the moment toned down into the comparative calm of quavers. Very gently then does this fascinating subject say 'Good-night' to the assembled company. Three little pauses momentarily delay the ceremony (perhaps they represent the reluctance displayed in kissing a 'strange gentleman' or a bearded aunt), then the good little subject dashes upstairs to the nursery in one final burst of juvenile exuberance.

A correspondent writes to us from Moscow giving the following particulars of recent musical doings in that city:—

The concert season here has been this year an exceedingly busy one. Both the Symphonic and Philharmonic Societies have shown considerable enterprise in bringing out new works and introducing famous artists to the Moscow public. The principal novelties were a Symphony in E flat, by Glier, a rising young Russian composer of considerable talent from whom may be expected great things in the future, and Scriabine's second Symphony, a long and tedious example of the ultra-modern school. Remembering how several great works in the past were at first unfavourably received, it would be rash to predict the estimation in which this Symphony of Scriabine's will be held in the future; but it may be mentioned that Kashkin, one of the ablest of Russian critics, wrote a very scathing criticism of it in the Moscow Review (Moskovski Viedomosti).

Exceptional interest was attached to the last of the Philharmonic Concerts by the engagement of Miss Muriel Foster. This was the first occasion on which an English vocalist has appeared on a concert platform in Moscow, Madame Ella Russell's visit some years ago being to one of the opera houses. 'Chè farò' was sung by Miss Foster in that perfectly-finished style for which she is so justly famous, and her rendering of songs by Rachmaninoff, Cui, Lefebvre, and Grieg, showed the elasticity of her voice and her emotional capabilities. Miss Kate Eadie's excellent accompaniments served to enhance the effect of the songs. It is interesting to note that Rachmaninoff entered the artists' room after the concert and expressed himself both satisfied and delighted with Miss Foster's interpretation of his composition. The directors of the Philharmonic Society have already published Miss Foster's name in the list of soloists invited for next season.

Lee Williams's cantata 'Bethany' was given at the English Church here on Palm Sunday, under the direction of the organist, Mr. B. Ramsey, with the assistance of Miss Muriel Foster and Herr Bertheau.

Through the energy of Herr Brüscheweiler, director of the Moskauer Liedertafel, a series of five sacred concerts has been given in the Reformirte Kirche under his direction, Mr. Ramsey acting as accompanist. The most important works performed were Brahms's 'Requiem,' Mendelssohn's 'Athalia,' and Rheinberger's 'Der Stern von Bethlehem.' Oratorios and sacred music generally, other than Russian, are very little known here. Last year the Symphonic Society advertised the first performance of Handel's 'Messiah'!

The first performance in America of Dr. Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' was given by the Apollo Musical Club of Chicago, on March 23, with every indication of success. The President of the Club, Mr. Clarence P. Van Inwegen, in a private letter to an English friend, thus refers to the event:—

I thought you would be interested in learning how 'The Dream of Gerontius' was received by a representative American audience We had more than four thousand people present—hardly a vacant seat in the vast auditorium. It was an audience made up of musical people of the city and for a hundred miles around Chicago, some enthusiasts coming five hundred miles to hear the work presented by the Apollo Club.

Speaking from my own standpoint it was the greatest and most satisfactory concert the Club has ever given. The work was studied on-and-off for upwards of five months, and though it was not given so well as it will be next season (for we are to repeat it), it was a great triumph. All through the first part you could literally have heard a pin drop, and so intense was the feeling that many sat as in a trance.

We understand that Mr. Theodore Thomas directed three rehearsals of his famous orchestra in order to familiarize his players with the music; thus he showed his interest in a performance and a work which he himself did not conduct! There were three full rehearsals of band and chorus.

Mr. Frank Damrosch, who conducted the first performance of the work at its first presentation in New York three days after the Chicago performance, writes in these words:—

'The Dream of Gerontius' has been heard in New York, and has made a deep impression. No work of recent years has created such profound interest, both during its preparation and at the performance, and the general sentiment is one of joy and gratitude that at last there has appeared a composer who has original ideas and is able to express them sincerely in his own way and language.

The work is announced to be performed, for the first time in London, at Westminster Cathedral on June 6, when the chorus will consist of the North Staffordshire Choral Society. Dr. Ludwig Wüllner and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies are already engaged to sing, and the composer will conduct.

The outline programme of the Hereford Musical Festival—September 6 to 11—has been issued. The scheme includes 'Elijah,' the 'Messiah,' 'Hymn of Praise,' 'Israel in Egypt' (selection), 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 'A Christmas Mystery' (Wolfrum), &c. The novelties of the Festival will be a sacred work by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, entitled 'Calvary,' and a short composition by Sir Hubert Parry. Dr. Sinclair will occupy his accustomed post as conductor.

'Wisdom while you wait, being a foretaste of the glories of the Insidecompleteuar Britanniaware' is a most amusing brochure published by Messrs. Isbister and compiled by Messrs. E. V. Lucas and C. L. Graves, both past masters of fun literature in its most amusing form. As the title implies, the book is a skit upon certain advertising methods not unknown in Printing House Square. Music, as may be expected from Mr. C. L. Graves, finds more than one place in this uncommonplace compilation. For instance, among the 'departmental editors' we find: 'For obituaries—Professor Algernon Ashton.'

A choice sample of the 'Insidecompleteuar Britanniaware' may be given in full:—

INFANT MORTALITY IN MUSIC.

From the Special Article (71 pages) by Mr. HENRY BIRD, Accompanist at the 'Pops,' and the St. James's Ballad Concerts; Organist at St. Mary Abbot's, Kensington, &c.:

Ballad Concerts.— . . . A long and arduous experience of this class of entertainment has convinced me of the immense difficulty of prolonging the life of children beyond the second verse of a sentimental ballad. Once the chords in the accompaniment are grouped in threes nothing can save them from the celestial regions. Here we may note the great superiority of Music over the other arts. Literature gives us the grand conception of the Heavenly Twins, but Music presents us with the still grander achievement of the Angelic Triplets. . . .

and among the testimonials from all sorts and conditions of men is this:—

M. PADEREWSKI writes: 'Ten volumes of your harmonious work make the most perfect pianoforte stool imaginable.'

If we may quote a non-musical extract from a shilling book that is sure to have thousands of readers, the following specimen may be selected. We are told (in regard to restaurants) that 'Every house should be connected to a good restaurant by a souptureenean passage.'

'Where there's a will there's a way,' says the old proverb. This 'occasional note' is the way and the following is the will—of Dr. Pepusch:—

Abstract of the Will of John Christopher Pepusch, Doctor in Musick, of the Charterhouse, 9 July 1752. To Benjamin Cooke, George Berg, and Miss Thomas, five guineas each.

To John Travers my gold medal presented to me by the Musick Academy.

To John Helot my watch.

To Mrs. Needler, wife of Mr. Needler of the Excise Office, my gold snuff-box.

To my servant Elizabeth Goudge two guineas, besides what is due to her.

To Elizabeth Sheppard, who has attended me lately, three guineas.

All my moveables, books of musick &c. to be equally divided between John Travers and Ephraim Kellner, except such musick printed or written in parts ready to be performed, which may be useful to the Academy of Antient Musick meeting at the Crown and Anchor Tavern in the Strand, which musick I give to the said Academy.

To George Shelvocke Esq. of the Post Office my own portrait in my glass scrutore.

To John Warecher all my wearing apparel.

An Italian musical contemporary furnishes the following misspelt information regarding the novelties and quasi-novelties of the Philharmonic Society during the present season:—

l'ouverture Yout di Kervey la ballata Tyra Tree di Reginald Sommerock.

The first explains itself, but the 'Tyra Tree di Reginald Sommerock' is a curious perversion of 'Thyra Lee,' by Reginald Somerville.

The following type-written document was found under the door of a house in a certain suburb of London:—

VIOLIN TUITION.

Mr. — (GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC) desires to bring to your notice that he is open for a few pupils who wish to have a thorough good professional tuition which will enable them to handle this instrument to advantage.

Terms are 1/- per lesson,—exceedingly cheap in view of the way in which pupils will be brought out.

All desirous of taking advantage of this splendid opportunity should communicate at once with Mr. —.

SIR HUBERT PARRY'S

NEW CHORAL WORK.

Sir Hubert Parry has been nobly courageous in becoming his own librettist in his new Symphonic Ode, 'War and Peace' (for soli, chorus, and orchestra). Moreover, in many respects his libretto is vigorous, significant and emotional; more than all this, it is emphatically suited and fit for music. There is a strong tendency at times on Sir Hubert Parry's part to follow in the line of Mr. W. E. Henley, from the poetical standpoint:—

Ride now! Fall now!
Bleeding yet unsubdued,
Biting at earth,
Clutching at wounds,
Speechless with sobbing breath,
Dizzy with agony.

Of its kind, let us say that this is good work; but only when its limitation is observed and marked, with a future of music before it that is most necessary for its fulfilment. Take an example from Mr. Henley:—

Hark how the Trumpet,
The mistress of mistresses,
Calls, silver-throated
And stern where the tables
Are spread, and the meal
Of the Lord is in hand!

The poet completes his emotion through the mere triumph of his own writing. Sir Hubert Parry completes his somewhat less ripe lines, however, with his music. That music is eminently one in idea, one in sentiment, one in enthusiasm with the libretto. A distinction has been made in modern times between poetical poetry and rhetorical poetry. Keeping that distinction well in mind, we may say that Sir Hubert has, in this instance, rightly elected to stand in with rhetorical music, to make 'clear the clarion of his song,' and to leave to some large extent on one side the softer and more intimate things of music. The introduction is pure realism—a clatter and mingling of emotions, not clarified into any true melody, but resounding in rhythm and ceasing finally among mysterious half-silences. The bass solo, 'Deep in the dark abyss'—the poetic suggestion being here clearly taken from 'Paradise Lost'—which opens the vocal portion of the work is, if a trifle grim, significant and suggestive; it leads into a vigorous male chorus, 'Strike now,' which is distinguished by a peculiarly personal note. The music is here in flight and utterly full of vitality; it is also most ingeniously contrived; moreover it is warlike, it almost avoids beauty until the section is reached entitled 'Recompense.' The contralto solo, 'There is a gracious flow'r' intrudes here however with a sense of contrast that is wholly agreeable, although perhaps a little more definiteness of simplicity would have heightened that contrast; again the phrase here, 'Death is the end of all,' is admirable in its manliness and courage. Throughout, too, one observes so far that there is not a note of weakness in the scoring, and that Sir Hubert has carefully massed his effects, if not always gratefully to the ear, at all events always most intelligently.

The section entitled 'Comradeship' is sound writing with quite excellently graded pages of dramatic effect, such as the mezzo-forte passage 'The hill-tops bristle with foes,' leading to the utter quietude of 'Silent from rock to rock they steal'—a very imaginative page indeed. The dirge, 'Blow trumpets'—the rhythm of the book here is of a homelier kind—is mournful, but never maudlin, with a set bass rhythm, the vocal phrases not without majesty, and throughout controlled by a ripeness of inner orchestral writing that one always appreciates, however natural the expectation may be. From this point forth, Sir Hubert Parry frankly surrenders himself to the rhetorical sentiment of triumph, and of keen, brisk pleasure. 'Home-coming' is a vigorous and sounding page, and even the section 'Peace' is instinct with suppressed animation; so we come through some capital writing, 'Sing the glories of peace'—in which he shows quite the limit of his ambition, so far as this work is concerned—to a triumphal march 'Forward, brothers!'

The whole concludes with an 'Aspiration,' very calmly written at the outset, but with growing animation, the volume of sound increasing until for a brief while the emotion is suspended in interludes, only to gather itself again together into a penultimate page of excitement, the whole ending with the utmost quietude on the common chord of C major.

A musical Festival will be held at Duisburg, Rhenish Prussia, on the 23rd and 24th inst. The programme includes the 'Messiah,' Bruckner's Ninth Symphony, Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and R. Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung.' The conductor will be Dr. Walther Josephson, and the committee hope to induce Sir Hubert Parry to be present at the first performance abroad of his famous Ode.

Church and Organ Music.

THE TUNE 'ST. STEPHEN'S.'

The finger of scorn is often pointed at the clerical composer; but in regard to the smaller forms of church music—the hymn-tune and chant—the reproach is not always justified. No one can deny that despite his limitations and short-comings, the amateur has often succeeded, at least melodically, where the skilled musician has failed. Examples not a few could be given in proof thereof, but it may suffice to instance the hymn-tune known as 'St. Stephen's,' composed by the Rev. William Jones, of Nayland, more than a hundred years ago.

The tune first appeared at the end of a publication entitled:—

Ten Church Pieces for the | Organ | with four Anthems in score | composed for the use of the Church | of Nayland in Suffolk | and published for its benefit | By WILLIAM JONES, M.A., F.R.S. | author of a treatise on the Art of Music, &c., &c. | Opera II. | London [1789].

It stands thus, including the repetition of the final chord:—

set to this version of Psalm xliii.:—

My Shepherd is the living Lord,
Nothing therefore I need,
In pastures fair near pleasant streams
He setteth me to feed.

The following version of the tune is found in 'A morning and evening service performed at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, &c.,' by the same author, dated 1795:—

It will be observed that while Mr. Jones retained his original bass, he improved the progressions of the inner parts both grammatically and melodically.

In this later publication the name of the tune is changed to 'Nayland'; in Scotland it is known as 'Newington.' By the retention of the original designation, 'St. Stephen's'—so named by the composer after his favourite saint—the tune would avoid confusion.

The Rev. William Jones—born at Lowick, Northamptonshire, July 30, 1726—was a descendant of Colonel John Jones, the regicide, and he always kept January 30 as a day of humiliation for the sins of his ancestor! Educated at the Charterhouse and University College, Oxford, he held in succession curacies at Finedon, Wadenhoe (both in Northamptonshire) and the vicarages of Bethersden, Pluckley (both in Kent) and Paston, Northamptonshire. In 1777 he was appointed perpetual curate of Nayland, but his name does not appear in the registers till 1784. Jones was one of the most prominent churchmen of his day. He was a zealous student of music and of natural science, as well as of theology. Nayland vicarage became the centre of a little circle which afterwards expanded into the high-church party of the early part of the 19th century. In 1775 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and his collected works, published in twelve volumes (1801), comprise many philosophical and theological contributions to literature. 'A man of quick penetration, extensive learning, and the soundest piety,' Jones died at Nayland, January 6, 1800, aged seventy-three, and was buried in the vestry of the church.

In regard to his musical attainments, he was the author of—

A treatise on the Art of Musick, in which the elements of harmony and air are practically considered and illustrated by 150 examples in notes . . . the whole intended as a course of lectures preparatory to the practice of Thorough-Bass and Musical Composition. Colchester, 1784. (Second edition, Sudbury, 1827.)

The 'Ten Church Pieces' in which 'St. Stephen's' first appeared were dedicated to Lady Rushout, 'who assisted him so generously in the design of placing a good Organ in the beautiful Church of Nayland; from which,' Jones adds, 'some of the best of our Cathedral services and anthems are occasionally heard; and our Psalmody, so assisted, is to my ear more affecting than any I ever met with of the kind, from such a number of tuneful children singing the old plain Psalms in different parts.' An extract from the Preface may be quoted as bearing upon present-day tendencies in the demoralization of the organ by a superabundance of 'oboe with tremulant' and similar perversions of the nature and dignity of the instrument:—

I use the Organ chiefly in the Diapasons, the Swell, and the Chorus, as best accommodated to the Music of the Church. A stop approaching to vocality, such as the Bassoon, Cremona, or Vox-humana, has a very agreeable effect, and may well be admitted when used with discretion; but I must confess myself much less affected with the noise and levity of the Cornet and Trumpet than I used to be.

Nayland, about six miles from Colchester, is a village on the northern bank of the River Stour; thus it is just inside Suffolk. It is untouched by railways, and contains several old houses and—unfortunately from a picturesque point of view—a huge modern mill planted in the middle of the village. The word Nayland has nothing to do with 'no land.' In early days the place was an island, surrounded by the Stour—Nayland being a corruption of Eyland (Ealand), the land in the water, Ey (or Ea) being the old English word for 'water.' The 15th century church has been much restored, though some curious pews of horse-box type still exist under the gallery. Some chained Latin bibles are kept in a cupboard in the vestry. The organ, originally built by Green, was opened on July 29, 1787, when Jones preached a sermon on 'The nature and excellence of music,' taking his text from Psalm xcvi., 6. This sermon is included among his printed works. The swell-box of Green's organ was suspended from the west wall of the church by hooks!

The glory of Nayland church is, however, its altar-piece, from the brush of Constable, who loved the neighbourhood which furnished him so many subjects for the exercise of his genius. The former altar-piece was a representation of Moses and Aaron, but this so disgusted Constable's nephew, a resident in the village, that he persuaded his uncle to paint the present adornment, its subject being 'Christ blessing the wine at the last Supper.' The hand of the master is apparent in this beautiful feature of Nayland church, the birthplace of the tune 'St. Stephen's.'

'ALL SORTS AND CONDITIONS OF MEN.'

Organists are very familiar with the collect 'for all sorts and conditions of men,' but few of them probably know that it was composed by Peter Gunning, Bishop of Ely from 1675 to 1684. In this connection an amusing story was told to the present writer the other day by the Dean of Ely. One of the hobbies of the Dean is to conduct parties round his beautiful Cathedral. On one occasion he was showing his visitors the tomb of Bishop Gunning, and telling them that he wrote the collect 'for all sorts and conditions of men.' An American tourist, who had overheard the Dean's observation, came up to him and said: 'I beg your pardon, but that was written by Walter Besant!'

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

The remuneration of church organists has lately attracted some attention, and war has been waged against wages considered to be inadequate. It may therefore not be without interest to give the following examples of salaries paid about a century ago. The information is derived from the transcript of a book compiled by G. P. England, the organ builder, and kindly placed at our disposal by Mr. Burnham Horner. It contains many specifications of church organs, and gives in addition the names of the officiating organists at the churches enumerated, with in certain cases their emoluments:—

CHURCH.	ORGANIST.	SALARY
Chester Cathedral	Mr. Bailey	£50
Lincoln Cathedral	Mr. Skelton	50
York Minster	Mr. Camidge	50
Manchester Collegiate Church (now Cathedral)	Mr. Sudlow	80
Magdalen College, Oxford	Mr. Vicary	60
New College, Oxford	Mr. Woodcock	80
St. Marylebone Church	Mr. C. Wesley	110
St. Magnus, London Bridge	Mr. Cooke	50 (gs.)
St. Paul's, Deptford	Mr. T. Adams	50
St. Saviour's, Southwark	Mr. Cope	50
St. Mary, Rotherhithe	Mr. J. F. Reddie	50
St. Laurence, Shoreditch	Miss Gosford	40
St. Luke's, Old Street	Mr. Cranch	30
St. Paul's, Covent Garden	Mr. Walmisley	30
St. Stephen's, Coleman Street	Mr. Groombridge	30
Enfield Church	Mr. Levesque	40
Eltham Church	Mr. Nightingale	30
St. Laurence, Reading	Miss Binfield	30

It must be remembered that, except in cathedrals, the duties of a church organist a hundred years ago were much lighter than they are now. Moreover, pluralities were freely tolerated. In regard to the financial consideration of the subject a Windsor story may be re-told. It was the custom of a former Dean of Windsor to invite the Lay Clerks of St. George's Chapel to an annual supper at the Deanery. On one occasion the genial host, a man fond of his garden, in the course of conversation with one of his guests enthusiastically expatiated upon his success in raising celery, a vegetable which he pronounced salary. 'I wish, Mr. Dean,' replied the listener, 'you could see your way to raise my salary!'

The excellent use to which the Naves of so many Cathedrals are now being put received a further proof at Wells on the 1st ult., when Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was performed under the careful direction of the organist, the Rev. Dr. Davis. It was the first time that an orchestra has taken part in a service at Wells Cathedral. On this occasion the instrumentalists numbered forty-two, and the choruses were sung—and admirably sung—by the Cathedral choir and the Wells Choral Society. Mrs. Hodgkinson rendered excellent service at the organ, and Mr. H. J. Langley, an assistant of Dr. Davis's, gave a short recital of Bach's organ music before the oratorio. The service was so successful that it may become an annual event.

Easter Tuesday was the occasion of the presentation of a silver loving-cup to Dr. Keeton, organist of Peterborough Cathedral, by his artiled pupils. It was a spontaneous expression of their loving esteem, in grateful recognition of their indebtedness to him. The presentation was made by Mr. Oliver O. Brooksbank, on behalf of his fellow-pupils; and Dr. Keeton, in accepting this token of regard, expressed with much feeling his appreciation of the kindness of the donors.

PURCELL'S 'O SING UNTO THE LORD.'

We are much obliged to Sir Frederick Bridge for his detailed, if in some places inaccurate, explanation of the charges he has made against Vincent Novello's edition of the above anthem. It is satisfactory to find that he practically withdraws three of the most important of the seven counts of his indictment, and that he 'yields to no one in appreciation of what Vincent Novello did.'

THE BERLIOZ CENTENARY.

Choral societies and choirs not a few will doubtless be thinking of celebrating the centenary of Hector Berlioz during next season's operations. In cases where resources may not be adequate to the performance of one of the master's great works, we would direct attention to the charming chorus which forms the music pages of the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, and for which that skilful versifier, Mr. Paul England, has specially written some very singable words.

The chorus is from Part II. of Berlioz's 'L'Enfance du Christ,' which treats of the flight of the Holy Family into Egypt. It originated thuswise. In the year 1850 a Philharmonic Society was started in Paris and Berlioz was appointed its conductor. At the concert of November 12, Berlioz played a trick—which he was quite capable of doing—upon the credulity of his friends and foes in the identical chorus which appears in our pages. The nature of the freak is best described by Berlioz himself in a letter he wrote to the late John Ella, to whom he dedicated this (the second) section of his 'L'Enfance du Christ.'

'My dear Ella,—You ask why the mystery, "La Fuite en Egypte," bears this indication: "attributed to Pierre Ducré, imaginary chapel-master." It is by consequence of a fault I committed—a grave fault for which I have been severely punished, and concerning which I always reproach myself. Here are the facts: I found myself one evening at the house of Baron de M., an intelligent and sincere friend of art, with one of my fellow-students of the Academy of Rome, the learned architect Duc. Everybody played at écarté, whist, or brelan, save myself. . . . I was bored in a manner sufficiently evident, when Duc said, turning to me, "Since thou dost nothing, why not write a piece of music for my album?" "Willingly." I took a piece of paper, and traced some lines, upon which soon appeared an andantino in four parts for the organ. Recognising in it a certain character of naïve mysticism, the idea struck me to apply words of the same kind. The organ piece disappeared and became the chorus in which the Shepherds at Bethlehem take farewell of the infant Jesus, at the moment when the Holy Family set out for Egypt. Whist and brelan were interrupted to hear my holy effusion, and the company were as much amused by the antique turn of the verse as of the music. "Now," said I to Duc, "I shall put thy name at the bottom. I mean to compromise thee." "What an idea! My friends very well know that I am entirely ignorant of composition." "Ah! that is a good reason, truly, for not composing; but, since thy vanity refuses to adopt my piece, I will create a name of which thine shall make part. It shall be Pierre Ducré, whom I institute music-master at the Sainte-Chapelle of Paris in the seventeenth century. That will give to my manuscript all the value of an archaeological curiosity." . . . Some days after, I wrote, at home, the piece called "Repose of the Holy Family," beginning this time with the words, and a small overture for a small orchestra in a small innocent style, in F sharp minor without the leading-note. . . . A month later, when I thought no more about my retrospective score, a chorus was wanted for the programme of a concert I had to conduct, and it amused me to insert that of the shepherds from my Mystery, leaving it under the name of Pierre Ducré, Music-master at the Sainte-Chapelle of Paris (1679). The choristers at rehearsals conceived a lively affection for this ancestral music. "Where did you disinter it?" they said to me. "Disinter is nearly the word," I answered without hesitation, "it was found in an old walled-up chest during the recent restoration of the Sainte-Chapelle." The concert took place; Pierre Ducré's piece was well rendered and still better received, while the critics praised it the next day and congratulated me on my discovery. Only one expressed doubts concerning its authenticity and age. . . . On the following Sunday, Duc was at the house of a young and beautiful lady who greatly loved ancient music, and professed much contempt for modern productions of known date. "Well, madame, how did you find our last concert?" "Oh! very mixed, as usual." "And the piece of Pierre Ducré?" "Perfect! delicious! there is music! time has removed none of its freshness. It has true melody, of which contemporary composers force us to remark the rarity. It is not your M. Berlioz, in any case, who could even produce its equal." At these words, Duc was compelled to laugh, and had the imprudence to answer, "Alas, madame, it was my M. Berlioz nevertheless, who composed the Shepherds' Adieu, and who did it in my presence, one evening, on the corner of a card-table." The lady bit her lip, the blush of confusion tinged her face, and turning her back on Duc, she threw out with temper the cruel phrase, "M. Berlioz is an impertinent." Judge of my shame, my dear Ella, when Duc repeated these words to me. I hastened to make atonement by humbly publishing in my own name that poor little work, retaining however under the title the words "Attributed to Pierre Ducré, imaginary chapel-master" to recall this my culpable freak.

That Berlioz, the master of great effects, could write simple and melodious strains, our music pages unmistakably testify.

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE ON HIS CANADIAN TOUR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Ottawa, April 10, 1903.

DEAR SIR,—Before commencing the fortnight's Festival Concerts which I now have before me, let me fulfil my promise to furnish you with a brief account of our musical doings during my Canadian tour.

I am writing from Ottawa, where I have been spending part of Holy Week, during which our operations have naturally been suspended, thereby affording me an opportunity of a short rest and a look round. To-night, however, my dolce far niente is over, and work begins at Toronto in the morning.

On my arrival at Halifax on March 28 I was glad to perceive the stalwart figure of the Director of the Festivals (Mr. Harriss) on the quay, although I was not too anxious to leave the good ship 'Bavarian,' upon whose decks I had enjoyed leisure, ozone, and excellent company, in spite of a roughish passage across the Atlantic. I was speedily informed that our plan of campaign in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had been reversed, owing to local exigencies, and that the first concerts would be given at St. John instead of at Halifax. We therefore proceeded without delay to the capital of New Brunswick, where I met the Orchestra from Montreal, which had been placed at my disposal for the first week. A few hours after their arrival I commenced rehearsals of the orchestral numbers, and on the following day my choral experiences began. It will interest you to know that at the conclusion of my first rehearsal with the choir, I felt impelled to make the frank confession that the quality as well as the preliminary preparation of that body had considerably exceeded my expectations. I had all the greater pleasure in making this statement, as that choir had been formed expressly for the purposes of these Festivals, and had been admirably trained by the Associate-Conductor, Mr. J. S. Ford, who had done his share of the work in an excellent manner. Moreover, I am pleased to say that the two choral works, 'The Banner of St. George' (Elgar), and 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' (Coleridge-Taylor), were performed and received in a manner which would have gratified their composers. Certainly there was no lack either of vigour on the part of the choir or enthusiasm on the part of the audience. Indeed the good folks of St. John seemed to appreciate most cordially our instrumental and vocal efforts, and the Mayor honoured me by giving a reception, at which I made the acquaintance of the leading citizens.

On the morning of April 2, our company left at an early hour for Moncton. Although Moncton is a small place, I found an even larger chorus (again created for our purposes), which had been well trained by the local Conductor, Mr. G. H. Brown, and I have to record not only an intelligent and vigorous performance of 'The Banner of St. George,' but one of the most encouraging receptions in my experience. I am told that no choral work had ever been given here, and that this was the first occasion upon which an orchestra had performed! Certainly our efforts seemed to give the large audience great satisfaction, for I had the unique experience of having every item (both vocal and instrumental) in the programme encored. The cantata of course I could not repeat, but I daresay they would have listened to a repetition of it with great pleasure. For some reason or other my overture to 'The Little Minister' had to be repeated both at St. John and here, and we had to play it six times during the past three days. We then left for Halifax.

Halifax has been in possession of an excellent society, namely, the Orpheus Club, conducted by Mr. C. H. Porter, for the last twenty years, and it was but natural that the lion's share of choral work during this week should fall to it. At the three concerts I directed we gave four choral works: Cowen's 'Coronation Ode,' Stanford's 'Revenge,' a Festival Mass by Mr. Harriss, conducted by himself, and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' conducted by the Associate-Conductor. All these works were given in fine style by this excellent choral society, which responded intelligently and enthusiastically to the Conductors. Although the balance of the choir was good and the sopranos particularly bright, I noticed that the tenors were of exceptionally good quality, and the defiant utterances of Sir Richard Greville were given with a vigour which would have delighted the composer of 'The Revenge.' I had an opportunity of augmenting the orchestra during these three concerts from various sources, notably the band of the Garrison, and the orchestral numbers were received in a most cordial manner. As I have already stated, Halifax has been musically active for some years, and can boast of a number of excellent resident musicians and teachers, whose successful educational work is quite evident. Let me not omit to record the complete success of the three young vocalists who accompanied me from London. Miss Ethel Wood, Mr. Wilfrid Virgo, and Mr. Reginald Davidson, on every occasion of their appearances during this week, have had to re-appear and repeat their numbers.

So far therefore the general results have been completely satisfactory, artistically even beyond my expectations. A very considerable strain has been put upon every one connected with this enterprise. The orchestral rehearsals have been long and frequent. I was compelled to hold a band rehearsal, after an evening concert, commencing at 11 o'clock at night (we had been at work from 10 o'clock in the morning), and although I have no cause to complain of want of willingness on the part of the members of the orchestra, I fancy they are not at all accustomed to the hard work attendant upon the preparation of a musical festival in England. However, my insistence and dogged endurance seemed to impress them, and in spite of protestations that the lips of some of the wind performers would not stand any more, I succeeded in getting what I wanted!

The weather has certainly not been in our favour, and the variations of temperature have been quite wonderful. Warm rain in the morning, frozen streets in the afternoon, with an occasional blizzard at Halifax, can hardly be called festival weather. Indeed, on the occasion of the first performance I had to make a carefully calculated sudden dart which landed me in at the stage door between two violent gusts of wind! The week's music concluded with a reception (given by the Orpheus Club), which was largely attended and enjoyed until a late hour by the numerous supporters of the festival and the most prominent inhabitants of Halifax. The cordial spirit in which we have been welcomed in the Lower Provinces is most gratifying and encouraging.

I am now in a better position to realize the magnitude of the work covered by the cycle of concerts, as well as the enterprising courage which has enabled Mr. Charles E. Harriss to cope with the innumerable difficulties of this huge scheme. Choral bodies have been formed where none existed previously. The active sympathies of the municipal authorities, as well as the hearty co-operation of the musical profession, have been enlisted everywhere. The financial responsibilities and endless details rest upon the shoulders of a man whose energies seem to command the respect and appreciation of all who are interested in a movement which cannot fail to benefit the future of music in this vast Dominion.

Holy Week, fortunately, brings with it a well-earned rest, before attempting the task of conducting eighteen concerts (and their attendant rehearsals) in fourteen days. The interest in our success is very keen and general; we are encouraged by the support of the leaders of the country. And I am as well aware of the responsibilities I have assumed as of the privilege which is mine in being entrusted with them.

On the 13th inst. we begin the next cycle in Hamilton, Brantford, Woodstock, and London. And the first of the four concerts in Toronto will be attended by their Excellencies the Governor-General, Lady Minto, and suite, who have very kindly expressed their intention of travelling from Ottawa for the express purpose.

We complete the cycle in Quebec, in which city we give two concerts (morning and evening) on Saturday, the 25th inst., previous to boarding 'the cars' for Winnipeg and the far West.

I must postpone further remarks for a future letter.

Yours faithfully,

A. C. MACKENZIE.

Reviews.

How to Sing. By Lili Lehmann. Translated from the German by Richard Aldrich.

[Macmillan and Company, Limited.]

This substantial book of 281 pages has an attractive title, and as it is written by so celebrated a singer as Madame Lili Lehmann, it deserves the best attention of the large audience interested in the art of singing. The authoress declares her purpose to be to discuss simply, intelligibly, yet from a scientific point of view, the sensations known to us in singing, and exactly ascertained in her experience by the expressions 'singing open,' 'covered,' 'dark,' 'nasal,' 'in the head' or 'in the neck,' 'forward,' or 'back.' Of course there is the regulation condemnation of other systems in vogue, without which no book on singing would be complete. 'So-called' conservatoires are denounced as factories, and the authoress considers that the issue of factory diplomas is a crime that the State should prohibit. The didactic portions of the book leave us much perplexed. Madame Lehmann explains in embarrassing detail what she considers to be her sensations in singing, and she over-sanguinely assumes that readers can reproduce the sensations, and therefore the tone, from her elaborate descriptions. One chapter on the 'Breath and whirling currents' is especially difficult to fathom. The breath having arrived in the mouth is said to make 'Whirling currents, which circulate in the elastic form surrounding it, and it must remain there till the tone is high enough, strong enough, and sustained enough to satisfy the judgment of the singer as well as the ear of the listener. Should there be lacking the least element of pitch, strength or duration, the tone is imperfect and does not meet the requirement.' This is a fair example of the style of the book. We cannot pretend to discuss the numerous problems raised—and, of course, settled—by the book. Much of it is exceedingly interesting because it gives so many of Madame Lehmann's personal experiences as a singer. The earnest tone and desire of the authoress to help others over a dark and difficult path are also points that deserve thankful acknowledgment.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

A Modern School for the Violin. By August Wilhelmj and James Brown. Nos. 19 and 29.

Kinderleben. Twenty-four pieces for the young. By Th. Kullak. Arranged for violin and pianoforte by A. Rosenkranz. In Four Books. Book I.

Six Pieces for Violin and Pianoforte. By Joseph L. Roedel.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Souvenir sans Paroles pour Violon avec Piano. Par Johannes Wolff.

[London: Chappell and Company, Limited.]

Melody for Violin with Pianoforte Accompaniment. By Noel Johnson.

Two Violin Solos with Pianoforte Accompaniment. By Noel Johnson.

[London: Charles Woolhouse.]

The newest published numbers of A Modern School for the Violin, edited by Messrs. Wilhelmj and Brown, include two very famous works of strangely-contrasted styles. No. 19 contains Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor for violin solo without accompaniment; whilst No. 29 consists of the Ballade and Polonaise for violin and pianoforte, by Vieuxtemps. Mr. Wilhelmj has undertaken the sole editing of the 'Prelude and Fugue,' and has accomplished his evident labour of love in a manner worthy of this noble composition.

Kullak's 'Kinderleben' has already found a host of admirers among youthful pianists, and in its new garb, arrayed as duets for violin and pianoforte by Mr. Rosenkranz, it will doubtless find still further attraction for young players. There are some who look askance at adaptations in any form; but surely nothing but good can come of these bright, wholesome little pieces in this duet form. Book I. only is published so far, and the contents—'Once upon a time,' 'Grandfather's clock,' 'Sunday morning,' 'In the fields,' 'Cradle song,' 'Maypole song'—are well within the compass of the first position of the violin.

Mr. Joseph L. Roedel's 'Six Pieces' have just been re-published in separate numbers. All six of the set are admirably written for the violin within the range of the first to third positions, and are particularly suitable for teaching and performing. No. 1, 'In Modo Antico,' is in the form of a Bourrée; No. 2, 'Preghiera,' is of a plaintive and, at times, somewhat more impassioned character; No. 3 is a sprightly 'Staccato Etude'; No. 4, a 'Souvenir de Valse'; No. 5, an excellent 'Tempo di Gavotta'; and No. 6, a pleasing 'Romanza' with a well-contrasted Intermezzo. The interesting accompaniments give good support to the solo instrument.

'The Souvenir sans Paroles,' by Johannes Wolff, is intended as a musical interpretation of a short poem by Miss Marie Corelli, the words of which face the first page. As befits the poem, the music is somewhat rhapsodical in its nature, and appears to suggest the line—'Such wild dreams as to my soul are given'—rather than those which follow—'Speak for me, golden notes that tremble from my bow, In a melody that floats tenderly, to and fro!' But when one comes to consider, it might be somewhat difficult for even such an accomplished fiddler as Mr. Johannes Wolff to musically (or otherwise!) define what 'golden notes trembling from a bow' really means! Anyhow, apart from its original conception, the 'Souvenir' may be recommended to soloists as a very suitable piece for public performance.

The 'Melody' by Noel Johnson is a pleasing solo, with an easy, somewhat syncopated pianoforte accompaniment. Although written for the first position it deserves a better fate than to be left entirely to the unskilled fingers of a beginner, and in the hands of a capable violinist it might be made very effective, especially if played throughout, as is quite possible, on the G string. The same composer's 'Two Violin Solos' with pianoforte accompaniment, are tuneful bagatelles in a lighter vein than the preceding. No. 1, 'A Song Without Words,' is very simple; but No. 2—'Scherzetto'—requires some nimbleness of fingering and bowing.

SONGS.

A Réverie of the East. The poem by Owen Seaman. The music composed by Sir A. C. Mackenzie.

Three Songs for Soldiers. By Alicia A. Needham.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Réverie of the East' was originally published in the 'Durbar' number of Punch, of which it formed one of the most distinctive features. It is not too much to say that the song is one of Sir Alexander's most original compositions, added to which it is peculiarly interesting by reason of the deft use made of intervals and idioms of southern India.

Mrs. Needham's 'Three Songs for Soldiers' are excellent examples of this lady's talent for inventing attractive and rhythmic melodies and allying them to suitable harmonies. The first song, entitled 'Might I march through life again,' has verses by E. Fitzball, in which is set forth with truculent vigour the willingness of the singer to 'fight his battles o'er again.' The second song is a setting of Malcolm Ramsay's inspiring lines in memory of the charge of the Gordons at Dargai, October 20, 1897, and should certainly be possessed by every member of the valiant clan. The last of the series, entitled 'Bad luck to their marching,' is a rollicking setting of Charles Lever's humorous lines of the homesick soldier, who fails to see the necessity to be 'pipe-clayed and starched' before he can be killed. After all he was right, for nous avons changé tout cela.

My Garden. Song Cycle. Words by Philip Bourke Marston. Music by Albert Mallinson.

An Album of Six Short Songs. Composed by R. Snowdon Thomas.

[Reynolds and Co.]

There is so much distinctiveness and originality in Mr. Mallinson's songs that they should be welcomed by all cultured vocalists capable of appreciating endeavours to break through petrified conventionalities in musical phrases. 'My Garden' may be described as a poetical and fanciful meditation in a sequestered and favourite nook where Flora holds her court, and the sentiments of the owner and the lover of the flowers are echoed in the music with an earnestness that convinces and charms. The distinctiveness of the music chiefly lies in the boldness of the harmonic scheme, resulting from the endeavour to use to the full the expressive power latent in harmony. This is perhaps most noticeable in the second song of the series entitled 'The Rose and the Wind,' in which the meaning of the words is enforced by deft harmonic transitions. Mr. Mallinson also writes gratefully for the voice and has the gift of inventing significant melody.

The six songs contained in the Album by Mr. Snowdon Thomas are unpretentious little ditties, but they attest to musical feeling and sympathy with modern methods. The composer it may be added is a professor of singing at Sydney, New South Wales.

But thou, O hope. By Frederick H. Cowen.

Praise to the Holiest. By Edward Elgar.

Sound asleep. By R. Vaughan Williams.

(Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c., for female voices.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Only brief comment is required of the first two of the above, for they are respectively excerpts from Dr. Cowen's beautiful 'Ode to the Passions' and Dr. Elgar's noble setting of the 'Dream of Gerontius.' The former is not difficult, but the latter imperatively demands a numerous and well-trained body of intelligent singers. Any labour that the chorus may occasion, however, will be repaid a thousandfold. Mr. Vaughan Williams has selected words by Christina Rossetti. The sleep is that of death, and the music tenderly and reverentially echoes the gentle spirit underlying the text. Well sung, this part-song would be impressive.

Correspondence.

DR. BRODSKY.

DEAR SIR,—Every friend of Dr. Brodsky's must be grateful to you for your delightful biographical notice of him in this month's MUSICAL TIMES; but there is one aspect of his present life which is probably known only to residents in Manchester, so, as one of those, I beg to be allowed to add a few lines to what has been so ably written in your columns.

I should like just to put on record his wonderful public spirit and his goodness to those less fortunate than himself. He has tried to help so many of our institutions for the benefit of others. At the Social Club, an excellent gathering-place for young clerks and shop-girls, he goes sometimes to play chess with the members, he being a very distinguished chess-player, and doing it only to help and stimulate the young people. Each winter he takes his celebrated Quartet to play gratuitously at a society for promoting recreation in the very poor part of Manchester.

He and Mrs. Brodsky are like protecting parents to the young students of the Royal Manchester College of Music, specially to those who find themselves 'in a strange land,' helping them with advice and sympathy unstinted. Dr. Brodsky's goodness to struggling musicians outside the College, too, has often come to my knowledge; though it is shown so privately that it is not known to many.

Yours, &c., A. B.

THE LATE WILLIAM REA.

DEAR SIR,—Your interesting biography of the late Dr. William Rea, brings forcibly to my memory his conductorship of the Polyhymnian Choir, of which I was a member about forty-five years since. I can personally testify to the splendid work (quite gratuitous) that he did for that Society. Our meetings and earlier concerts were held at Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate Street, and the rehearsals were frequented by many musicians and others, such as G. A. Macfarren (whose 'King Canute' we frequently sang), and Elizabeth Stirling. No one can over-estimate Dr. Rea's labours in the furtherance of part-singing.

He gave what might be regarded as private lessons to half the choir at a time, by taking a solo from an opera and having it sung collectively by the thirty or more members present, just as it would be interpreted by an individual voice; thus he secured proper effect, in regard to time, tune and expression. I have never heard of the adoption of a similar method in training choirs.

I hope you may find room for the insertion of these remarks, and allow me to express the belief that no musician ever did more to encourage vocal part-music, and at the same time show so much unselfishness in the work, as the conductor of the late Polyhymnian Choir.

Yours, &c.,
W. J. TURNBULL.

MICHAEL ARNE IN CORK IN 1770.

DEAR SIR,—So little is known of the doings of Michael Arne from 1769 to 1776 that no apology is needed for the publication of the following extract, which goes to prove that the composer of 'Cymon' spent some months in the fair city of Cork during the autumn of the year 1770. From a rare file of the Hibernian Chronicle, printed by William Flynn, of Cork, in 1770, I extract a notice issued by Mr. Arne, dated September 24, 1770:—

At the Assembly Room, on Wednesday, October 3rd, will be a select performance of Musick, to be conducted by Mr. Arne, and the gentlemen of the Musical Society. The vocal part by a young lady. To conclude with the Coronation Anthem composed by Mr. Handel.

After the Concert there will be a Ball, to begin at seven o'clock. Tickets at three British Shillings each, to be had of Mr. Arne, at Mrs. Burnel's in Cook Street.

Yours, &c.,

WM. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

[Michael Arne should not be confused with his father, Dr. Arne, the composer of 'Rule, Britannia.'—ED. M.T.]

ON MUSICAL LIBRARIES.

A paper on the above subject was read before the Musical Association on the 21st ult. by Mr. J. E. Matthew at his residence, 100, Fellows Road, South Hampstead, Mr. Prendergast in the chair. We believe this is the first time that the Association has deserted its usual meeting place, but the change gave the Members an opportunity of examining many interesting volumes which Mr. Matthew has in his collection.

The paper opened with a short reference to some of the most important musical libraries, past and present. The earliest libraries were undoubtedly collected by ecclesiastical foundations, and consisted exclusively of service books for use in Divine worship. Many of these were dispersed in troublous times, but not a few of our cathedrals still possess some of their old treasures, and some continental churches can show magnificent service books, although these masterpieces of penmanship have often suffered much from careless treatment.

The Vatican collection, which is rich in the works of Desprès, Lassus, Morales, Palestrina, Vittoria, and others of the Golden Age of 'a capella' music, is also fortunate in having been well catalogued by Fr. X. Haberl.

The earliest general collection that we know of was formed by John IV., king of Portugal (1640-1656). The first volume of a catalogue was printed in 1649, and a copy has been found in the National Library at Paris; this is the only record we have of this fine collection, which is supposed to have been swallowed up in the earthquake at Lisbon.

The Library of Padre Martini is described in Dr. Burney's 'Present State of Music,' and he estimated the number of volumes at seventeen thousand. This is an enormous collection, and there may probably be some mistake. Part of this large collection is in the Court Library at Vienna, and part in the Liceo Musicale of Bologna.

The Paris Conservatoire possesses an excellent library, but no catalogue is available, except of the 'Réserve' published by M. Weckerlin since he became librarian in 1872. The Opera library in Paris is also of great value in its own particular department. Allusion should also be made to the Mecklenburg-Schwerin Library, and more than one collection in Breslau, all well catalogued. The well-known publishers Peters have also founded an excellent library more especially for students' use, and which is constantly being added to.

A large collection of Catholic Church music in the strict style is to be found at Regensburg, formed under the influence of the late Karl Proske. The Monastery of St. Gall in Switzerland is worthy of note as possessing the famous Gradual said to have been copied from the autograph of St. Gregory. Brussels is peculiarly rich in musical collections; amongst others the famous library of the late M. Fétis, which is wonderfully strong in the Literature of music.

It is only possible just to allude to the many private collections. Otto Jahn's, mainly referring to Mozart; M. Martin's, of Marseilles, dispersed in 1885; Coussemaker's in 1877; the Borghese Library; Abbé Santini's, in Rome. All these are now scattered.

In our own British Museum we probably possess as fine a collection, both of Music and its Literature, as exists, but it is impossible, even with the excellent catalogue that is available, to form any idea of the number of works it contains. The Bodleian at Oxford and the University Library at Cambridge both contain many works of great value, and the Fitzwilliam Museum is of even greater interest. This last has been catalogued by Mr. Fuller Maitland and Dr. Mann. The Royal College of Music possesses the fine collection formerly belonging to the Sacred Harmonic Society, singularly strong in English madrigals.

The collections of Mr. Taphouse, of Oxford, of Dr. Cummings, rich in Purcell's works, can only be alluded to.

Mr. Matthew then called attention to some of the more noticeable volumes which were exhibited round the room, including 'Musices Opusculum,' Burtius, containing one of the earliest specimens of music-printing;

'Flores Musice,' von Reutlingen, 1488; many of the works of Gafurius, Aron, Zarlino, Galilei, Cerone's 'El Melopeo,' &c., the whole edition of which last, with the exception of thirteen copies, was lost at sea; the works of Doni, Berardi, Bottrigari, Nassarre, and others. Copies were also shown of Viridung's 'Musica Getutscht,' Wollick's 'Opus Aureum' (1501 and 1505), the 'Isagoge' of Gleareanus, Kircher's 'Musurgia' and 'Phonurgia,' Mersenne's works, Mattheson's works, &c. Of special interest was a copy of Prætorius's 'Syntagma.'

Of works published in England we may mention Dowland's translation of 'Ornithoparcus his Micrologus' (1609), Morley's 'Introduction' (1597, 1608), Simpson's 'Division Violist' (three editions), and Mace's 'Musick's Monument,' with in addition a curious advertisement announcing its publication.

The practical music shown included several of the large service books, masses and motets by Lassus, Vittoria, &c., the 'Magnum Opus' containing 516 motets by de Lassus, the 'Florilegium' of Bodenschatz, Esclava's collection of Spanish music, which, though modern, is unfortunately very rare, several sets of English madrigals, Ravenscroft's 'Deuteromelia' and 'Melismata,' Dowland's 'Musical Banquet,' &c., &c.

At the conclusion of Mr. Matthew's most interesting paper, Mr. Southgate made a few remarks on the discourse and on the specimens shown, and threw out a suggestion that we might well in this country follow the example of Germany and reprint, or facsimile, some of the works that are out of print and unobtainable, though still of considerable interest.

MIDDLESBROUGH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Middlesbrough Musical Union, founded in 1882, has during the twenty-one years of its existence done some excellent work under the direction of that able and single-minded amateur, Mr. Kilburn, who has been its conductor from the first, and has prepared and directed each of the fifty-nine concerts given during that period. Under these circumstances, the Society naturally felt itself justified in celebrating with some state its coming of age, and accordingly a two-days' festival was planned and took place on the 22nd and 23rd ult. in the beautiful Town Hall. The programme of the three concerts was of quite remarkable interest, and in it one could not fail to recognise Mr. Kilburn's catholic taste and close knowledge of what is going on in the music of to-day.

There was no 'whole-programme' work, but the two important choral compositions were Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' and Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' the former a popular choice, the latter a plucky one, but justified in the result, for immense pains had evidently been taken by Mr. Kilburn in preparing the chorus, including the semi-chorus, which was supplied by members of his Bishop Auckland Society. There was also a novelty, so far as this country is concerned, in a cantata, 'The Page and the King's Daughter,' by Fritz Volbach, the well-known Mainz musician, whose symphonic poem, 'Easter,' has already been made welcome in our concert rooms. This cantata is a setting of a series of four ballads by Geibel, telling a romantic story which has furnished the occasion for some picturesque music in which love and anger, the chase, the dance, and the songs of the mermaids are dealt with by the composer with an invention that never wearies. There are three solo parts for soprano (Miss Agnes Nicholls), tenor (Mr. W. Green), and baritone (Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies), but they are not very important, or indeed very effective, and the bulk of the work is given to the chorus and orchestra.

Bach's fine cantata, 'Sleepers, wake,' was the only remaining choral work in the programme, the orchestral portions of which were of quite unusual interest. Of antique music we had a most delightful example in Philipp Emanuel Bach's Symphony in D, the first of the set written in 1776, a bright, individual work, showing great vigour and variety in the first and last of its three continuous movements. The other things were examples of contemporary art. Two movements from Bruckner's 'Romantic' Symphony illustrated the work of a composer who is unduly neglected by us, and showed his undeniable power and picturesque charm. Of Richard Strauss we had two samples, from his earliest and latest work, the Andante and Finale of his F minor Symphony (Op. 12), in which the influence of Brahms is apparent, and the Liebeszene from his last opera, 'Feuersnot,' in which the brilliance and complexity of his mature and individual style are manifested. Dvorák's delightful suite in D (Op. 39) for a (comparatively) small orchestra, and some familiar Wagner pieces, completed this most interesting and representative programme.

Next to the exceedingly interesting nature of the programme, what most struck one in this Festival was the careful thought which was evidenced, both in artistic completeness and in the thousand and one practical details that help to make things go smoothly. For the very thorough preparation of the various compositions Mr. Kilburn was of course responsible, and in 'Gerontius' one could see plainly how he had realized his responsibility. In this difficult work the singers were never at fault, but were so obviously at home with their parts that Dr. Elgar, who conducted, had no trouble in making them follow his beat. The demoniacal fugue, taken at a tremendous pace, was not merely grotesque, but approached the terrific, and the sublime was touched in the Purgatorial final scene. The semi-chorus was most refined and artistic, and the emotional yet reverent singing of Miss Muriel Foster as the Guardian Angel, and of Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies as the Angel of the Agony, contributed materially to the success of a most sympathetic and intelligent performance. The sixty-five members of the Hallé Orchestra were quite at their best in this work, with which they are now familiar. Another notable performance was that of Bach's 'Sleepers, wake,' the spirit of which Mr. Kilburn realized admirably, while Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies were most artistic soloists. In the 'Golden Legend,' with which the Festival came to an end, Madame Albani, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Dickon Wilson and Mr. Andrew Black appeared. Altogether a very high level was reached and maintained throughout the Festival, which in every respect did honour to the Society which promoted it, and to its excellent conductor.

'ANDRÉ CHÉNIER.'

Umberto Giordano has composed several operas, two or three of which have travelled to Germany, Russia, and, we believe, even America. His 'André Chénier,' originally produced at La Scala in 1896, is however the first of his works heard in England. It was recently performed for the first time at Manchester by the Carl Rosa Company, and afterwards on the 16th ult. at the Camden Town theatre. The work is termed a 'romantic' opera, and the story of the French poet who perished on the scaffold just before the close of the Reign of Terror is certainly not lacking in romance. As told however in the libretto by Luigi Illica, English version by Mr. Percy Pinkerton, it only really assumes dramatic interest in the last two of the four acts: in the trial of the hero before the Revolutionary Tribunal ending with the sentence of death passed on him, and in the final scene when, accompanied by Madeleine who, determined to die with him, has taken the place of the condemned Legray, they both sing of the immortal bond of love 'that binds us at the last.' There are some fine pages in the music, and yet on the whole it does not show signs of marked individuality. There is much Italian storm and stress, there are touches of Wagner both in the music and in the orchestration, and also natural reflections of various modern composers. Giordano is young, and time may very likely produce a stronger work; 'Fédora,' indeed, is mentioned as his best. The performance of 'André Chénier,' under the direction of Mr. Eugene Goossens, was good. Herr Julius Walther in the title-rôle, and Mr. Arthur Deane as Gerard, helped greatly towards the success of the piece—their parts, indeed, are the most prominent; and of Miss Lizzie Burgess as Madeleine favourable mention may be made.

The musical score is written for voice and piano. It begins with a key signature of two sharps (F# and C#) and a common time signature. The vocal parts enter with the lyrics "there, . . . Speak to my soul of heav - en, Of end - less". The piano accompaniment features a series of sixteenth-note runs in the right hand and a more rhythmic bass line in the left hand. The score includes dynamic markings such as ff (fortissimo) and sfz (sforzando). The piece concludes with a final chord in the piano and a double bar line.

COMPETITIONS.

NORTHAMPTON.

A choral competition, organized by the Hon. Mrs. C. R. Spencer, was held in the Town Hall and Corn Exchange, Northampton, on the 17th and 18th ult. The classes for children's choirs were not so successful as had been hoped from the number of entries, owing to some schools having to withdraw because of illness. In the adult classes there was a good number of entries and the singing showed progress compared with the performances of the previous year. Castle Ashby contributed a winning choir and Dallington (conducted by the Hon. Mrs. Spencer) also gained a first prize. A well-constituted choir from Kislisbury was successful in another section. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. A concert was given on the 18th ult. by the United Adult Choirs, assisted by Miss Agnes Nicholls, the Hon. Norah Dawnay, Mr. Haydn Wood (violin), and Mr. Plunket Greene. The programme included the part-song 'Lilian,' by Mr. S. P. Waddington, who conducted the concert. H.R.H. Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein distributed the prizes. Earl Spencer and the Right Hon. C. R. Spencer were present at the competition and concert.

STRATFORD.

The Stratford Musical Festival, now aged twenty-one, and held during the closing days of March, is more prosperous than ever. Not only were the entries in excess of last year—630 against 486—but they showed a marked improvement in the standard of attainment. A new feature this year was the competition for commercial choirs of from twenty-five to fifty voices, and although only one choir entered, this excellent idea will doubtless have more practical results as time goes on. It is estimated that 1,700 persons took part in the Festival—an unprecedented success. The educational advantages accruing therefrom—advantages which we have more than once commented upon—deserve the commendation of all well-wishers of the progress of popular music in the best sense of the term.

London and Suburban Concerts.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The concert given on March 26 at Queen's Hall does not call for lengthy notice. To be sure, it included the first performance in England of Herr Emil Sauer's second Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, with the composer at the keyboard, but the work is not of great artistic importance. Its principal theme possesses a distinctive didactic character, and is well designed for the style of treatment (that known as metamorphosis) invented by Liszt, but the music is marred by too apparent effort to produce effects frequently resulting in exaggerations. The concert opened with the first performance in London of Mr. Arthur Hervey's overture 'Youth,' conducted by the composer. As this was described in our columns on the occasion of its original production at the Norwich Festival last autumn, it is unnecessary to comment on the work further, but it should be added that a re-hearing confirmed the impressions recorded of this vivacious and inspiring music. The choice of Dvorák's Symphony (No. 4) in G is to be commended, and it was interpreted with fascinating crispness and finish under the able direction of Dr. Cowen. The engagement of Mr. Gordon Tanner to play the solo part of Beethoven's Violin Concerto was an error of judgment. Only artists of the first rank should be heard in such a masterpiece at the Philharmonic Society's concerts. The vocalist was Fräulein Rosa Olitzka, who sang very finely the aria 'Aus der Tiefe des Grames,' from Dr. Max Bruch's 'Achilleus.'

A pianoforte recital given on March 25 at Bechstein Hall by Mr. Frank Merrick, a native of Clifton and pupil of Professor Leschetitzky, deserves special mention. His interpretations of Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 26) and other classics justify the most sanguine expectations of his future, and the expression of the opinion that, intellectually and executively, young Mr. Merrick has in him the makings of a great artist. His future career will be watched with unusual interest.

Messrs. Broadwood concluded their first series of chamber concerts at St. James's Hall on the 2nd ult. The programme on this occasion does not call for comment, save that some excellent ensemble playing was heard from the 'Halir Quartet.' It is, however, most satisfactory to learn that these enjoyable concerts have been so greatly appreciated that a second series will be commenced on November 5.

Herr Wilhelm Backhaus gave his third concert at St. James's Hall on the 20th ult., when he played a good selection of pianoforte works intelligently and brilliantly, but also showed that he has yet much to acquire æsthetically before he can be reckoned amongst pianists of the first rank. He was assisted by Miss Alice Holländer and Mr. John Harrison, both gifted with exceptionally fine voices, the former a rich and powerful contralto, and the latter a tenor from whom much may be expected.

Herr Hegedüs, a Hungarian violinist, was heard last year, but to greater advantage on the 21st ult., when he gave an orchestral concert, admirably conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. Herr Hegedüs has great executive facility, and there was much that was excellent in his playing in Mozart's Concerto in D (Op. 121); but his future achievements will probably be greater. The orchestral works included Sir Charles Stanford's 'Irish Rhapsody,' No. 1.

Mr. Francis Harford presented a most praiseworthy programme at his fourth vocal recital at St. James's Hall on the 22nd ult., and his interpretations of Brahms's 'Verrath,' Schubert's 'Der Doppelgänger,' and a large number of songs by British composers, testified to advance in vocal skill and command of tone-colour. As usual, a feature of the scheme was the introduction of a number of new songs, the most notable of which were 'The Emigrant,' by Graham Peel, and 'Not eyes alone,' by Cecil Forsyth, both of which had to be sung twice.

It looks as if Dr. Elgar's 'Caractacus' were at last coming into its own. It is increasingly performed in the country, and now at last a metropolitan Society, brave and enterprising above its fellows, has offered Londoners this most Elgareque of the Malvern wizard's creations. To Mr. Allen Gill and his Finsbury Choral Association do we owe thanks for a performance, at the Northern Polytechnic Institute, on the 24th ult., which, considering the means available, was as complete, and presented as many admirable features as any similar 'suburban' performance we have ever heard. Mr. Gill had trained his chorus into strict obedience to his wishes, thorough knowledge of its duties, and infecting enthusiasm for a remarkable work. The tone was good, the attack unfaltering, and the spirit of the whole excellent. The strings, largely consisting of lady amateurs, were lacking in tone (though not in intonation or intelligence); hence the orchestral balance was faulty. At times the percussion was deafening, and the brass seemed to have evil designs on the substantial roof of the handsome hall. But these blemishes may be put down to an excess of enthusiasm over a truly gorgeous piece of scoring. The soloists, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Messrs. Lloyd Chandos, Ivor Foster, and Robert Radford, were first-rate. Where the quartet was so good it seems almost invidious to single out Mr. Ivor Foster for the great dignity (aided by splendid vocalization) which he imparted to the rôle of the hero. On the whole, an inspiring evening, reflecting credit upon this enterprising Society and its gifted conductor.

The Ealing Philharmonic Society concluded its sixth season with a most successful concert on March 25, when Haydn's ever-delightful 'Spring' received a very creditable rendering. The soloists were Miss Florence Holderness, Mr. Arthur Parsons, and Mr. Arthur Masters. Mr. E. Victor Williams conducted.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, April 8.

The opera is spending its last four weeks 'on the road,' as the theatrical phrase has it (we dare not say 'in the provinces' when the cities concerned are Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, and Pittsburgh), and metropolitan folk are enjoying a rest and indulging in reminiscences. The season lasted seventeen weeks, but unfortunately it ended with some of the promises made in the prospectus unfulfilled through unavoidable causes; but only one failure seemed really deplorable. The projected Mozart cycle would have been a proud, because a really artistic, achievement; but it was frustrated by the illness of Madame Eames. I spare the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES the names of all the operas given, but as a more-or-less correct indication of the tastes of the New York public I append a comparative list of composers: Wagner, with eight operas, had 27 performances; Verdi, with seven operas, 21; Gounod, with two, 29; Meyerbeer, with two, 8; Donizetti, with two, 7; Puccini, with two, 7; Leoncavallo, with one, 6; Mozart, with three, 4; Rossini, with one, 3; Bizet, with one, 3; Mancinelli, with one, 2; Miss Smyth, with one, 2; Mascagni, with one, 1. There were forty-five performances in Italian, twenty-nine in German, and twenty-six in French.

The metropolitan concert season has not been either as active or as interesting as its predecessors for several years. There were fewer visitors from abroad, and of these only Herr Hugo Heermann, the German violinist, proved to be of first-class attractiveness. His success was indubitable, however, especially in such centres of musical culture as New York and Boston. His best achievements were in the Beethoven and Brahms concertos; he also introduced Richard Strauss's concerto. New York has listened to a large number of concerts worthy of note since the beginning of last November. Of these forty-three were symphony concerts of the highest class, twenty-three concerts of chamber music (public, of course), sixteen choral concerts, twenty-three pianoforte recitals, twenty-nine song recitals, forty-three orchestral concerts of a popular character, and half-a-hundred or more entertainments that are difficult to classify. These figures are only approximately correct, since I am depending on the record in my own date-book and cannot tell how many affairs escaped record. Of choral works, performances of 'St. Paul,' 'Messiah' (Professor Prout's edition), and Elgar's 'Gerontius,' by the Oratorio Society, are to be noted.

Dr. Elgar's work made the most profound impression of any novelty of the last fifteen years, and for the first time in a longer period the Oratorio Society found reward in the attendance and appreciation bestowed upon a new work. The performance took place on March 26 under the direction of Mr. Frank Damrosch, with the solo parts in the hands of Miss Ada Crossley, Ellison Van Hoose and David Bispham, and a chorus of 350 voices and a small choir from the Musical Art Society—a body of professional singers. The orchestra numbered 80, and the performance was nothing short of brilliant in every respect. The public enthusiasm was so great after the performance that there was a wide expectation that the Society would repeat the work; but conservative counsels prevailed, and it was thought best to rest on the fragrant laurels garnered this season and revive the work next. Unless appearances are deceptive the Oratorio Society has added an attractive work to its permanent repertory. With a single exception the New York critics have placed Dr. Elgar in the forefront of living composers.

The first performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' took place in Chicago three days earlier than the New York production, by the Apollo Club, under the direction of Harrison Wild.*

The only other choral novelty of the New York season was George Henschel's 'Requiem,' which was brought forward at the Metropolitan Opera House by the Brooklyn Oratorio Society on February 26, under the direction of the composer (after preparation by Mr. Walter Henry Hall), for the benefit of a popular charity. The charitable feature of the enterprise ensured a wide and kindly hearing for the work, and it is to be repeated under Mr. Hall's direction in Brooklyn to-morrow. Other features of the choral season have been 'Elijah,' 'The Seasons,' Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' Verdi's 'Requiem,' Bruch's 'Fair Ellen,' Bach's 'Ein feste Burg,' Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' Berlioz's 'Sara, la Baigneuse,' Cherubini's a capella 'Credo,' Leonardo Leo's 'Miserere,' and Victoria's 'Pange lingua gloriosi.' The last six works were in the lists of the Musical Art Society, which has this season added another to its offsprings in Troy, N.Y. The first concert of the new Society devoted to unaccompanied vocal music gave its first concert on April 2, under the direction of James McLaughlin, and won immediate favour with the public. Its programme, modeled after that of the New York Society, contained Sweelinck's 'Psalm cxxxix,' Eccard's 'Presentation of Christ,' the old hymn 'Alla Trinita' harmonized by Dr. Burney, Palestrina's 'Gloria Patri,' Tchaikovsky's 'Pater noster,' Corsi's 'Adoramus te, Bortniansky's 'Cherubim Song,' Schubert's 'Christ is arisen,' and Morley's madrigal 'My bonnie lass she smileth.' At the last service for this season of the Boston Society under Wallace Goodrich the principal numbers of the programme were Lotti's 'Crucifixus' (in ten parts), Lasso's 'Tristis est anima mea,' Bach's motet for double chorus 'Komm' Jesu, komm,' and George W. Chadwick's 'Stabat Mater speciosa' for women's voices. Apropos of these announcements in the most serious and lovely field of choral endeavour it is a pleasure to state that the Bach Choir of Bethlehem, Pa., of whose fine festival I wrote extensively two years ago, will next month give a festival of six days' duration, at which the 'Christmas Oratorio,' the 'St. Matthew Passion' and the Mass in B minor will be given in full, besides five of the church cantatas and the second Brandenburg concerto grosso.

I must postpone a review of the rather extraordinary activity in the orchestral field till my next letter, when I shall have all the facts before me. It may be, too, that something significant may then be said about the future of one or two of these public-spirited enterprises. It is not without the bounds of possibility, deplorable as such a thing would be, that the Chicago organization, which is under the direction of the veteran Theodore Thomas, will be abandoned. An effort is making to raise a fund of 750,000 dollars to ensure its continuance, but the conditions of the subscription do not meet with great popular favour, and considerably less than the required sum has been signed. In the eleven years of the Orchestra's existence its concerts have resulted in an average deficit of 35,000 dollars a year.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

April 15.

Charpentier's much-famed 'Louise' has at last been given here. As a matter of fact there was more talk about it before the performance than there has been since that event; but this will not in any way affect its world-wide reputation. The composer eschews purely musical effects; he is manifestly in favour of reflective statements of prosaic character; moreover the story is too slight to furnish matter for a piece occupying a whole evening. Thus notwithstanding all the skill displayed by Charpentier, notwithstanding all his finely-cultivated feeling for word-painting, a sense of weariness is produced. The composer himself conducted an admirable performance, and yet the result was disappointing. The impersonation of Louise by Frau Schoder-Gutheil is especially worthy of mention.

Works by another French composer, César Franck, long since dead, are heard from time to time here, but without gaining firm footing in our concert life. The Bohemian Quartet has given his Pianoforte Quintet; the Brussels Quartet (Schörg, Daucher, Miry and Gaillard) his String Quartet in D, all the movements of which are based on the same theme; and the Concertverein his symphonic poem, 'Les Éloïdes.' Then in former years the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde gave 'Les Béatitudes,' and Rosé the Trio in F sharp minor—and yet all these without lasting result. The Brussels Quartet, which appeared here for the first time, is strong in the matter of technique, and their magnificent instruments attracted the notice of connoisseurs. They do not, however, interpret music with that spirituality which is so distinctive a characteristic of the Joachim or the Bohemian players.

The young and favourite vocalist, Fräulein Stägemann, daughter of the Leipzig theatre director, whose name is very well known throughout Germany, has achieved a brilliant success. Her voice is not powerful, but it is of extremely pleasant quality, and thoroughly well trained. She sings with taste, and is especially successful in rendering songs of a lyrical character. Dr. Wüllner, who is held in highest esteem in the German Empire, but as yet has not achieved great success in Vienna, offered a most marked contrast. In his two vocal recitals—of which one was devoted to Hugo Wolff, the other to Brahms—he sang in a too obvious, too disjunctive a style; there were many fine effects in detail, but on the whole the result was not satisfactory.

Of other vocalists I must just mention two; as yet they do not enjoy a great reputation, but both give good promise for the future. One is Frau Bricht-Pyllemann; the other, Fräulein Helene Durigo; the former, a native of this city, is an excellent lieder singer, but in Brahms's 'Requiem' and in Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, at the Singakademie and Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde concerts, she gave proof of higher gifts. Fräulein Helene Durigo sings with great earnestness and intelligence. She has a fine contralto voice, and in Brahms's 'Rhapsody,' sung at a concert of the vocal society of railway officials, she astonished her audience. The performance of the Bach 'Passion' (mentioned above) was under the direction of Herr Löwe. The other vocalists were Herr Fenten from Brunswick, and Miss Walker from the Court opera. Interesting was the revival in the orchestra of the oboe d'amore, an instrument which, on account of its softer tone, Bach especially preferred in the lyrical portions of his church music.

No monthly report would be complete without including a pianist; so a lady from Warsaw, Catherine Jaczynowska, may be named as having achieved marked success in concertos by Chopin and Schumann; she plays with intelligence and feeling, and her technique is excellent. Finally, the Conservatorium concert deserves mention. The performance, especially of the ensemble numbers, testified on the one hand to the talent of the pupils, and on the other to the ability of the director, Richard von Perger.

Dr. Lawrence Walker closed his season of Chamber Concerts by the Seventh Concert on the 2nd ult. The performers were Mr. Montagu Nathan (violin), Miss W. Burnett (viola), Mr. Clyde Twelvetees (violoncello), and Dr. Walker (pianoforte). The principal work performed was Dvorák's Quartet in E flat (Op. 87), which received an intelligent rendering.

Another musical event worth recording has been the inauguration, on the 16th ult., of a fine new three-manual concert organ presented by the family of the late Mr. William Charles Mitchell to the Queen's College. This instrument, built by Mr. Walker, of Bradford, contains forty-one speaking stops and is equipped with all modern improvements. Its capabilities were exhibited to the fullest extent by Mr. Alfred Hollins, the well-known organist of Edinburgh. Miss McKisack, an excellent local singer possessed of a very fine and well-trained alto voice, sang a few well-selected songs. In connection with this handsome gift, the Queen's College authorities have founded a lectureship of music, and appointed Dr. Lawrence Walker to be the first holder of it. The President, Dr. Hamilton, takes a deep interest in this new addition to the College curriculum, and hopes within no long time to have a fully-endowed chair of music in the flourishing College which is under his care. We wish him every success.

Dr. Ebenezer Prout gave, on the 17th ult., an interesting lecture on the Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues of John Sebastian Bach to a large and deeply-interested audience, invited by the local section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians.

The ninth Halford concert, on March 24, was an important function, for then was introduced for the first time in the provinces the 'Heldenleben' of Richard Strauss. The work had been long in rehearsal, and was admirably performed. The interest it excited was very great, but the music was not unanimously accepted as true art. At the same concert Mackenzie's Overture to 'The Cricket on the Hearth' was produced with success, and Dr. Brodsky gave a fine rendering of Bach's Violin Concerto in A minor. At the tenth concert, on the 7th ult., the 'Heldenleben' was repeated, and the audience was the largest of the season. The work again made a great impression. Elgar's beautiful Variations on an original theme for orchestra, and Beethoven's Concerto in G for pianoforte and orchestra, with Mr. Leonard Borwick as soloist, were the other features of a fine concert. The Halford Concerts Society still lacks adequate support, but they intend persevering, and with so able a conductor as Mr. Halford success must at last crown their efforts.

A concert given to the members of the Midland Institute by the Amateur Orchestral Society late in March deserves notice, inasmuch as it introduced a work by a composer hitherto unknown, I fancy, in England. This was a dramatic overture based on De Musset's poem 'Rolla,' a work of considerable merit, and the composer was Mr. C. E. Pritchard, born in France, and musically educated at the Paris Conservatoire. The performance was conducted by the composer, who was most cordially received. The remaining pieces in the programme—Svendens's Second Symphony and Spohr's Overture to 'Jessonda'—went well under Mr. E. W. Priestley, acting for Mr. Granville Bantock, who was conducting a performance of Elgar's 'Gerontius' at Wolverhampton that evening.

Another notable event in our musical season was the performance of Elgar's 'Gerontius' by the Festival Choral Society on March 26. The work had been carefully prepared, and everything done to secure a successful and artistic rendering. A picked body of singers formed the semi-chorus and, placed in front of the band, the singers sustained the pitch, and the trying Kyrie went admirably. Throughout the chorus sang splendidly, amply redeeming any shortcomings at the Festival performance of 1900. The vocal principals were Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Andrew Black. While all did well, to Miss Muriel Foster must be awarded the palm. Dr. Sinclair conducted with consummate skill. The Town Hall was crowded in every part.

The Midland Musical Society gave their annual performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' in the Town Hall on the evening of Good Friday (the 10th ult.), when the building was packed with a most attentive and reverent audience. Of late years the performances had fallen off in quality, but Mr. A. J. Cotton on this occasion retrieved the reputation of the chorus. The principals were Messrs. W. Whitehouse and B. Sanders (narrators), and W. Bennett; Miss Rosina Buckmann, Miss Edythe Draper, and Miss Grace Ivell.

On Tuesday in Holy Week (the 7th ult.), Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was performed at St. Martin's Church under the direction of Dr. W. J. Reynolds, and on Good Friday the same work was given at Wretham Road Church, Handsworth. Other Good Friday performances were Gaul's 'Passion Service,' at St. Augustine's, Edgbaston, and St. James's, Handsworth; Lee Williams's 'Gethsemane,' at Moseley Parish Church; and Maunder's 'Penitence, Pardon, and Peace,' at Moseley Road Congregational Church.

At the Midland Institute School of Music the second annual Wind Instruments Concert was given on the 18th ult. The performers were professors in the School, and the concert was an object-lesson to the students. The concerted pieces were Reinecke's Trio in A minor (Op. 188) for oboe, horn, and pianoforte, and Beethoven's Quintet in E flat (Op. 16) for pianoforte and wind instruments.

The last of the Clifton chamber concerts for the season was given at the Victoria Rooms on the 3rd ult., and attracted a large audience. The executants were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). The compositions executed were Haydn's Quartet in G (No. 5); Brahms's Sonata in E (Op. 99) for pianoforte and violoncello; and Christian Sinding's Quintet in E minor for pianoforte and strings. These works were effectively rendered and afforded much gratification. The vocalist was Mrs. Henry J. Wood, who was accorded a cordial reception, and sang charmingly to Mr. Henry J. Wood's masterful accompaniments.

In the second concert of the Bristol North Choral Society, given at the Victoria Rooms on the 4th ult., considerable variety was manifested. The principal works were Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm ('Come, let us sing') and Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' both of which were nicely interpreted under the direction of Mr. J. Bending. The principal vocalists in the former were Miss L. Gillespie, Mrs. Kenway (a member of the choir), and Mr. Harry Stubbs. Mr. F. S. Gardner was leader of the band, and Mr. C. W. Stear (of the Church of the Holy Nativity) was at the organ.

Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' was the chief feature of a concert given in the large hall of the Blind Asylum on the 10th ult. under the direction of Mr. Augustus Simmons (organist of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church). The soloists were Madame Eva Hartshorne, Madame Gertrude Barton, Mr. Philip Mahoney, and Mr. Stuart Higgs. The band was led by Mr. E. Jacobs.

The series of Popular Concerts arranged by Mr. C. W. Stear terminated for the season on the 11th ult., when there was a large attendance at the Victoria Rooms. Mr. Harry Darbey (violinist) conducted a suite for strings, his own composition, which was well received, and another production which won favour was Romberg's 'Toy' Symphony. Mr. F. S. Gardner was the leader of the band. The vocalists were Miss Edith Evans and Mr. C. F. Hutchinson. Mr. Stear was conductor, and his pupil, Mr. Bertie Wright, was at the organ.

The Clevedon Philharmonic Society on the 15th ult. gave its Spring concert under the direction of Mr. E. Cook (of Bristol). In the first part Gade's 'Psyche' was rendered, the soloists being Miss Eveline Gerrish, Miss Gretchen Wickenden, Miss Bellew, Mr. Ernest Peel Law, and Mr. J. W. Davey. The orchestra, composed principally of Bristol players, was led by Mr. F. S. Gardner. The work was nicely interpreted and much appreciated.

The Bristol and Clifton Philharmonic Society gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms on the 18th ult., the first part being a performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' Miss Edith Evans, Miss May Wood, Mr. Henry Plevy, and Mr. Montague Worlock were the soloists. Mr. Ernest Lane was the leader of the band, and Mr. Edward Pavey directed the rendering, which was highly creditable.

A large audience assembled at the Victoria Rooms on the 22nd ult., when the Clifton Choral Society gave Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' The soloists were Madame Conly, Miss Marion Battishill, Mr. T. Child, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. F. S. Gardner was leader of the orchestra, who in the second part of the concert played Wagner's 'Ride of the Valkyries' and Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody. The conductor was Mr. F. W. Rootham.

On the 6th ult. the Dublin Orchestral Society gave their last concert. Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite No. 1, Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor (soloist, Herr Adolph Wilhelm), Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony made up the programme. This Society was started some five seasons ago, and now, owing to lack of funds, has come to an end. An effort to reconstitute it is being made, which it is to be hoped will be successful. The admirable orchestra which Signor Esposito has trained is quite worthy of the support of our local amateurs.

The Orpheus Choral Society, under the conductorship of Dr. Culwick, gave on the 3rd ult. a concert of madrigals, glees, and part-songs. Miss Edith Marks (soprano), Mr. Redfern (flute), and Miss Annie Lord (pianoforte), were the soloists. Miss Constance Greene, a talented amateur, played the accompaniments.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Much that takes place during the waning of the musical season is of vital interest to the musician who justly recognises and values the great work performed by the various Church Choral Societies. Not fashion guides their steps, but love of music for music's sake; and in the growth of these choral bodies and the increased number of participants in their work—prepared for and backed-up by the great work done in the schools—lies the real hope of our becoming, in the true sense of the phrase, a musical people. And these societies are, happily, not lacking in encouragement and support. Their congregations and friends rally loyally on their occasions of public performance, and indeed in this respect they are more happily circumstanced than the larger choral organizations. To mention only a few—Grange Parish Church (conductor, Mr. C. H. Hazelhurst, gave Haydn's 'Passion Music' in excellent style; Cowgate United Free Church Choir, with orchestral accompaniment, performed Barnby's 'Rebekah' and the 'Festgesang' of Mendelssohn in most creditable fashion; and the choir of Mayfield Road Church gave a good rendering of 'Judas Maccabæus.' Mr. I. Grossett deserves the greatest credit for the good work he is doing in connection with Fountainbridge Mission Church, situated in one of the poorest districts. Considering the material of which his choir is composed, the rendering given to Pattison's 'Good Shepherd' and a miscellaneous programme was most praiseworthy. A similar labour in a like neighbourhood is that of Mr. James Dickson's in connection with Greyfriars Mission Church, Grassmarket. The work performed here was Bradbury's cantata 'Daniel'—by no means ambitious music, but quite creditably ambitious in the circumstances. The choir of Morningside Congregational Church showed the results of careful training in their performance of Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus,' on March 19. An efficient orchestra played the accompaniments and contributed three pieces to the second part of the programme. Mr. Swan Watson was conductor. Another Morningside Church—North Morningside United Free—gave its annual recital on the 7th ult. The chief work was 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' and there was a miscellaneous second part. The concert was given in the church itself—a remarkably fine building, which gave the voices every chance—and the result was an admirable and spirited performance, which reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. Scott Jupp.

Most important of all the church performances was that of the choir of St. Mary's Cathedral in Haydn's 'Passion Music.' Mr. Collinson obtained a solemn and impressive reading of this beautiful work from both choir and orchestra, and the beautiful building intensified the devotional effect.

The annual concert of Mr. Millar Craig's choir took place on March 31. The choir worthily maintained their traditions by their excellent performance of Cherubini's 'Requiem,' Part II. of Max Bruch's 'Frithjof,' and Grieg's 'At the cloister gate.' The soloists were members of the choir, with the exception of Mr. Alfred Young, who sang 'O ruddier than the cherry' in spirited and finished fashion. A small orchestra, led by Mr. Waddell, effectively supplied the accompaniments. The Western Choral Society, of which Mr. Gavin Godfrey is conductor, gave Bennett's 'May Queen' and a selection of Scottish part-songs on the 11th ult. This is quite a young Society, but it already sings with much promise. Mr. Moonie's choir repeated their performance of 'The Creation' and 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' in the Central Halls on the 4th ult. The large audience seemed to be specially struck by Coleridge-Taylor's lovely work, which must have been a novelty to most of them.

An event of much local interest was the farewell concert, on the 2nd ult., of 'The Harmonists,' a quartet of male singers (modelled on the lines of the Meister Glee Singers) who have largely contributed to the enjoyment of Edinburgh audiences for some years past. It is with regret that we part with this artistic combination, of whose performances refinement and humour were ever conspicuous features. Aided by several local celebrities, they made their adieu in a programme of characteristic excellence. Miss Alice Bell's vocal recital aroused a good deal of interest, and she had the valuable aid of Messrs. Maurice Sons (violinist) and Robert Burnett (baritone). Her voice is a soprano, light but agreeable, and her method and insight are both good. Her songs, which covered a wide range of composers, were generally well sung.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The fourth and last of this season's Halstead-Verbruggen Chamber Concerts took place on March 23 before a good audience of subscribers and the general public. The programme included Beethoven's String Quartet (Op. 59, No. 3), César Franck's Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin, and Sinding's Quintet in E minor. In the sonata, Messrs. Halstead and Verbruggen made a distinguished appearance, and in the quartet the ensemble was irreproachable, especially in the slow movement, which was played with charming delicacy.

On March 24 the choir of Claremont Church (Mr. Hutton Malcolm, organist and choirmaster) performed Theodore Dubois's carefully-written but somewhat uninspiring oratorio, 'The seven last words of Christ.' The work, which is set for soprano, tenor, and baritone soloists and chorus, was produced in Paris in 1867, and although frequently performed in France during Lent, has not before been heard in this country. The solo music which forms a great part of the work was well given by Miss Macfarlane and Messrs. Adams and Malcolm, and the members of the choir sang the choruses quite creditably. The performance of the oratorio was preceded by an interesting organ recital which included Guilmaut's seventh Organ Sonata.

The Amateur Orchestral Society's concert on March 26 was one of the best we have yet heard from this accomplished body of instrumentalists. The string section of the band, composed largely of young ladies who devote much time to practice, is excellent, and the brass and wood-wind (in which amateur combinations are often defective) are unusually good. The chief number on the programme was Max Bruch's Violin Concerto (No. 1) in G minor, in which the solo part was brilliantly played by Mr. Max Mossel, whose re-appearance in Glasgow was welcomed by a host of old friends. The overture to 'Der Freischütz' and Mackenzie's ballade 'La belle dame sans merci' were especially well played, and the whole performance reflected much credit on Mr. W. T. Hoeck, the able conductor of the Society.

The first concert of the newly-formed Hamilton Choral Union took place on March 30, when a very good rendering of the 'Messiah' (Prout's edition) was given under the experienced direction of Mr. T. S. Drummond. On the 7th ult. the Choral Institute in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association gave Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' under the energetic direction of Mr. R. L. Reid. The chorus, numbering 450 voices, sang with praiseworthy accuracy and precision, and the accompaniments were effectively played by a capital orchestra supplemented by Mr. Thomas Berry at the organ. In the solo music Messrs. J. F. S. Adams and Charles Tree shared the honours.

The Cheltenham Musical Festival Society gave on the 2nd ult. a fine performance of the 'Messiah' at the Winter Gardens. The soloists were Madame Siviter, Miss Susanne Palmer, Miss Bertha Salter, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. R. Radford, the trumpet obbligato in the solo 'The trumpet shall sound' being finely played by Mr. J. Solomon. The band was led by Mr. E. G. Woodward and Mr. Lewis Hann, and under the able conductorship of Mr. Matthews, the rendering of the oratorio gave great pleasure to a very large and representative audience.

During the two years of its existence, the Gloucestershire Orchestral Society has made remarkable progress, both in numbers and in efficiency. Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, with the valued assistance of Mr. W. H. Reed as assistant conductor and instructor, has gathered together a band of amateurs, which any man might be proud to direct. The second concert of the Society was given on the 15th ult. in the Shire Hall, Gloucester, before a large and most appreciative audience. The works performed were Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Sérénade for Strings (Élégie and Valse) by Tschaiikovsky, Ambroise Thomas's 'Mignon' Gavotte, Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture, Vorspiel from 'Hänsel und Gretel' by Humperdinck, and three Bavarian Dances (Op. 27) by Elgar. Mr. W. H. Reed contributed two violin solos, Nocturne (Chopin-Sarasate) and 'Canzonetta' (D'Ambrosio), and the solo vocalist on the occasion was Miss Alice Holländer, who made a very pleasant impression by her artistic singing. Mr. A. W. Vine, organist of Tewkesbury Abbey, proved a careful and sympathetic accompanist.

Miss Edith Lavington, a promising soprano, gave a successful concert at Cheltenham on the 16th ult. at the Victoria Rooms. She sang several solos most intelligently and acceptably, and she was assisted by Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. H. Lane Wilson, Mr. Herbert Grover (vocalists); Miss Isabel Hirschfeld (pianoforte); and Mr. J. E. R. Teague (violoncello); with Mr. James Capener as an efficient accompanist.

At the annual concert of the Cirencester Choral Society on the 14th ult., which is ably conducted by Mr. A. H. Gibbons, organist of the Abbey Church, good performances were given of Bennett's 'May Queen' and Stanford's 'The Revenge.' Mr. E. G. Woodward led an efficient band, and Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Eynon Morgan and Mr. H. Miller were the soloists.

The Dursley Choral Society is to be congratulated on the successful concert given at the Victoria Hall on the 15th ult. Mr. A. W. Keys conducted a capital performance of Mozart's Twelfth Mass and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea.' The chorus numbered seventy and there was a small but efficient band. The soloists were Miss Edith Evans, Miss Fanny Stephens, Mr. F. Norcup and Mr. Lightowler. Mr. Keys is encouraged by the result of the concert to continue the good work he is doing in this district.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The predominating feature of the past month has been the activity of the various choral societies. The Liverpool and District Methodist Choral Union on March 31 gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' a work which has not been heard here for several years. It is interesting to remember that the first English performance of 'St. Paul' was given in St. Peter's Church (now the Cathedral Church of Liverpool) in 1836, the conductor on that occasion being Sir George Smart. The Union, by its admirable revival at the Philharmonic Hall, added a new lustre to its already excellent reputation. The chorus work was distinguished by good attack, fine warmth of tone and marked regard and care for the nicenesses of modulation. Mr. Percival H. Ingram who directed deserves no measured praise for the excellently balanced performance. The principals were Miss Maggie Purvis, Madame Alice Lamb, Mr. Trevor Evans, and Mr. Fowler Burton; the leader was Mr. J. W. Collinson, and the organist was Mr. G. E. Collier, whilst the orchestra and chorus numbered 350. I may say that the splendid presentment of Mendelssohn's oratorio has had the effect of directing the attention of some other of our organizations to the work, and next season will probably see more than one Society at work upon it.

On the 4th ult. the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union at the Philharmonic Hall offered a most worthy performance of Handel's 'Samson,' the principals being Madame Bertha Rossow, Madame Juanita Jones, Mr. William Green, Mr. John Henry, and Mr. David Hughes, whilst the conductor was Mr. Harry Evans, of Dowlais. Vigour and brilliance of tone characterized the choral-singing, and the chief vocalists gave of their best. Mr. Vasco V. Akeroyd led the orchestra, and Mr. Robert Harvey was at the organ. The Liverpool and District Baptist Choral Society, which was formed less than six months ago, gave their first performance on March 26. They put forward Gade's 'The Erl-King's Daughter' and Stainer's 'The Daughter of Jairus.' The present numerical strength of the choir is 200, and the balance is nicely adjusted. Enthusiasm was the feature of this first concert, and when that excellent quality is held in a little firmer control the Baptist Society will do still better. Miss Maggie Cook, Miss Edith Randles, Mr. Tom Barlow, and Mr. W. H. Atkinson were the principals. The leader was Mr. J. W. Collinson, the organist Mr. Edward Watson, the accompanist Mr. H. Glynn-Wylie, and the conductor, who has worked industriously for the well-being of this new Society, was Mr. Thomas Rimmer.

On Good Friday the Liverpool Musical Society offered Gounod's 'Redemption,' at St. George's Hall, the artists being Madame Emily Squire, Miss Jessie Rutherford, Miss Edith Leslie, Mr. Henry Plevy and Mr. Charles Tree. The band and chorus numbered 350. Dr. A. L. Peace was at the organ, Mr. J. W. Collinson led the orchestra, and Mr. H. A. Branscombe conducted. A very large audience enjoyed the careful performance. The choir of St. Andrew's Church on March 29 rendered J. H. Maunder's singularly effective cantata 'Penitence, Pardon, and Peace.' Good work was done by all concerned, and Mr. Maunder's composition made a decided impression. The North Liverpool Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. F. J. Routledge, sang Macfarren's 'May Day' on March 26 at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Foley Street.

The 129th concert of the Societa Armonica occurred on March 27, when, as usual, Mr. Vasco V. Akeroyd directed the orchestra. Richard Strauss's Symphony in F minor (Op. 12) was then played for the first time in Liverpool. The swiftly-changing features of this noteworthy composition were, under Mr. Akeroyd's studious care, done full justice to. Miss Pauline St. Angelo lent distinction to the solo part in Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto (No. 2) in G minor, and the programme also included the overture to the 'Die Meistersinger,' a number from Elgar's suite 'In the Bavarian Highlands,' and some songs, ably rendered by Mr. Webster Millar.

Mr. Frank Bertrand and Mr. Carl Fuchs put forward an interesting programme at their concert at the College of Music on the 2nd ult., and delighted a large audience therewith. Mr. F. C. Nicholls acted as accompanist. Under the auspices of the University Extension Society a concert devoted to Russian National Music was given on March 31 in the Croylands Street Schools—an interesting occasion which attracted a good audience. Mr. E. Rimbault Dibdin, whose name is doubtless familiar to readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES, has composed a modest but particularly effective School Cantata entitled 'The Revolt that Failed.' It is written for two-part chorus and soloists, and it was admirably performed on March 26 at the Manor Road Concert Hall, Liscard.

The annual festival of the Welsh Congregational Choir Union took place on March 26, with a vocal strength of 650, all the important Cymric places of worship in the district having supplied their quota. Mr. Hugh Ellis deserves warm praise for the festival choir's training, the singing being characterized by resolution, sharpness of attack, and markedly good modulation. Mr. Harry Evans (of Dowlais) conducted, and Mr. J. E. Roberts was at the organ, the venue being Chatham St. C. M. Church.

Mr. W. B. Brierly gave an interesting chamber concert in the West Kirby Public Hall on the 20th ult., when he was assisted by Mr. Theodore Lawson, Mrs. Brierly, and Mr. G. F. Collinson. Interest centred in the performance (for the first time) of a string quartet by the concert-giver. Mr. Brierly is a musician of no little scholarship, and his work has features of uncommon attractiveness. Miss Bertha Guthrie was the vocalist.

An interesting scheme concerning Irish music is in process of formation, under the auspices of the Liverpool Council of the United Irish League. It is proposed to hold a festival devoted to Irish music early this month, when items illustrating Hibernian harmony from the time of the 15th and 16th centuries to the present day will be put forward by prominent artists and by the new Irish Choir. The prospect is creating considerable interest amongst the large Irish population in and around this city and generally amongst our musical public.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Though Manchester has had considerably better opportunities than London to make the acquaintance of Dr. Richter's versatile genius as cicerone among the byways of musical art, it was with some astonishment that we saw the announcement of the concert ending with a Strauss waltz, and consisting throughout of dance pieces, that he gave this year, after the close of the regular Hallé series, in aid of the Pension and Benevolent Fund. Weber's 'Invitation,' played according to the Berlioz arrangement, was the best piece in the first part, and the two Slavonic Dances by Dvorák given later were also admirable; but the programme on the whole sounded a little thin. As usual on this annual occasion, there was an immense audience in the gallery, while the so-called 'dress seats' revealed the sad fact that a considerable proportion of the subscribers fail to support the Pension Fund. With this concert the Manchester musical season proper may be said to have closed, though there have been a few later events of special interest, among which the opera recital by students of the Royal Manchester College on March 28 deserves special mention. In Nicolai's 'Merry Wives of Windsor' a very happy selection had been made, and except for the inevitable disparity between the wind and the insufficiently numerous strings, the orchestral performance was good, and the young singers, all present or past students, acquitted themselves admirably. The chief honours fell to Messrs. Fowler Burton and Frank Barker (pupils of Mr. Acton), who as Falstaff and Ford respectively did full justice to their highly animated parts, which are among the very best examples of the buffo style. An excellent group of representatives for the three heroines was found in Miss Hilda de Angelis Johnson, Miss Ellen Sellars, and Mrs. Webb, who were fully equal to the nimble entries and intricate passage-work of the concerted pieces. An English version of the text had been specially prepared for the performance, which Dr. Brodsky conducted.

On March 27 the Moody-Manners Company revived Gounod's 'Romeo and Juliet' with good stage-craft as usual, and Mr. Manners sang effectively as the Friar. The most important event in the following week, when the Carl Rosa Company occupied the Queen's Theatre, was the first performance in England of Giordano's 'André Chénier'—an opera with a story of French Revolution times, pretty strongly resembling 'The Only Way' and other well-known dramas. The music has a certain bustling animation, homage being rendered to Wagner

The best feature of the performance was the Gérard Mr. Arthur Deane, who rejoices in the possession of a fine baritone voice.

On the 1st ult. a concert was given in Bolton by the Amateur Orchestral Society that Mr. Andrew Morris founded some twelve years ago. The ambitious programme included the 'Tannhäuser' Overture and a Suite by Rimsky Korsakoff, and these difficult compositions were attacked in a spirited manner, the amateur character of the combination being suggested more by a certain weakness of tone in the strings than by any such faults as dragging and scamping. Another amateur orchestral concert took place at Southport on the 3rd ult. Here the programme, consisting exclusively of modern fanciful pieces, was highly interesting, and the performance under Mr. R. H. Aldridge seemed in some respects almost too good for amateurs, though it was less satisfactory in the two Elgar marches than in the same composer's 'Cockaigne,' Humperdinck's 'Dream Music' (from 'Hänsel und Gretel'), and Tchaikovsky's 'Nutcracker' Suite. Vocal selections well in keeping with the rest of the fine programme were given by Miss Grainger Kerr, with orchestral accompaniment—an unusual feature of amateur concerts in this part of the world—and an audience completely filling the Cambridge Hall listened appreciatively.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The performance in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union on March 25 was chiefly remarkable for its magnificent choral display. The sublime double-choruses, which are so prominent a feature of the work, were sung with that steadiness and precision only obtainable in the best trained choirs, whilst for quality of tone and purity of intonation the performance has seldom been equalled in the district. Following the precedent of the Handel Festival of 1894, the oratorio was preceded by the Funeral Anthem 'The ways of Zion do mourn.' The accompaniments were played by the Hallé Orchestra, and the soloists were Miss Jenny Taggart, Miss Rana Taggart, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Samuel Masters, Mr. Herbert Parker and Mr. Arthur Lambert. Mr. James M. Preston conducted with remarkable success. The work was repeated in popular form on the 1st ult., with organ accompaniment only, for which Mr. Preston was responsible, the soloists being Miss Esmé Etherden, Miss Bertha Salter, and Mr. Henry Brearley, and the conductor Mr. Thomas Wilkinson.

On the 3rd ult. the Hexham Choral Society gave a performance of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' with the assistance of a small orchestra led by Mr. J. H. Beers. The soloists were Miss Mary McDiarmid, Miss Mimi Beers, Mr. D. Gibson and Mr. W. Donaldson Spark. Mr. W. J. Robson presided at the organ, and Mr. R. Seaton conducted.

The Newcastle Postal Telegraph Choral Society gave Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Meg Blane' and Spohr's 'God, Thou art great' in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on March 26. The solo portions of Spohr's cantata were sung by Miss Winifred Wynne, Miss Emily Hart, Mr. Edwin Kellett and Mr. William Thornton. Mr. J. E. Hutchinson conducted.

On the same date, in the Mechanics' Institute, Jarrow, the Jarrow Philharmonic Society performed Professor Prout's 'King Alfred,' with Miss Ethel Lovegrove, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. John Nutton in the solo parts. Mr. Alfred Wall led the orchestra, and Mr. John E. Jeffries conducted.

Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis' was performed by the Blyth Philharmonic Society in the Alexandra Hall, Blyth, on the 15th ult., under the direction of Mr. Joseph Firth. The soloists were Miss Florrie Roscoe, Miss Lakin, and Mr. Tom Child.

One of the most important musical events of the past month in this district was the performance in the Town Hall, Newcastle, by the Newcastle Vocal Society, on the 2nd ult., of a new sacred cantata, entitled 'The Annunciation,' by Mr. John E. Jeffries, organist of Newcastle Cathedral. The work contains much effective scoring for both voices and orchestra, and created a most favourable impression, several numbers being enthusiastically applauded. The solos were entrusted to Miss Perceval Allen, Mrs. Fisher Heath, Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. Hargreaves Hudson. Mr. J. H. Beers led the orchestra and Mr. Jeffries conducted. The rendering of the new work was in every respect most praiseworthy, and the composer is fully entitled to congratulation both upon the excellence of his composition and the effective manner in which it was produced.

On March 30 the Benwell Choral Society gave a performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen,' under Mr. J. E. Hutchinson. The soloists were Miss M. Gardner, Miss Jean Miller, Mr. Edwin Kellett, and Mr. N. Laycock. Mr. J. A. Rowell was the accompanist.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The annual performance of the 'Messiah' on Good Friday attracted, as usual, a large audience at St. Andrew's Hall. The principals were Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Henry Frankiss, and Mr. Charles Knowles. The band and chorus numbered 250 performers, and Dr. Bunnett conducted.

On Easter Monday a very interesting organ recital was given in Norwich Cathedral by Dr. G. J. Bennett, organist of Lincoln Cathedral. His programme included selections from Bach, Mendelssohn, Wagner, Meyerbeer, Guilmant, Widor, Callaerts, and Wolstenholme. Mrs. Wainwright and Mr. Albert Archdeacon contributed sacred songs.

On the 16th ult. two performances were given at the Cathedral before audiences which filled nave, aisles, and triforia. The Norwich Philharmonic Society and the Norwich Choral Society joined their forces for the occasion. The programme in the afternoon included Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture, Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and 'Song of Miriam,' Sir George Martin's 'Holiest, breathe an evening blessing,' sung unaccompanied with great refinement by the Cathedral choir, and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' (solo, Miss de Berna). In the evening 'The Creation' (parts 1 and 2) was given. Soloists, Miss de Berna, Mr. S. Hemmings, and Mr. Maitland. Dr. Bunnett presided at the organ, Dr. Bates conducted both performances, and Mr. F. W. B. Noverre led the band.

The Yarmouth Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. Haydon Hare, gave a good concert on the 16th ult., when Smart's oratorio 'Jacob' was performed. The principals engaged were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Nellie Cockrill, Mr. J. Reed and Mr. Dan Price, and Mr. C. W. Moss was leader.

Mr. Richard Lowne conducted a very successful concert at St. Mary's Chapel Schoolroom on the 9th ult., when the principal item was F. Cunningham Woods' cantata 'King Harold,' and instrumental music was contributed by Mrs. Carter (pianoforte), Miss Carter (violin), and Mr. Oscar Carter (violoncello).

A well-deserved presentation was made on Easter Tuesday to Mr. Walter Lain, organist for the past twenty-one years of St. Stephen's Church, Norwich, which consisted of a purse of gold and illuminated address. The vicar of the parish, the Rev. Dundas Harford, presided and gave an interesting account of former organists of St. Stephen's. Miss Bignold, one of the lady parishioners, made the presentation in felicitous terms, and Mr. F. Oddin Taylor and Mr. F. W. B. Noverre testified to the great ability and zeal shown by Mr. Lain in the discharge of his duties as organist and choirmaster.

Mr. Herbert Walenn, who has been appointed to a professorship at the Royal Academy of Music, is relinquishing the position of violoncellist in the Kruse Quartet, with which he has been so worthily associated since its commencement four years ago.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The West Bridgford Choral Society on March 26, concluded a successful season with a performance, very much above the average, of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha.' The solos were undertaken by Miss Edith Serpell and Mr. Haigh Jackson. The chorus and orchestra, in number over a hundred, gave a satisfactory account of themselves, under the direction of Mr. J. B. Lyddon.

The Stapleford Choral Society rendered Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' on March 31. The artists were Miss Gertrude Crisp, Miss Eunice Paulson, Mr. Killingley and Mr. Harry Reynolds. Mr. Wyatt presided at the organ and Mr. George Spence conducted.

The last orchestral concert of the season in Nottingham was given by Mr. Arthur Richards on the 4th ult., when he was assisted by a group of some forty local performers. The programme was decidedly ambitious, containing Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte Concerto, with Miss Alice Hogg as soloist. The highest credit is due to Mr. Richards for the careful and artistic performance of a trying programme, and Madame Annie Norledge, the vocalist, rendered her songs, with orchestral accompaniment, with keen artistic feeling.

Within the last few weeks good musical work has been done in various Nottingham churches—'St. Paul' (Mendelssohn) at the Tabernacle, 'Hymn of Praise' (Mendelssohn) at Shakespeare Street Free Church, 'Crucifixion' (Stainer) at St. John's Church, and the new 'Passion' (Varley Roberts) at St. Thomas's Church.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mendelssohn's 'Christus' and Stainer's 'Crucifixion' furnished scope for Easteride musical activities at St. John's Church, Rammoor, where Mr. J. C. V. Stacey has for a number of years done much for the cause of music in that pleasant suburb. A performance of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' at Wycliffe Congregational Church on the 6th ult., furnished another instance of the popularity of oratorios in church. At Ecclesfield on the 14th ult., the concert given by the Instrumental Society under Mr. Thomas Brameld proved how earnest and intelligent musical effort can do valuable work in rural districts—Mozart's 'Parisian' Symphony, Weber's 'Der Freischütz' Overture, and works of similar calibre, indicate the musical progress out Ecclesfield way.

On the 20th ult. the Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society gave a concert in the Montgomery Hall, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Rodgers. The programme included glees, madrigals, and part-songs by Nethercliff, Carnall, Mackenzie, Schumann ('Battle Song'), and Percy Pitt ('Sunset'). Lane-Wilson's song cycle 'Flora's Holiday' was sung by Miss Margaret Cooper, Miss Ada Freeman, Messrs. W. Burrows and A. Muscroft. Miss Dorothy Peck (pianoforte) and Mr. John Peck (violin) performed Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata. On the same evening a wind instrument Chamber Concert was given in the Assembly Rooms, Rotherham, under the direction of Mr. Duffell, when Beethoven's Quintet (Op. 16) for pianoforte and wind instruments, Pauer's Quintet (Op. 44), Duncan's Quintet (Op. 38), and a Quintet by Barthe (flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon) were performed.

The closing days of the month brought a pressure of musical fixtures. A 'Prout' programme, given in the Albert Hall by the Brincliffe Musical Society on the 21st ult., was one of the most interesting. The Professor conducted a long list of his compositions, chief among which were the Symphony (No. 3) in F major, Suite de Ballet (Op. 28), and the Triumphal March from 'Alfred.' The Pianoforte Quintet in G major, and a Romance in F major for pianoforte and violin (Professor Prout and Mr. J. H. Parkes) were also included in an excellent scheme. Miss Nellie Chisholm and Mr. J. Lycett were the vocalists.

Dr. Coward's 'King's Error,' by the Attercliffe Sunday School Union; 'Elijah,' by the Walkley Musical Society; Stanford's 'Voyage of Maeldune,' by the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society (conductor, Mr. F. Schollhammer); and the début of the St. Barnabas Choral Society (under the direction of Mr. C. Bruster) in Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants,' were all events which took place too late in the month for detailed reference in this letter.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society, under the skilled conductorship of Mr. S. Garner, produced on March 26 a new cantata by Mr. A. R. Gaul, Mus. Bac. (Cantab.), entitled 'The Prince of Peace.' The Victoria Hall was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music and the manner in which it was performed. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers, and Mr. A. R. Jackson presided at the organ. The opening section of the work proclaims the existence of the Almighty, but the usual prelude is dispensed with, avowedly from a deep sense of awe and reverence. After three strokes of the drum, two themes are announced standing respectively for 'Peace' and the 'Trinity Creed,' both of which weave themselves into the texture of the work. The Peace motif is melodious and suggestive, and the Creed theme consists of three notes of the diatonic ascending scale. The first section comprises baritone solos, with succeeding choruses representative of 'Jehovah,' 'The Word,' and 'The Spirit,' and closes with a soprano air of prophetic allusion. Following this, Jesus is depicted on the Mount, and the Divine Sermon is the subject of succeeding numbers. Then the choir have a chorus of reverential beauty, 'Never man spake like this man,' and a further number 'Lo! this is our God,' which in perfection of enunciation and nicety of expression showed the choir at a very high level indeed. The scene is now changed, and 'Jesus sitting by the sea-side' is a beautiful contralto solo, with an orchestral accompaniment designed to convey the impression of the ripple of a calm sea. The work proceeds with the parable of 'The Prodigal Son,' and when the Prodigal's distress is complete, an invitation to 'Return, O Wanderer' is dimly heard from an invisible quartet, and on his return and reception the chorus assert that 'They began to be merry.' A striking feature follows in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance, which in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation. The first part closes with a soul-stirring chorus 'Thou art the King of Glory.' 'The Good Shepherd' is the theme of the second part, introduced by a pastoral intermezzo, followed by a duet for soprano and contralto 'The Lord is my Shepherd,' which is one of the gems of the cantata. The following numbers, including the final chorus 'Praise and extol,' are musicianly and full of interest. Throughout, the singing was characterized by brilliant attack, perfect accuracy and complete control. The sopranos must be awarded the palm for a splendid night's work. The instrumental parts received an excellent rendering. The principals were Madame Sobrino, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. C. Saunders, and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, and all acquitted themselves admirably. The outstanding feature of the performance, however, was the superb choral singing, and the choir and conductor received a very high compliment from the composer, who came forward to acknowledge the plaudits of the audience.

The Stafford Choral Union, under the conductorship of Mr. Drury, gave a good performance of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus,' with orchestral accompaniment, on March 31. On Wednesday in Holy Week, the 8th ult., the choir of St. Mary's Collegiate Church, Stafford, gave an excellent rendering of Stainer's 'Crucifixion,' under the conductorship of Dr. E. W. Taylor, the organist and choirmaster of the church. Mr. A. Heath presided at the organ, which was supplemented by a string band.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

YORK.

The doings of the York Musical Society furnish one of the many phases of musical activity in the city which owe so much to the well-directed enthusiasm of Mr. Noble, the organist of the Cathedral. Though it was a work as hackneyed as 'Elijah' which was given on March 31, it afforded an exceedingly good illustration of what Mr. Noble can accomplish. His chorus is, of course, entirely amateur, his orchestra very largely so; but he has the indefinable power of communicating his enthusiasm to all who perform under his direction, and one is constantly possessed by the notion that they are playing or singing not only their best, but a great deal better than one has any reason to expect of them. The Elijah was Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, whose reading of the part is so highly individual and dramatic that to accompany him is no mere hum-drum task, and the difficulty was heightened since he was too unwell to appear at rehearsal. The closeness and sympathy with which he was accompanied was therefore all the more worthy of praise, and afforded abundant proof of Mr. Noble's practical musicianship. The materials at his command are generally speaking not equal to those available in the large manufacturing towns of the West Riding, so that it means much when one is able to style this performance a really brilliant one. The other principal parts were taken, in all cases very efficiently, by Miss Atherden, Miss Lakin and Mr. Saunders. It is a common complaint that English conductors, owing to their few chances of practice in orchestral music, show far less sympathy with and power over the band than the chorus, but Mr. Noble, who has had some experience with his 'York Symphony Orchestra,' seems able to make the most of both. The freedom and expressiveness of his conducting, the care with which he attends to every detail, and the presence of mind with which he wards off the chance of disaster, are the chief elements in his success. He has the limitations of his temperament, and one feels them most in music sombre or plaintive in character, for he is most at home in what demands briskness and vigour of expression; but he is so genuine a musician that objections to his interpretations can rarely, if ever, go beyond the expression of a personal feeling. He only wants the opportunity to go much farther in this difficult and important sphere of his many-sided labours. If I have dwelt at some length on this performance it is because the good work being done by Mr. Noble at York justifies a somewhat extended notice of a praiseworthy achievement.

The opening of the organ in York Minster is recorded on p. 302.

LEEDS.

The most interesting thing that has happened at Leeds is the introduction of Handel's Passion Music—the later one, written in 1716—at a Holy Week service at St. Chad's Church, Headingley, on the 7th ult. The abridged version was of course used, and the performance by the choir of the church, accompanied only by the organ, was interesting, and, in spite of awkward comparisons with the undoubtedly finer and more sincerely felt music of Bach, proved to be distinctly effective. The organist of St. Chad's, Mr. H. P. Richardson, was chiefly responsible for the performance, and it is worthy of note that to him we have owed during the past season two revivals of seldom-heard Handelian works, the former, Handel's 'St. Cecilia Ode,' having been recorded in the March number of THE MUSICAL TIMES. It is only fair to add that he has the encouragement of an erudite musician in the vicar, the Rev. W. H. Stables, who is a graduate in music as well as in arts. On the preceding evening the 'St. Matthew' Passion music was given at the Leeds Parish Church, where it has been made familiar by many years' use. Under the direction of Mr. Alfred Benton, who was at the organ, it was given with admirable effect, with a precision remarkable in the absence of a conductor, and with a genuine feeling of reverent earnestness quite in keeping with the music and its theme. On March 25 the Leeds Choral Union, also under Mr. Benton's direction, gave a performance of Parry's 'Song of Darkness and Light,' which since the last Leeds Festival has been as much in vogue as so beautiful and thoughtful a work deserves. As at the Festival, and at a recent performance at Halifax recorded last month, Miss Agnes Nicholls was the soloist, and gave intense pleasure by her highly sympathetic singing, while the powerful chorus, which has just been honoured by two invitations to sing in London, was heard to advantage.

On the 4th ult. the Philharmonic Society gave an extra concert, at which 'Elijah' was performed. Much of the interest lay in the fact that only local resources were 'tapped'; band, chorus, and principals being alike derived from the immediate district. The soloists were Mrs. James Wilson, Miss Enid Grimshaw, Mr. T. Coates, and Mr. H. Parker, a generally efficient quartet. The chorus was excellent, and the orchestra, though quite inadequate in numbers to balance so powerful a chorus, was otherwise more than equal to its work. Mr. H. A. Fricker conducted with capital spirit and good effect.

DEWSBURY.

Mr. Fricker also conducts the Dewsbury Choral Society, which gave on March 24, under his direction, a remarkably fine performance of the 'Triumphlied' of Brahms, a work that taxes the powers of the best choruses. It was sung with just the spirit of jubilation and the sustained power demanded by the music, and made a very marked effect. Beethoven's Second Symphony and Mr. Arthur Hervey's bright 'Youth' Overture were also included in a generally interesting programme.

At Harrogate, on March 27, the Choral Society gave an artistic performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' well conducted by Mr. C. L. Naylor, who gave a sympathetic reading of the beautiful music.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

October 1 is the competition day for the two Mendelssohn scholarships of 1,500 marks each: one for composition, the other for executive artists. At the same time the interest on the capital sum of 30,000 marks,—the gift of Herr Ernst von Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, and the bankers Robert and Franz von Mendelssohn—also certain accumulations of interest, will be divided. The scholarships and the interest grants will be bestowed on deserving pupils of training institutions throughout Germany subsidized by the State, irrespective of age, sex, religion and nationality.

The programme of the Ninth Symphony Concert included only two works: Beethoven's 'Pastoral' and Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony, admirable performances being given under the direction of Felix Weingartner. Up to now Berlin has not been favourable to Liszt the composer, but in addition to 'Faust' the 'Dante' Symphony has recently been given, while the B minor Sonata and the 'Dante Fantasie-Sonate' have also been heard, the former several times. It seems as if there were a reaction in Liszt's favour. A writer in the Allgemeine Musik Zeitung recalls the composer's prophecy, 'My time will come.'

COLOGNE.

Herr Steinbach commenced his duties as director of the Conservatorium on March 1, but owing to previous arrangements two Gürzenich concerts subsequent to that date were conducted by Felix Mottl and Richard Strauss respectively. At one of the two Richter concerts Dr. Elgar's Orchestral 'Variations' were performed with marked success.

GRENOBLE.

M. J. de Beylié, president of the executive committee for the centenary of Hector Berlioz, states that the scheme is not fully settled. Anyhow there will be the inauguration of the Berlioz statue, the work of the sculptor M. Urbain Basset, a native of this city, and performances of works by Berlioz on August 16 and 17. It has been further decided to publish an album containing special articles on the composer, his life and works, by distinguished musicians, musicographers and critics.

LILLE.

The municipal Grand-Théâtre was destroyed by fire on the 5th ult. The performance—the last of the season—ended about midnight, and within half-an-hour the building was enveloped in flames. There was no loss of life, but the director, M. Bourdette, is said to have sustained a loss of 60,000 francs for costumes and decorations hired by him and not insured. Among the ruins was found the broken bust of Lalo which was inaugurated last year.

MARSEILLES.

Beethoven's Nine Symphonies have been given here under the able direction of M. Viardot. The soloists in No. 9 were Mlles. Charlotte Lormont and Charlotte Melno and MM. Challet and Dantu of the Chevallard Concerts. Richard Strauss paid a visit here in March with his Berlin Orchestra, on which occasion the programme included two of his works: 'Aus Italien' and 'Tod und Verklärung.'

PARIS.

M. Gailhard, after a hearing of M. Vincent d'Indy's 'L'Etranger' at Brussels, has decided to give the work at the opera house next season. M. Ernst Reyer remained in Paris longer than he intended in the hopes of hearing Jean de Reszke in 'Sigurd.' The Fates however proved unpropitious, and as it was doubtful whether even under favourable circumstances the eminent tenor would be sufficiently recovered from his attack of influenza to appear in that opera at Easter, the veteran composer returned to his estate near Marseilles.

The Neue Zeitschrift für Musik in an article on the thirtieth anniversary of the foundation of the Colonne concerts states that at the 808 concerts which had been given up to that time, 267 composers were represented: 129 French, and 138 foreign. The following comparative list of performances is interesting:—Berlioz, 448; Beethoven, 374; Wagner, 366; Saint-Saëns, 338; Mendelssohn, 169; Massenet, 166; Schumann, 136; but Mozart only 108!

Eduard Grieg, who has been concert-touring, conducted the Colonne Concert at the Châtelet on the 10th ult. The programme included his Overture 'Autumn,' the Pianoforte Concerto (with M. Raoul Pugno as soloist), the 'Peer Gynt' suite, 'Vor der Klosterpforte' for soli, female chorus, and orchestra, and songs rendered by Madame Gulbranson.

VERSAILLES.

The body of Augusta Holmès has been moved to its last resting place in her father's vault. There was a service at the Saint-Louis church, Dr. Saint-Saëns presiding at the organ. The composer has bequeathed six portraits of herself to the Versailles Museum; three (in pencil, pastel, oil) by Huet; two (in pastel) by Foureau; and a large one, en pied, by Jacquot.

WEIMAR.

An interesting Bach festival was held at Weimar on the 6th ult. in the Stadtkirche to commemorate April 8, 1703, the day on which Bach entered upon his duties here as Hofmusicus. The programme commenced with the organ 'Passacaglia.' Professor Joachim played the Violin Concerto in A minor in a masterly manner. The Orchestral Suite in D major was performed by the Court Theatre band, under the direction of Capellmeister Krzyzanowsky, and choruses were also sung.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The following awards have been made: The Sterndale Bennett Prize and the Louisa Hopkins Memorial Prize to Rosamond Ley (of London); the Charles Mortimer Prize to Felix Swinstead (of London).

Obituary.

We regret to record the sudden death, on Easter Eve (the 11th ult.) of a musician well known to many of our readers—FREDERICK ALEXANDER MANN. He was the eldest son of a prominent musician of Norwich, Mr. Henry James Mann, and was born in that city, March 23, 1844. Very early in life he made for himself a reputation as a violinist, having been taught by his father, and so great was his ability that he was spoken of as a Norwich Paganini. He became a Cathedral chorister at ten years of age, under the famous Dr. Buck, and thenceforth gave his attention wholly to vocal work. When his voice broke he was accepted as an artful pupil by Dr. Buck, and assisted in the active work of the Cathedral. About 1865 he left Norwich to undertake the duties of organist, &c., of the parish church of Wisbech. He subsequently became organist of the parish church, Lowestoft; he threw his whole heart into the development of musical ability in that district, and led an extremely active life as a teacher, organist, and conductor, doing excellent work in all capacities. About fifteen years ago he accepted the position of director of the music at Dr. Stephenson's Home, Bonner Road, London, and it is quite impossible to over-estimate the importance and extent of his work in that splendid institution. He was beloved by all who knew him, particularly so by the members—past and present—of his own choir, and it must have been deeply gratifying to those he has left behind to witness the sincere sympathy and grief of the many loving friends who assembled around his coffin in the beautiful chapel he loved so much and in which he had laboured so long. It would be impossible to hear or to assist at a more impressive service than that of Thursday afternoon, April 16, and nothing more fitting could have been devised as the last token of respect to one who had worked so earnestly in the sacred cause of all that is good in music. The late Mr. F. A. Mann was a brother of Dr. Mann, organist of King's College, Cambridge.

The seventh Feis Ceoil, or Irish Musical Festival, will be held in Dublin on the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, and 23rd of this month, in the Antient Concert Rooms, and, by kind permission of the Senate, in the Royal University. Of the six previous Festivals, four have taken place in Dublin and two in Belfast. Amongst a wide assortment of competitions there is that for Commercial Choirs, amongst whose ranks 'sleeping partners or shareholders are not eligible to compete'; one for 'a full orchestra of not less than twenty-five players'; and several particularly interesting special competitions in National music, amongst which are playings on the small Irish harp, the pipes, &c.

The Lower Rhine Music Festival will be held this year at Aachen on the 31st inst., and the 1st and 2nd prox., under the direction of Professor Eberhard Schwickerath and Hofkapellmeister Felix Weingartner. The programmes include Beethoven's Mass in D and Seventh Symphony (first day), and Berlioz's 'Symphonie Fantastique' and 'Faust' (second day). For the last day of the Festival there is promised a miscellaneous selection e.g., Bach's Church Cantata 'O Light everlasting,' Liszt's 'Mazeppa' Symphony, Weingartner's 'Das Gefilde der Seligen,' &c.

Mr. William Pountney, who sang at the Birmingham Musical Festival in 1846 (when 'Elijah' was produced) and on every subsequent occasion (save one) since, has gained admittance into the chorus for this year's music-making. We understand that the examiner tried Mr. Pountney's bass voice from lower D to upper F and said it was most satisfactory. This length of service is in the nature of a record, and Mr. Pountney is to be heartily congratulated on the conservation of his vocal powers.

Mr. Cuthbert Hadden is writing the volume on 'Chopin' for Messrs. Dent's series of 'Master Musicians.' The book will include some personal reminiscences of the composer, contributed by an old pupil who also heard him play in Glasgow during his visit to Scotland.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARISED.

BASINGSTOKE.—An interesting lecture was given in the Schoolroom, Countess of Huntingdon's Connection, on the 21st ult. by Mr. W. H. Liddle, on 'Mozart and his works.' The choir sang the three choruses from 'King Thamos' under Mr. Liddle's direction. Excerpts from 'Figaro,' 'Don Juan,' and 'The Magic Flute,' were finely sung by Mr. P. Downsland Jones, and the duet Sonata in C was played by Messrs. J. E. C. and G. E. Liddle.

BECKENHAM.—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' received an excellent rendering at the hands of the Congregational Church Choir, in Crescent Road Hall, on March 25. Mr. J. W. Lewis conducted admirably, and had a responsive body of singers and instrumentalists under his control. Miss Edith Patching, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Frank Tebbutt, and Mr. Arthur Walenn were the soloists, and valuable assistance was rendered by Mrs. R. W. Rudd, Mrs. W. E. Harris, Mr. G. A. Seaton, and Mr. G. Cowen.

BISHOP'S STORTFORD.—On March 30, Mr. A. E. Hull read a paper on 'Form or design in music,' with musical illustrations contributed by Mrs. W. B. Gerish, Mr. T. A. Barrett, and a string quartet, of which the players were the Misses M. and K. Mardon, Mr. A. E. Hall, and Mr. D. A. Mardon.

BLACKBURN.—At a concert given by the St. Cecilia and Vocal Union in the Exchange Hall on the 2nd ult., the evening opened with an impressive rendering of Chopin's Funeral March in memory of the Society's late conductor, Mr. J. H. Rooks. Mr. T. Dyker Bird, who had been selected to fill the void thus created, conducted from an ordinary music-stand placed in the orchestra, the conductor's chair and desk proper being conspicuously vacant, and the audience, orchestra, and choir standing. This was followed by a very effective performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Meg Blane,' much to the enjoyment of the audience. The chorus themselves were delighted with the work, and their enthusiasm at rehearsal was unbounded. Miss Gertrude Lonsdale was the solo vocalist.

BOMBAY.—The Philharmonic Society gave a very successful concert in the Town Hall on March 31. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' was performed, the solo being well sung by Captain Kendall. The band of the Oxford Light Infantry came from Poona to assist. The chorus was very good, and under Mr. Faulkner's skilful and careful training an excellent result was achieved.

BRIGHTON.—On the Tuesday in Holy Week Dr. Varley Roberts's 'Passion' was sung at St. Michael's, Brighton, under the direction of Mr. E. Stephenson, organist and choirmaster of the church, and Weber's Mass in E flat formed part of the service music on Easter Day.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS.—The Athenæum Oratorio Choir gave a commendable performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on March 26. The principal soloists were the Hon. Mrs. Julian Clifford, Miss Marion Broom, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. John Browning. The chorus of 120 voices, which sang with admirable spirit, expression and attack, were well supported by an orchestra of thirty performers. Mr. A. Oliver Lusher, who conducted, is to be congratulated upon the great success attending the achievements of his forces.

CHELMSFORD.—The Musical Society gave the second concert of its twenty-first season in the Corn Exchange on March 31, before a large audience, when Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' were admirably rendered by a chorus of eighty voices and an orchestra of forty. The soloists were Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Grainger Kerr, Mr. Harold E. Wilde, and Mr. Mansell Lewis. Mr. G. H. Wilby was principal violinist and Miss Dixon accompanist. Mr. F. R. Frye conducted.

CHELTENHAM.—At All Saints' Church on March 22 a new cantata 'The Wedding Feast,' by Rev. George Gardner, vicar of the church, was performed. The scholarly and melodious work received a worthy interpretation from the chorus and orchestra. The soloists were Miss Alice Crawley, Miss Irene Rae, Mr. Grieve, and Mr. King. Mr. Grainge presided at the organ, and the composer conducted.

COVENTRY.—Performances of Dr. Basil Harwood's 'Inclina, Domine,' produced at the Gloucester Festival in 1898, and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' were given at Holy Trinity Church on March 26, under the direction of Mr. Percy Hughes. Miss Ethel Holmes (soprano soloist), Mrs. Herbert Hill (pianoforte), and Mr. C. H. Moody, of Ripon Cathedral, rendered efficient aid as organist.

EAST HAM.—Handel's 'Messiah' was given by the Vocal and Orchestral Society on the 10th ult. at the New Town Hall. The work received a very creditable rendering under the conductorship of Mr. F. W. Long. The principal vocalists were Miss Emily Davies, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Henry Turnpenny, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. Bernard Long was at the pianoforte, and Mr. T. Davies led the orchestra.

FROME.—Mr. T. Grant's twenty-fourth annual concert took place in the Market Hall on the 13th ult., when selections from Haydn's 'Creation' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' were admirably rendered by a chorus of one hundred, and a band of fifty performers. The soloists were Madame Ada Patterson, Miss Lily White, and Mr. H. Gardiner. Mr. T. Grant conducted.

GRAHAMSTOWN, CAPE COLONY.—Mrs. W. Deane (Miss Grace Batchelder) gave a lecture upon 'Schumann and his Pianoforte Works,' on March 12, before the members of the Grahamstown Athenæum. Mrs. Deane played as illustrations the 'Papillons' (Op. 2), 'Carnaval' (Op. 9), and the 'Etudes Symphoniques' (Op. 13).

GRAVESEND.—On March 25 the Orchestral Society gave a concert in the New Public Hall in aid of the Gravesend Hospital. Selections from Haydn, Beethoven, Schumann, &c., were given. Vocal solos were artistically rendered by Miss Winifred Marwood, Mrs. Firth, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. C. Burrows Moss accompanied, and Mr. Howard Moss conducted.

GRIMSBY.—An enjoyable musical service took place at the parish church on the 5th ult., when Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was sung by an augmented choir of seventy voices, accompanied by an orchestra. The choruses were given with precision, expression, and spirit, under the skilful conductorship of Mr. J. Forbes Carter. Miss S. E. Bennett and Miss Wyld were at the organ and pianoforte respectively.

GUERNSEY.—Very successful performances were given by the Guille-Allès Choral Association at their annual concerts on March 31 and the 1st ult. The programme included Verdi's 'Requiem,' of which a really excellent rendering was given, the chorus especially distinguishing itself in a manner that showed that they had made a most careful and earnest study of this difficult choral work. Bridge's 'The Flag of England' and the 'Messiah' completed the programmes, in both of which the chorus again sang well. The principal vocalists were Miss Ethel Lovegrove, Miss Bessie Grant, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Charles Copland. Mr. John David conducted.

HASTINGS.—On the 15th ult., the Hastings and St. Leonards 'St. Cecilia' Musical Society gave a highly satisfactory concert in the Public Hall, when Smart's 'The Bride of Dunkerron' was performed, with Miss Amy Sargent, Mr. Charles Ellison, and Mr. Harry Vidler as soloists. The chorus and orchestra, led by Mr. Val Marriott, numbered about 200 performers. Mr. Herman Brearley conducted with his usual ability.

LEIGHTON-BUZZARD.—On the 5th ult. Mendelssohn's 'Christus' was rendered in All Saints' Church by the choir, with orchestral accompaniment. Mr. C. R. Turner presided at the organ, and Mr. G. A. Hardesk conducted.

LEVEN.—Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" received a capital rendering by the Leven Musical Association, in the Town Hall, on the 2nd ult. The soloists were Miss Sara Maconochie, Madame Annie King, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Ballard Brown. Mr. James A. Crapper conducted; Miss Kirkby accompanied on the pianoforte and Mr. Rowland Hill presided at the organ. The singing of the chorus was excellent.

MARLBOROUGH.—The Marlborough Choral Society gave its annual concert on March 24, under the able conductorship of Mr. W. S. Bambridge, when Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Stanford's 'Last Post,' together with choruses from 'Acis and Galatea,' were excellently rendered by the band and chorus of one hundred performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Grainger Kerr (who was received with much enthusiasm), Mrs. H. R. N. Ellison, and Miss Edith Crick.

PERSHORE.—On Good Friday an excellent rendering of 'The Passion of our Lord' (Schütz) was given in Pershore Abbey by the Abbey Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Mason, organist and choirmaster. The soloists were Mr. W. Adams, Mr. F. Ball, of the Abbey Choir, and Mr. F. Lightowler, of Worcester Cathedral. The choruses were excellently given, being especially praiseworthy for balance of tone and unanimity of attack. The choralists—fifty in number—deserve all commendation for the standard of interpretative excellence they have maintained during the season.

REDHILL.—The eleventh annual symphony concert given by the Redhill Society of Instrumentalists took place on March 24 in the Market Hall. Works by Haydn, Chopin, Wagner, Tchaikovsky, and Parry were included in the programme, and received excellent interpretation under the baton of Mr. H. Graves, the honorary conductor. The vocalists were Miss Marie Narelle and Mr. W. F. L. Butcher, and two clever pianoforte solos were given by Miss Mabel Rutland.

RUTHIN.—The Ruthin Choral Society (band and chorus of 120 performers) gave a capital rendering of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus,' in the Town Hall, on the 16th ult. The artists included Miss Lillie Wormald, Miss Phillis Raymond, Mr. J. Furness Williams, and Mr. Charles James. Miss F. E. Elliott presided at the pianoforte. Mr. Horace Haselden led the orchestra, and the whole was under the conductorship of Mr. W. A. Lloyd, who is to be complimented for the institution of the Society and its admirable performances.

SANDWICH.—The Sandwich and District Choral Society brought their season to a close by two performances of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on the 2nd and 5th ult. at St. Mary's Church. The choruses were admirably sung, and the rendering of the music reflected nothing but the highest credit upon the conductor, the Rev. C. Dudley Lampen. The soloists were Miss Edith Markwell, Madame Ada Bell Kempton, Mr. Seth Hughes, and Mr. F. Aubrey Millward. The Society is to be congratulated on the excellent work it is doing to cultivate a taste for good music in this part of Kent.

SHORTLANDS (KENT).—A successful concert was given at the Bell Hotel on the 3rd ult. by the Shortlands Orchestral Society, with Mr. C. H. Venning as conductor. The programme included Overtures by Schubert, Rossini and Cherubini. Some very effective solos were contributed by Miss Katie Smith, Mr. Mandeno Jackson, and Mr. G. J. Penny (violin), interspersed with recitations by Madame A. Brunel. Miss May Butler and Miss Ethel Venning accompanied.

SMETHWICK.—The recently-formed Choral Society in connection with the Congregational Church gave their second sacred concert on March 30. The works performed were Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' Sullivan's 'Festival Te Deum,' and a selection from Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' An excellent rendering of each was given, the chorus, numbering sixty-five, singing with precision and due regard to expression under the conductorship of Mr. W. J. Peters. The solos in Sullivan's 'Te Deum' were sung by Miss Nellie Finch.

SOUTHPORT.—The Southport Orchestral Society gave their third subscription concert of the sixteenth season on the 3rd ult. to a crowded audience. The orchestra numbered seventy, and the following interesting programme was performed under the conductorship of Mr. R. H. Aldridge:—'Danse Nègre' from 'African Suite' (Coleridge-Taylor), Overture 'Cockaigne' (Elgar), Dream Music from 'Hänsel and Gretel' (Humperdinck), 'Nutcracker Suite' (Tchaikovsky), and two military marches, 'Pomp and Circumstance' (Elgar). Miss Grainger Kerr was the vocalist.

STOURBRIDGE.—The eighty-fourth concert of the Stourbridge Concert Society took place at the Town Hall on the 6th ult. The programme consisted of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' and the Violin Concerto and Symphony in C minor of Beethoven. The choruses in 'Minnehaha' were rendered with great feeling and expression, and the solos were well given by Miss May Melley and Mr. Sidney Stoddard. Miss Margaret Holloway gave an excellent performance of the Beethoven Concerto, and the band not only rendered valuable aid in all the accompaniments, but gave a capital performance of the Symphony. Mr. George Halford conducted with his well-known ability.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The Vocal Association, at their thirty-third annual oratorio concert on March 25, gave, in the Great Hall, a very good rendering of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' The chorus sang with precision and great expression; the orchestra, led by Mr. W. A. Easton, played with delicacy and refinement. The soloists were Miss Maggie Purvis, Miss Margaret Thomas, Mr. Henry Turnpenny, and Mr. Daniel Price. Mr. W. W. Starmer conducted.

WATCHET.—The Watchet and Dunster Choral Societies gave a very creditable performance of Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' at a concert in the Church Schools on the 15th ult. The soloists were Miss Jean Hunter and Mr. Sidney Cooksley. Miss Hole accompanied and Miss Ayres was at the harmonium. On the previous day the same work was given at Dunster with Mrs. Hancock as accompanist and Mr. F. Walton Evans at the harmonium. Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe ably conducted both performances.

WHALLEY RANGE, MANCHESTER.—Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was given with great success on the 5th ult. by the church choir. The solos were rendered with much feeling by Mr. W. L. Swancott and Mr. Cuthbert Allen, and the entire work was sung with true devotional feeling. Mr. W. A. Langstaffe presided at the organ.

WIRKSWORTH.—Very successful renderings of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' were given by the Wirksworth Choral Society in the Parish Church on March 26. The chorus, which was particularly good, consisted of sixty voices, and the soloists were Miss M. Hadfield, Miss Bowmer, Mr. C. W. Fredericks, and Mr. J. Coleman. Mr. Carl Ashover, the conductor, is to be congratulated upon this signal success, the concert being considered the best ever given by the Society. Mr. S. Neville Cox presided at the organ. The performance of the 'Holy City' (Gaul) was inadvertently assigned to the Wirksworth Choral Society in last month's issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. It was given by the Wirksworth Musical Union.

WORTHING.—The West Tarring Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' together with a miscellaneous second part, in the Literary Institute, on the 1st ult. The choir sang with spirit and good attack, and the orchestra, capably led by Mr. C. Mansfield, was efficient. The solo vocalists were Miss Bessie Woode, Mrs. Bernard Lees, and Mr. Clifford Hunnybun. Mr. W. Binstead conducted.

Answers to Correspondents.

CHALUMEAU.—The full score of Bach's church cantata 'Christ lag in Todesbanden' is published at 30s. net. It is scored for strings and continuo, but in some of the choral portions brass instruments double the vocal parts. This 'grandiose work,' to adopt Spitta's designation, was most probably composed by Bach for the first day of Easter, 1724, during the early years of his Leipzig period. See Spitta's 'Life of Bach,' English edition, vol. ii., 392-397, 688; vol. iii., 105.

A. E. P.—(1) For sacred songs suitable for a deep contralto voice with accompaniment of American organ, try the following:—'O Lord, thou hast searched me out' (Sterndale Bennett), 'Return unto thy rest' (Pughe-Evans), 'Far from my heavenly home,' in C minor (A. A. Needham), 'Thou wilt remember us,' key C (W. Coenen), 'Nearer my God, to Thee,' key E flat (S. Adams), 'Rock of Ages' (S. Adams). (2) Music of all kinds can be borrowed from Novello's Library.

D. S. E.—(1) The A sharp must be struck again, but with less force than on the first occasion: similarly, the G sharp in the following bar. (2) Fingered and phrased editions of Bach's '48' are those edited by Czerny, Kroll, Rubhardt, Klindworth, Riemann, and Busoni (of the last-named edition, Part I. only has at present been issued). (3) Both qualifications (L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.) are valuable, therefore why not qualify for both?

W. G. B.—Chappell, in Aldis Wright's Clarendon Press Series of Shakespeare's 'Henry V.,' states 'that when a "consort of viols" was imperfect, i.e., if one of the players was absent, and an instrument of another kind, e.g., a flute, was substituted, the music was then said to be "broken." There are, however, other theories as to the meaning of the term 'broken music.' See 'Shakespeare and Music,' by Edward W. Naylor (Dent).

ST. CECILIA.—(1) Quaver = 60 is rather slow for Handel's 'What though I trace' ('Solomon'): about 72 is a more comfortable speed. (2) The Appendix to White's 'Double Bass Primer' (Novello) treats of the four-stringed Double Bass. (3) Apply to the Secretary of the Tonic Sol-fa College, 27, Finsbury Square, E.C. A summer term of study, organized by the College, will be held at Forest Gate daily from July 13 until August 7.

IXION.—Mr. Whitehead, of the Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, issues a periodical list of concerts given in London; a list, though not quite so complete, is published by the manager of Queen's Hall. We could not possibly undertake to compile such a list for these columns, not only by reason of space, but of the difficulty of selection in regard to principal concerts.

H. B.—(1) Otto Jahn, in his 'Life of Mozart,' gives seventeen sonatas, one fantasia and fugue, and three fantasias for the pianoforte, composed by Mozart. This may be accepted as authentic. The other sonatas you mention may be of the doubtful character. (2) Liszt wrote one pianoforte sonata, in B minor. See Shedlock's informing book 'The Pianoforte Sonata (Methuen).

J. H.—It is difficult to suggest a course of study for sight-singing that is to be pursued without a teacher. The 'Graduated Exercises' (Staff Notation) in Book 91 of Novello's School Songs, price 6d., provide instruction and exercises that will probably help you.

G. M. P.—The story of 'Bow-bells merrily sounding "Turn again Whittington"' has no other origin than a flourish of fancy created by some poetical brain. There is no accounting for what is done in the pantomime, to keep up or destroy old traditions of the Dick Whittington and his cat type.

H. G. C.—In regard to the rendering of recitatives, in phrases ending with two or more reiterated notes, it has long been the custom to sing the first as an appoggiatura—a note higher than the rest. It may be regarded as more or less a rhetorical effect, and therefore justified, apart from use and wont.

W. M.—The playing of the oboe is not injurious to the lungs, and it has not a tendency to cause consumption. On the contrary, it is quite a healthy occupation, provided however that you use a good instrument, and are carefully instructed from the beginning as to the proper management of the breath in playing it.

'OUT OF TUNE.'—You should join a sight-singing class in which the mental effects of the tonic sol-fa syllables are inculcated. As you are near a town in which music is cultivated, you ought not to experience any difficulty in getting the help we suggest.

MUSIC TEACHER.—There is a certain vagueness in your inquiry: 'Where can I get the photos, life-size—i.e., taken off by the bust of Beethoven and others?' Photos are sometimes taken off by thieves, but not by busts. That is the best we can do for you.

M. C. K.—The equipment of a good singer consists of the following: a voice, poetic feeling, good health, simple living, and brains. Appearances count for something, and if you are a tenor and grow a beard, you might find it worth while to dispense with that hirsute ornament.

C. A. G.—We do not think there are any Scholarships combining tuition with maintenance at the Royal Academy of Music, but the Secretary of that Institution will give you all particulars upon application.

J. R.—Bach's Chorales should be played slowly and, of course, with pauses at the pause signs. It would be a study in monotony to play all the 'Variations' with the same stops—i.e., the organ stops, not the pause stops.

M. D.—'The three premier tenors—who are they?' you ask. We dare not say, even if we knew; but this may, however, be said: Premier tenors are at a premium.

SOLO.—The only English official standard of pitch is that of the War Office for the military bands. This stands at A = 451.9.

ATHRAW.—The songs, duets, &c., in the School Music Series would be just the material for your purpose. The salary matter is beyond our ken.

E. S.—D sharp.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING
600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION.

In his preface to the revised edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music issued in 1898, the author was indebted to the kindness of Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A., Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc., E. J. Chadfield, Esq., and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A., for the use of the Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper for candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors. In the 1901 edition he was, through the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles, enabled to include the Mus. Doc. Papers of the Victoria University, and now, with the issue of the fifth edition of the work, he again desires to express his most sincere obligations to E. J. Chadfield, Esq., for permission to use a selection of the papers of the revised scheme of Local Examination of the Incorporated Society of Musicians; to F. W. Renaut, Esq., for the use of the new paper on Form and Pupil Treatment required of all candidates for the L.R.A.M. Diploma in Pianoforte Playing; to Dr. E. H. Turpin for the use of the new Rudiments of Music paper, and those set on the Art of Teaching for the Higher Theoretical and Practical Examinations of Trinity College (London); and to Dr. H. Frank Heath for permission to give some information regarding the new University of London Examination Scheme.

THE MUSIC STUDENT'S MANUSCRIPT NOTE BOOK

AND

PRACTICE REGISTER

ARRANGED BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

PREFACE.

This book is intended to meet the convenience of Teachers who wish to record clearly for a pupil's guidance the work to be prepared for each lesson or a series. The column headed "Time" is added for the purpose of indicating the number of minutes to be given to the daily practice of each separate subject. (This column is for the Teacher to fill up.)

A few pages of music paper have been inserted for the purpose of writing out turns, trills, &c., and blank pages have been left at the end on which it is suggested that a list of pieces studied should be kept or other memoranda made. The book will be found suitable for students of any instrument.

Price Sixpence.

Demy 8vo, Cloth, Gilt, 456 pages. Price 5s.

HYMN TUNES

AND

(276)

COMPOSED BY

REV. J. B. DYKES, MUS. DOC.

COLLECTED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

INCLUDING

MANY HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

The Rev. J. B. Dykes was well known to most people as a writer of beautiful hymn-tunes, but it will come as a surprise to some to find that he had written such a large number as this volume contains.

On looking through the book one is struck by the many tunes that are known and loved by all religious-minded persons—tunes so successfully wedded to the words, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get on without them. . . . They are "on the lips of thousands," and are associated with the most solemn moments of life. But because Dr. Dykes was happy in expressing emotions in a way that was intelligible to the masses, we must not overlook the real difficulty and merit of discovering a musical way to the hearts of men—for not every great composer has been successful with hymn-tunes.

The world is richer for Dr. Dykes's music, and his memory deserves to be loved and honoured by all those who, like himself, strive to follow in the footsteps of the Divine Master.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

THE MUSICAL TIMES is the oldest English journal devoted to music and musicians; moreover, its existence has exceeded that of any other musical journal issued, or that has ever been issued, in this country. Founded in the year 1844, it first appeared in the form of a modest sheet of eight pages; but in the intervening fifty-eight years it has, like Topsy, "grewed," and every issue now consists of seventy-two pages.

Quantity, however, is not the summum bonum of a musical journal—quality should occupy the first place. If the quality test can be put to the proof by mentioning the names of contributors, THE MUSICAL TIMES has no reason to fear the result. The following are some of the writers during recent years:—

C. A. Barry, Joseph Bennett, Vernon Blackburn, Rev. Francis L. Cohen, Frederick Corder, Henry Coward, F. H. Cowen, W. H. Cummings, W. H. Hadow, Edward Heron-Allen, A. J. Hipkins, Arthur Johnstone, A. Kalisch, H. E. Krehbiel, Robin Legge, Otto Lessmann, Charles Maclean, J. A. Fuller Maitland, W. G. McNaught, E. Mandyczewski, F. Niecks, Ebenezer Prout, W. Barclay Squire, J. S. Shedlock, J. F. R. Stainer, Franklin Taylor, Herbert Thompson and F. Gilbert Webb.

Biography has been made a special feature during the past five years. Upwards of fifty biographical sketches, with special supplement portraits, have appeared since July, 1897. These articles have been received with much favour both at home and abroad, and in Britain beyond the seas. English and foreign musicians of eminence, contemporary and bygone, have been included in this large gallery of MUSICAL TIMES Biographical Sketches: the subjoined list of names speaks for itself.

Illustrations have become an important and almost indispensable adjunct of present-day periodicals. This much appreciated feature has of late been considerably developed in the pages of THE MUSICAL TIMES. A series of articles on English Cathedral and College Chapels has furnished scope for the pictorial embellishment of the descriptive matter relating to these interesting subjects. This Cathedral series will be continued, and also the articles on important musical libraries, public and private.

The survey under the heading Church and Organ Music has been greatly extended. The aim has been to provide matter that shall be both interesting and of practical helpfulness to those who officiate in "Quires and places where they sing" and play.

The old-established characteristics of THE MUSICAL TIMES have been brought up to date. The "Occasional Notes," or leaderettes—as they are sometimes fancifully termed—cover a wide range of subjects. The monthly letters of such distinguished writers as Mr. H. E. Krehbiel, of New York, and Dr. Eusebius Mandyczewski, of Vienna, need no commendation; and the periodical records of music-makings in various centres of musical activity are supplied by the leading writers on music in the Provinces. A somewhat new feature, and one that is steadily growing in usefulness, is the section headed "Answers to Correspondents." No pains will be spared in furnishing satisfactory replies to the questions asked, even though the interrogations be, as they often are, posers.

Reference may be made to the music—anthems or part-songs—appearing month by month, and to other well-known features of this old-established journal. THE MUSICAL TIMES has a large circle of friends and well-wishers in various parts of the world; and the many gratifying tokens of appreciation that are constantly being received, not only by letter but by frequent quotation in the Press, act as a stimulus to the Editor to increase the brightness of its pages and to make the paper more acceptable in the future even than in the past.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY ALFRED R. GAUL.

NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE SENTINEL.

In the presence of a large and enthusiastic audience the cantata came to a very satisfactory first hearing at Hanley, on March 26, at the hands of the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society. The chorus and band (conducted by Mr. James Garner) numbered 350. Mr. Gaul was present, and as he took his seat in the balcony was loudly applauded. The principals were Madame Sobrino (soprano), Miss Edna Thornton (contralto), Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Sfrangon Davies.

The work made a distinct impression from the earliest numbers, the general excellence of design and unity of purpose which characterizes the whole being very noteworthy. Mr. Gaul has in this production provided choral societies with a cantata which, while being within the power of ordinary choral societies, will be worth the notice of the largest musical organizations.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

The work is in two parts. The first section of the first part, entitled "Jehovah," sets forth the existence of the Great First Cause, the composer plunging at once into the midst of things without prelude, for the reason that no prelude could adequately shadow the Majesty of God. Three soft strokes of the drum compel attention, and then the Peace theme, a graceful, sympathetic melody of two bars. Next comes the Trinity Creed theme, three notes of the diatonic ascending scale. Both these themes are continually repeated throughout, giving a sense of unity, while they make the needful allusion to the prevailing spirit of the work, the golden cord that binds the many movements into one. We begin with a baritone solo, "Before the mountains were brought forth," followed by a chorale-like chorus, "We all believe." Section 2, "The Word," also begins with the baritone, "In the beginning was the Word," which is again followed by a chorus, "And we believe in Jesus Christ." Section 3, "The Spirit," once more presents the baritone followed by a chorus, and then comes a soprano air, "God, Who at sundry times." Section 4, "On the Mountain," begins with a contralto solo, "Jesus, seeing the multitude," after which the tenor sings "Blessed are the Peacemakers," which is followed by an unaccompanied quartet, "His word of Peace."

From this point interest constantly deepens; the well-known texts are music in themselves, and Mr. Gaul has set them with striking reverence and beauty—"Have no anxious thought," "Consider the lilies," "Never man spake like this Man," "Lo! this is our God," and others. Presently the rippling of the orchestra tells us we are at the seaside. Jesus is sitting there speaking parables. The Prodigal Son is before us: the story is given; the unaccompanied quartet, "Return, O Wanderer!" is sung by an invisible quartet. The Prodigal returns, his family make merry; The Elder Son, returning from the field, hears music and dancing. This gives Mr. Gaul opportunity for one of the most piquant and original things he has ever written, a quaint and sparkling intermezzo in the form of an Eastern Dance. A number of beautiful vocal movements follow, and the first part ends with a psalm of praise, "Thou art the King of Glory," a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead.

Part 2 begins with the idea of "The Good Shepherd," and the second intermezzo, a Pastorale, is in order. The "Shepherd" idea is treated at length with great variety and with never-failing interest. "Praise the Lord, all ye Gentiles," for an unaccompanied double choir, presents a fine chance for a good chorus. More favourite texts follow, set as solo, quartet, or chorus: "Hosanna to the Son of David," "Come unto Him," "Lord, what is man?" "Man is like a thing of naught," a mournful mood soon relieved by cheerful texts: "Yet hath the Lord been mindful," "When all Thy mercies," and "Lo! I am with you always." The cantata, which lasts about ninety minutes, concludes with a magnificent chorus, in which good choirs will surely revel: "Praise and extol." No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's "The Holy City," we shall be surprised. Mr. Gaul was engaged on this, his latest work, for about three years, and we believe that all who hear it will agree that the time was very profitably spent.

It may be said without any manner of reservation whatever that the expectation that it would prove a work in every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer, has been amply fulfilled. "The Prince of Peace" is predestined to a successful career because it possesses in generous measure all the elements which together go to ensure pleasure to the singers and gratification to the listeners. From the very outset the work attracted to itself the closest attention, and that interest never slackened. The work is remarkable for its unity of design, and it will assuredly be recognised that in "The Prince of Peace" Mr. Gaul has provided a cantata which will be worthy the study of choral societies of every grade.

After the chorus "Thou art the King of Glory," cries were made for the composer, and Mr. Gaul from his place of vantage bowed his acknowledgments. . . . "Praise and extol," with which the cantata is brought to a triumphal close, was fine in the extreme.

At the end there were loud calls for Mr. Gaul, and that gentleman was kept bowing his acknowledgments for several seconds.
